By the last of August, the first two structures were well advanced in construction and Mr. Snyder had begun upon his foundation. From then on the building progressed favorably and projectors were already anticipating occupancy of their fine and costly store rooms when the work was practically undone by an untoward disaster.

On the night of Oct. 28, a sudden, violent wind storm, coming up from the southwest, tore its way through the town and rushed with irresistible force against the incomplete block. The middle walls of Ensley's building were shattered and the Odd Fellows' Hall, whose walls were ready for the roof, was swept down with thunderous crash, piling brick, timbers, lumber and mouldings in chaotic mass and demolishing a portion of the church standing close below. The church was badly wrecked, as its entire west side was forced in by the momentum of the falling walls, leaving unbroken neither window, shutter nor sash.

The lodge of Odd Fellows had massed in their building all of their resources and the wreck left them worse than bankrupt, causing return of charter and disbandment of lodge.

Undismayed, Messrs. Ensley and Snyder began to clear away the debris, and resuming the work of construction, by the middle of November, the buildings again neared completion.

The Town Board in March ordered a re-survey of the older portion of Auburn to determine the "exact lines" in disputed cases. To locate the exact lines has ever proved a difficult task, since each survey varied from all others and involved the question in ever growing complexity and vexation. The surveyor, George Hicks, having temporarily removed from the county, his place was filled by Henry C. Peterson, appointed to act in his place until a successor was elected. It was proposed to employ Mr. Peterson to make the re-survey of the town; but strenuous opposition of citizens defeated the measure. Inspection of records shows no especially notable proceedings by the Town Board. Ordinances there were, dealing with the familiar subject of planking sidewalks and, in default, notices were served upon sundry lot owners to attend to this duty within thirty days under penalty of advertising, selling and having the work done and all costs charged against the property.

Some doubt having existed whether such arbitrary action was legal, there were those who allowed the sale to take place, contested taxation of costs, carried the case to the higher court and in losing, were mulcted with heavy additional judgment in favor of the town. Thus dearly the matter was decided and thereafter notices of this character have been respected and money and feelings saved.

At the annual May election, the republican ticket was successful by a close vote. There were 202 ballots cast and through indifference 40 electors did not go to the polls. This was an increase of the voting population since the previous election of 56 persons.

It may be said that in popular recognition of ex-soldiers, the party had nominated and elected a soldier's ticket, since of the new trustees, all but Wm. A. Lowrey were of that most deserving element of the population. Those veterans now civil officials, were Messrs. Beugnot, Porter, McKay and Altenberg. A. Robbins was chosen clerk, Murray C. Markle, a new arrival, was elected town marshal, J. Abright, another ex-soldier, became treasurer and W. Griswold, assessor.

The municipal taxes were collected on commission by the marshal as his perquisite in lieu of salary and this troublesome system was long continued. But eventfully all taxes were placed by the county auditor upon his duplicate and, semi-annually, upon warrants on the county treasurer, the corporation and school treasurers of the town receive the sums by him collected.

As a singular instance in Auburn's history of the power of public opinion to rule even in an obnoxious way, and as a vivid contrast to the more æsthetic spirit now prevalent, the townspeople in 1872, passing up the sidewalk west side of Main street, saw with seeming apathy, all along the gutter, hog wallows and mud holes caused by hitching horses, and from the semi-liquid contents there exhaled when disturbed an intolerable stench, and an ordinance allowed swine the freedom of the streets from Oct. 1, 1872 to April 1, 1873.

In 1872, few wells were sunk far beneath the surface and dry weather made water scarce. Benjamin Williams and Robert McDougal were engaged in putting down drive wells which, though crude in material and shallow of depth contrasted with the present, were a great advance on dug wells in usefulness and simplicity.

Water supply was abundant through these wells and the water was thought pure; comparatively, it was, but later analysis has shown its unfitness for use. Williams & McDougal in the interests of the public at large, sank a drive well by the curb west of the court house, where the present town pump is located, and put down many wells in the town. Great improvements have been made in methods, casings, filters and depths of piping.

In 1887, a demand was made upon every owner of a drive well for a royalty of $10. T. H. Sprott, the Auburn agent, collected from many, and much irritation was felt and expressed in consequence. There seemed no escape from payment and most had intended compliance with the exaction when the welcome news was promulgated that the courts had decided an appealed case adverse to royalties. Payments immediately ceased, but none of the money was ever refunded.

Various parties, including W. S. Purdy & Son and Myers & Pearce have done the community essential service as well men. Deep wells resulting in fountains of water unlimited in supply and unexcelled in quality, are becoming the rule.

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Indianapolis Bank Wreckers Under Arrest—Bird Eye, Ind., Wiped Out by Fire—Whitecapper Goes to Prison—Killed by an Electric Current—Banks Resume.

UNDER ARREST.

The Wreckers of the Indianapolis National Bank.

Indianapolis special: At 6 o'clock Tuesday night Deputy United States Marshal Foley started out with a drag net after the wreckers of the Indianapolis National Bank and by 7 o'clock he had landed Theodore P. Haughey, President of the bank; Schuyler C. Haughey, his son, President of the Indianapolis Glue Works and Indianapolis Curled Hair Works, to which two concerns and their employes and officers the bank advanced $162,000; Francis B. Coffin, President of the Indianapolis Cabinet Works, to which concern directly or indirectly the bank advanced $357,000; Percival B. Coffin, Secretary of the Cabinet Works, and Albert S Reed, Treasurer of the same. The affidavits upon which the warrants were issued were sworn to by Receiver Hawkins, of the defunct bank. Theodore P. Haughey is charged with embezzlement and knowingly misapplying funds of the bank in advancing money upon worthless paper. All the rest are charged with embezzlement and aiding and abetting in the misapplication of funds. They were taken at once before United States Commissioner Van Buren, where they gave bond and their hearing was set for August 28. The bond of each was placed at $5,000 and the prisoners had no trouble in getting sureties. Each of them except Reed refused to talk, declaring that the matter was now in the hands of their attorneys. Reed declared that all the money the cabinet works had gotten had been expended honestly in extending its business.

Receiver Hawkins declares that the prosecutions would be pushed to the utmost, but was inclined to rather exonerate E. E. Rexford, the cashier, who signed the false statement of July 12. Rexford, he said, was raised in the bank and simply obeyed without question Haughey's request to sign the statement.

French Elections.

Paris special: It is now known that reballots have to be taken in 155 districts. The results of these is undoubtedly favorable to the Republicans, whose gains now reach sixty-three. At the last general election the Boulangists returned thirty-five members. The defeat of the Royalists is causing significant comment. It is predicted that it means the extinction of that party.

Thompson Need Not Pay.

Postmaster P. Thompson returns to Indianapolis relieved of a burden. The Treasury officials say that the Indianapolis postmaster will not lose the $3,500 deposited in the Indianapolis National Bank, because he was directed to deposit the funds there, and as postmaster was a disbursing officer of the Government for the Indianapolis postoffice. The losses, if any, will be the Government's.

Killed by an Electric Current.

Richard Hantzch, lineman in the employ of the Telephone and Lighting Company, Eau Claire, Wis., while at the top of a pole received a full incandescent current. With a cry he fell and hung by one foot to the wires, apparently a corpse. Two fellow workmen ran up the pole and tried to lower him with a rope, but he fell, striking on the curbstone. Life was extinct.

Will Shut Down.

Orders have been issued to shut down the Edgar Thompson Steel Works of the Carnegie Steel Co., at Braddocks, Pa., owing to a lack of orders. Two thousand men will be thrown out of work. This is the first time in the history of the plant that it has shut down from this cause.

Killed By a Base Ball.

While playing base ball at Chicago, Peter Highland was struck on the back of the neck by a ball from the hands of the pitcher, and almost instantly killed. His neck was broken and he died without uttering a word. Edward J. Carter, the pitcher, who threw the ball, was arrested.

Whitecapper Goes to Prison.

The jury in the case of the State vs. William Highfield, on trial at Jasper, Ind., for White Capping, returned a verdict of guilty, fixing the punishment at two years in prison and a fine of $10. Highfield had brutally whipped William Davis and wife.

Banks Resume.

The Citizens National bank, Attica, Ind.; Union National bank, Denver, Col.; Peoples' National bank, Denver, Col., have been permitted to re-open for business.

Brigade Reunion.

The 5th brigade, Gen. McCook's division, viz: the 29th and 30th Indiana, 77th Pennsylvania, 34th and 79th Illinois regiments will hold a brigade reunion at Indianapolis, Wednesday, September 6.

Town Burned Out.

Three-fourths of Bird Eye, Crawford County, Ind., was wiped out by fire. All the business part of the town is gone.

R. G. Dunn & Co.'s Weekly Review.

Business is trying to go ahead without waiting for news from Washington. The imported gold of $9,000,000 or more during the week does not go to the right spot, but the people are creating a home-made currency for themselves by using certified checks in payment and settling local accounts and purchasing grain and cotton. Little money comes back as yet from timid holders and the paralysis of exchange is nearly as complete as ever, but that very fact pushes each section and city into relying more on itself and less on the Government and Wall street. Resumptions are now becoming somewhat frequent and in the shrinkage of production men see evidence that the demand must soon overtake the supply.

LABOR RIOT.

Unemployed Men in New York Cause a Vast Amount of Trouble.

New York special: The unrest and unemployed in this city has burst its bounds, and a mob has possessed themselves of property to which they had been forbidden entrance by the owners. A crowd of more than 5,000 men attacked Walhalla Hall, 48, 50, and 52 Orchard street, because admittance was denied them. They smashed the plate glass windows to atoms, forced in doors which had been turned against them, and forcibly took possession of the place. Several persons were cut by flying glass.

Word of the coming of the unemployed reached the Walhalla Hall proprietor, a man named Fliegman. His sons and daughters first barred the door and then demanded through the keyhole to know what the crowd wanted. The reply came that they wanted to hold a meeting in the hall and had no money to pay for it. They were told they could not have it. Instantly there was a crash of breaking glass. Fliegman's daughter, a young girl of 18 years, tried to get in front of the crowd as it swept in, but she was thrown aside. The men swept chairs and tables aside in their eagerness to hold a meeting, and they had just about settled down to business when word of the affair was sent to the Eldredge street police. The sergeant in charge at once called out a reserve section and fourteen roundsmen proceeded to clear the hall. The speaker was arrested and two other arrests were made. The howling mob followed the officers and their prisoners to the door of the station, but the prisoners were locked up.

The prisoners were arraigned before Justice Voorhees, but Manager Fliegman refused to make any complaint. He said the men would molest him if he pressed a complaint and he preferred standing the damage to losing their custom, and he was afraid of being killed. Justice Voorhees then discharged the prisoners, but took occasion to denounce Manager Fleigman for his cowardice.

While this was enacted in the Essex Market Court the police swept down upon the hall and many bruised and bloody heads resulted from the encounter and a rough and tumble fight took place. The policemen used their clubs freely, dispersing the men in all directions.

AN OHIO TRAGEDY.

A Family Feud Breaks Out With Fatal Consequences—Two Men Will Die.

Tiffin (Ohio) special: The village of Bascom, five miles west of this city, was the scene of a bloody riot between the Flack and Osterholt families recently, in which the Flacks were the aggressors. The trouble will result in the death of Fred Osterholt and probably that of his brother Perry. The family feud started thirty years ago, when Peter Osterholt, now eighty-three years old, stabbed and almost killed George Flack, grandfather of James and Lloyd Flack, the principal assailants in the recent tragedy. The two Flacks accompanied by their father and Charles Flack a cousin, who is a justice of the peace for Hopewell Township, went to the Osterholt home, the two boys bent on having revenge for the assault made that morning on their father, and the latter professedly to preserve the peace. The Flack boys then burst into the Osterholt residence, breaking open five doors in order to reach Fred Osterholt, whom they followed into an upstairs chamber and beat almost to death with a club. Perry Osterholt was struck in the head with a large stone thrown by Lloyd Flack, and will die from the effects of the injury. Old Man Osterholt and two married sons living near by, were also horribly beaten and cut up with some sharpened instrument. The two Flack boys were also badly carved with a razor in the hands of Fred Osterholt.

Riots in France.

Paris special: The riots at Angues-Mortes, in the Department of Gard, had its origin in a dispute between workingmen regarding wages. Some of the men, Frenchmen and Italians, became involved in a fight over the question, and in a very short time a general riot was precipitated by the action of the other salt workers, who hastened to the assistance of their respective countrymen.

At least fifty were killed and one hundred and fifty wounded in the fight. The French, numbering 500, carried every kind of weapons from pick-axes and bludgeons to firearms. There was a frightful hand-to-hand fight in the streets. Afterwards 500 Italians barricaded themselves on a farm. They were besieged forthwith by the French and a battle followed. Whenever an Italian escaped he was hunted like a rat to his death.

Seventeen People Drowned.

Dublin special: A fatal accident occurred to a party of merrymakers in Western Ireland. An excursion party left Kilkee, in the southwestern part of County Claire, intending to cross the river Shannon, which in that vicinity is quite wide, forming what is known as Carrigoholt Bay. When the party were a considerable distance from the shore the boat capsized and everybody on board of her were thrown into the water. The accident was witnessed from the shore and several boats put out to the rescue. Other boats in the bay bore down on the capsized boat, but before any of the rescuing parties could get to the place where the overturned boat was lying, seventeen of the exursionists had been drowned.

Train Wreckers' Plans Foiled.

Erie (Pa.) special: An attempt to wreck the Philadelphia and Erie Express, east-bound, was foiled by a freight crew. The track on Five-Mile Curve, in a secluded spot, was obstructed with chains and pins. The freight crew, having discovered the wreckers, notified Officers Higgins and Watson, who, as they closed in on the train-wreckers, were fired upon by the latter. Watson had his clothes pierced by two bullets and lost his man, but Higgins captured the other wrecker after a desperate battle. The wrecker is a man of 30; gave his name as Edward Moore, a shoe-maker, and who, in addition to being heavily armed, had a burglar's kit with him.

Shipwrecked Crew Taken Off an Island.

London special: The American ship Highlander, which passed the Lizard the other day, signaled, "Have crew Bowdon." The Bowdon was a British ship commanded by Captain Law. She was one of the five vessels that in March last started to race from San Francisco to Queenstown. Four of the contestants arrived safely, but the Bowdon, on April 27, was totally wrecked on Ono Island, one of the Friendly Group.

Wants to Fight.

Panama special: There is a popular clamor in Equador for a declaration of war against Peru to take revenge for atrocities said to have been committed by Peruvians during the dispute over the boundary and in violation of the status quo. The Peruvian Consul here officially denied the rumor that Peru would be unable to respond to a challenge to fight on account of troubles at home.

The McDonald Will.

Indianapolis special: The appeal of the McDonald will case to the Supreme Court has been filed in the office of the Clerk. It bears the title of Josephine F. McDonald (widow of the late Senator McDonald) and others, and is appealed from the Hamilton Circuit Court. The transcript fills 1,958 type-written pages, and is one of the largest documents ever filed in the Supreme Court of Indiana. There are thirteen errors assigned on which the appeal is based, the first being that the Court erred in refusing to vacate the order made on motion of appellees requiring appellant, Josephine McDonald, to submit to a statutory examination under oath before trial.

A Society of Tramps.

By the arrest at Logansport, Ind., on suspicion, of Jacob Baney, a Chicago tramp, the Logansport police discovered the existence of a secret organization for thieves and pickpockets, which will interest the authorities of Western cities. Papers with instructions in cypher were found on Baney's person, which shows that the organization has headquarters in Chicago, where all members are required to report as to the best fields for operations, giving the names of all persons likely to keep sums of money or have it about them at stated times, and especially naming persons who hoard money and the chances for approaching them.

A Lynching.

Charles Watson, the negro who cut the throat of little Sam Keith, a 10-year-old boy, was lynched by a mob of about 1,500 citizens of Morganfield and Uniontown, Ky. The hanging occurred in Taylor's woods, about a mile from Morganfield, Ky. Young Keith was at the Uniontown fair selling watermelons. Toward evening Watson succeeded in coaxing Keith into a field near the fair grounds. When out of sight of the people Watson cut the boy's throat in a fearful manner, fatally wounding him, and then robbed him of $4.

The Troops Fired.

A telegram reached Piedmas Negras, Texas, that Federal troops ran onto a body of armed men, near Zaragosa, and hailed them. Upon their failing to respond the troops fired, killing three and wounding several others. It is also reported some twenty prisoners were taken, together with considerable arms and ammunition. The party proved to be Cardenas' men.

German Mine Horror.

Berlin special: The Kaiserstuhl coal pit at Dortmund, in Westphalia, was the scene of a terrible mining accident. An explosion of fire damp occurred in the pit, killing fifty persons and injuring many others. Great excitement prevails and the details of the affair are not yet at hand. It is feared that some of the injured will die.

Four Persons Drowned.

At Bennett's Mill on the Missouri River, Mrs. Foster, her two children, and her sister were drowned. They were moving from one side of the river to the other and most of the goods having been taken across the little family were following in a skiff, which was overturned.

Engine Blown Up.

Freight train engine No. 107, east-bound on the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railroad, blew up near Rokabel, Ohio, instantly killing Engineer Basom, Fireman Roberts, and Brakeman Queen. The track was badly torn up by the force of the explosion.

Old Farmer Killed.

William Bellows, a farmer of Rutland, Ohio, 75 years of age, was returning to his home from Middleport in a wagon, when a Kanawha and Michigan freight train came along. The team ran off and inflicted injuries from which he died shortly afterward.

A Joke Cost His Life.

Wm. Rowe, who was shot at Brazil, Ind., last week is dead. John McKay of Caseyville, did the shooting because Rowe joked him about being drunk. The ball passed entirely through the body, entering the stomach. McKay escaped and is still at large.

Death of Judge Orr.

Judge Wm. N. Orr, a noted jurist and widely known resident of Orrville, Wayne County, Ohio, died of Bright's disease, aged 60. He graduated with the late James G. Blaine, being the valedictorian of the class.

Gutted the town.

Fire at Dickson, Tenn., on the Northwestern Division of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway, destroyed the greater part of the business portion of the town.

Both Legs Gone.

A premature explosion in the stone quarries at Peebles, Ohio, resulted in James Settles have both legs mangled in a horrible manner. Physicians amputated both legs.

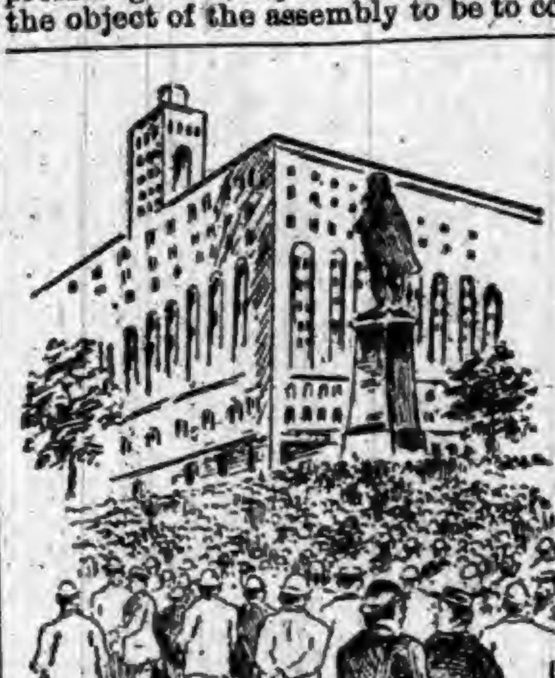
THEY DEMAND WORK.

GREAT MASS MEETING OF UNEMPLOYED IN CHICAGO.

Nearly Five Thousand Men Out of Employment Gather About an Express Wagon, Near the Statue of Columbus, and Listen to Speeches from Their Leaders.

Labor Blames Capital.

There was a great mass meeting of the unemployed on the Lake Front, in Chicago, the other day. The men decided to march to the City Hall, carrying the banners of their various unions, and demand work of the city. This was presented in the form of a resolution, and was adopted amid ringing cheers. The unemployed assembled near the Columbus statue in response to a call from the Allied Woodworkers' Trades Council. E. O. Cochran, business agent of the council, using an express wagon as a speaker's stand, stated the object of the assembly to be to consider what the unemployed workmen of Chicago should do in the present hard times. A number of speakers of different nationalities were introduced, who spoke in unmistakable tones.



CROWD ON THE LAKE FRONT.

A resolution was adopted demanding the removal of the Haymarket monument, as they consider it a relic of one of the worst judicial murders that ever disgraced the history of civilization. Resolutions were also adopted denouncing the capitalistic class and demanding relief from the present Congress

DROPPED TO DEATH.

Terrible Accident on the Atlantic and Danville Road Near Milton, Va.

A Danville, Va., dispatch tells of an awful accident which occurred at the County Line trestle just east of Milton at 2:50 o'clock in the morning, by which two passenger coaches and a sleeper were precipitated into the creek below, a distance of sixty feet, killing seven persons outright and wounding a number of others. The train bound for Portsmouth left Danville at 1:35 in the morning and was the regular train. After passing through Milton and going over the trestle the engineer, Peyton Tunstal, who says he was running at the rate of ten miles an hour, felt the bridge giving way. He threw open the throttle and the engine, tender and a box car got safely over, but the first passenger car was too late, and the span went down under its weight, the second passenger car and sleeping-car following.

The cars were shivered into kindling wood and the escape of any of the passengers was a miracle. The water in the creek had risen to the depth of twelve or more feet, and it is the general belief that the rise had undermined the foundation of the under pieces, causing the trestle to settle. On the train at the time were about sixteen persons, including the trainhands, but only one of the latter—Conductor H. Morris, of Portsmouth—was killed, none of the others receiving serious injuries. In the sleeper were Mrs. Harvey Giersch, two children and nurse, of Winston, N. C.; Conductor J. L. Siser, of Richmond; and J. R. Townes, colored porter. The nurse was drowned and the conductor and porter were slightly injured. Mrs. Giersch was on her way to Lawrenceville to visit friends.

The depot agent at Milton heard the crash and immediately gave the alarm by tolling the bell. The people turned out in full force and went to work at once to rescue the dead and injured from the debris. The 13-year-old daughter of Mrs. Giersch, not realizing the danger through which she had passed, said to the rescuers: "Don't mind me; I am not hurt; but please take mamma out." The following is the list of the killed:

H. MORRIS, conductor, Portsmouth, Va.
W. R. ELLISON, Alton, Va.
J. G. DAVIES, a farmer of Baskerville, Va.
W. H. ELAM, of Durham, N. C.
JAMES S. LOWE, a railroad conductor from the West, who was a passenger.
THOMAS LEE (colored), of Winston, N. C.
FRANCIS JENKINS (colored), of Salem, N. C.

None of the injured are seriously hurt. The dead were removed to the railroad depot at Milton, where they were kept until the arrival of the coroner from Halifax Court House, the accident occurring on the Halifax side of the creek. The loss was heavy to the railroad company, as the cars and a full span of the bridge are a total loss.

MAY RESUME SILVER.

Said to Be Probable that India Will Return to Free Coinage.

Private cablegrams from London received in New York contained the important information that the Indian Council or Herschell Monetary Commission appointed by the British Government to readjust Indian finances, had receded from the position it took when it closed the mints of India to the free coinage of silver and was selling council bills below the rate fixed at the time this action was taken. Later cablegrams from London confirmed the report and said that the council had sold 20 lacs or 2,000,000 rupees at 15½ pence. The ratio fixed by the council a few weeks ago was 16 to 1; that is, the commission decided that 1 rupee was worth 16 pence, or 32 cents in our money. The sales were at a discount of 1½ cents per rupee of 32 cents fixed valuation.

The advices accompanying the announcement of the Council's action were very meager, and the exact significance of the decline in the price of rupee paper could not be definitely determined by any of the bankers seen in Wall street. It was thought by some that it might mean a return to free coinage at the Indian mints, and the theory was advanced that the present decline in the value of the rupee, which is the silver money of India, might be for the purpose of stimulating trade, which has been at a standstill since the Indian Council attempted to fix an inflexible ratio between gold and silver.

BERING SEA DECISION

UNITED STATES CLAIMS ARE NOT ALLOWED.

No Right to the Protection of, or Property in, the Seals Frequenting the Islands of the United States When Found Outside the Ordinary Three-Mile Limit.

Victory for Britons.

Baron De Courcel, President of the Behring Sea arbitration tribunal, has announced in Paris the decision of the arbitrators on the issues presented to it. Except for a provision that the seals shall be protected from indiscriminate slaughter, the decision is entirely against the United States. Not a proposition put forth by the American counsel has been agreed to by the tribunal. Every issue made by the United States has been decided in favor of Great Britain. The arbitrators practically deny that Russia asserted or exercised exclusive rights in the seal fisheries prior to the purchase of Alaska by the United States. That any such claims were recognized and conceded by Great Britain and that the United States have any property rights in the seal fisheries other than those belonging to all other nations. Uncle Sam is beaten at every point touching its sovereignty over the Behring sea, and the crum of consolation in the matter of protection of the seals is not sweetened by the accompanying declaration that this power of protection does not lie in the United States but in the ruling of the tribunal.

American Claims Rejected.

In a general way the tribunal rejects the claim of the United States that the Behring Sea is a mare clausum and denies to the United States exclusive property rights in the seal fisheries. On the other hand, the arbitrators sustain positively the contention of the United States that pelagic sealing should be stopped and that the seal herds should be protected from extermination by poachers. To effect this end the tribunal rules that there shall be maintained a closed season, beginning May 1 and ending July 21, during which no seals may be killed. This prohibition applies not only to Behring sea, but to the north Pacific ocean. To save the seals from slaughter at their breeding places in the Pribylov Islands a protective zone extending sixty miles around the islands is established, and sealing outside this zone is to be permitted only after Aug. 1. Further protection from indiscriminate slaughter is provided in the prohibition by the terms of the decision of the use of fire-arms by sealtakers.

Uncle Sam's Contentions.

The contentions of the United States as to its exclusive jurisdiction in Behring Sea, acquired from Russia by the purchase of Alaska and its property rights in the seal fisheries, are contained in the following five points of article 6 of the treaty creating the tribunal of arbitration:

1. What exclusive jurisdiction in the sea now known as Behring Sea and what exclusive rights in the seal fisheries therein, did Russia assert and exercise prior and up to the time of the cession of Alaska to the United States?
2. How far were these claims of jurisdiction as to the seal fisheries recognized and conceded by Great Britain?
3. Was the body of water now known as the Behring sea included in the phrase "Pacific ocean," as used in the treaty of 1825 between Great Britain and Russia; and what rights, if any, in the Behring sea were held and exclusively exercised by Russia after said treaty?
4. Did not all the rights of Russia as to jurisdiction and as to the seal fisheries in Behring sea, east of the water boundary, in the treaty between the United States and Russia of the 30th of March, 1867, pass unimpaired to the United States under that treaty?
5. Has the United States any rights, and, if so, what right, of protection of property in the fur seals frequenting the islands of the United States in Behring Sea when such seals are found outside the ordinary three-mile limits?

The decision as rendered is practically a knock out for the United States and a victory for England.

They all got some of it, but Holmes fared the worst. Davis' residence has been stoned frequently recently, and he served notice that he would shoot one if the assaults continued.

CHAPTER I.

THE VENGEANCE OF A RIVAL.

A young Chicagoan was taking a lengthy stroll one fine afternoon a few miles from the capital of the Hawaiian Islands.

Suddenly as he turned a sharp bend in the road, which was bordered by rocks and trees, he came upon a scene which at once fixed his attention.

Not ten rods ahead two persons, mounted upon horses, were approaching at a walk—the one a coarse-looking man of five-and-thirty years, in a sailor's holiday suit; the other a girl of rare beauty and grace, whose years could have hardly numbered eighteen. They were flushed and excited, and engaged in angry contention. The man had even seized the girl's bridle to prevent her from flying.

"Is this your final decision?" he was asking.

"It is," was the quick answer.

"But why do you refuse me? Are you in love with the young fellow who visited Cape May last summer, and who saved your life in the surf—that Ralph Kemplin?"

The question was unanswered, save by a look of increased scorn and a rosier glow of features.

"That is the secret of your refusal of me, no doubt," continued the rejected suitor. "I noticed at the time that you and Kemplin seemed smitten with each other. Have I not fathomed the motives of your conduct?"

"You have no right to ask me these questions," returned the girl coldly and haughtily. "All I have to say to you is that I will never marry you!"

"Then this ride may as well end here."

Slipping to the ground the man led the horses into the wooded solitude beside the road, coming to a halt. This bold proceeding naturally surprised the girl, but she lost no time in alighting, pale with a sudden increase of anger and disgust.

"Since you act in this vile manner," she said, defiantly, "I will return to town on foot."

She moved away as she spoke, but her oppressor seized her roughly by the arm, detaining her. His eyes glared and his brawny frame trembled.

"No; you shall not return on foot—nor in any other way," he declared. "Under the circumstances, I am not going back to the ship myself."

"What then?"

"I am going to turn outlaw! Since you won't marry me, Maida Stepp, you shall never marry anybody—never return to your father even! I'll hide in the woods and caves of the interior, taking you with me by force!"

"Villain! how dare you touch me?" cried the girl. "Let go of my arm this instant!"

"I won't let go! Since you won't be my wife, you shall be worse than a slave!"

He looked up at the immense precipices by which the Nuuanu valley is closed inland, as if invoking their awful solitudes, and clutched the girl still more tightly.

"I hear that robbers and cut-throats have been seen in these hills," he added rapidly. "All I have to do is to disappear with you, leaving it to be supposed that we have been murdered. No help can reach you in this lonely spot——"

Here our young Chicagoan appeared to the view of the couple, advancing swiftly toward them.

"Miss Stepp! Is it possible?" was his greeting.

"Ralph Kemplin! Thank Heaven!"

She was already free, thanks to the consternation of her assailant, and flew to the protecting arms of the newcomer, nestling upon his breast.

"You see, too-confident stranger," said Ralph, with airy and scornful intonation, as he looked over the sunny head of his charge at the rejected suitor, who stood as if thunderstruck, "that you have counted your chickens before they are hatched. I am here just in time to constitute myself this young lady's protector. At the least further insolence to her, I will prepare you for admission to the nearest hospital."

"Sir! I——"

"No reply is necessary. A crowd of people are coming around the bend, and you've barely time to hide in the woods and caves of the interior, as you just now threatened. Be off at once."

An instant the baffled villain hesitated—long enough to assure himself that several naval officers, on their way to the Pali, were just coming into view around the bend mentioned—and then he sprang into his saddle, dashing away at full speed. As prompt and rapid as was his flight, however, he was not yet out of sight when Maida Stepp, with her rescuer's aid, was again mounted and on her way to the capital.

"After what I've seen and heard," said the young Chicagoan, as he walked beside the girl, when the naval officers had passed, "I must, of course, congratulate you upon your change of escort. But," and his eyes kindled and his voice softened, "I must also congratulate myself."

A swift flush leaped to the girl's cheeks.

"You came just in time, Mr. Kemplin," she murmured, shuddering. "That villain would have dragged me away to a horrible fate."

"Who is he?"

"His name is Hank Ripple. He's first officer of the Nor'wester, my father's ship, now anchored in the harbor. I had no idea of his real character until this hour. He has bothered me with his attentions ever since we left home last fall, but I supposed him to be harmless. I wanted to see the Pali very much. Aunt Alice was not well enough to go with me, and father was too busy. Mr. Ripple offered his services, and we had no misgivings about accepting them, so carefully has the villain kept his real nature hidden."

"I see. You have been well and happy since I saw you last?"

"Yes, thank you. I always enjoyed good health, and am always happy," and she sighed. "And you, Mr. Kemplin?"

"Oh, I can say as much," and he also sighed. "How is your father?"

"Apparently as strong as ever. How pleased he will be to see you!"

"The pleasure will be mutual, of course. I need hardly say, Miss Stepp, how delighted I am to see you again. There is something fateful in our meeting."

"There certainly is. You have saved my life to-day as surely as you did last summer when you drew me gasping from the surf. Rest assured that I am grateful."

A little hand stole out to him, and he pressed it fervently, continuing to clasp it.

"Do you ever think of those days?" he asked, the light of his eyes and the expression of his face becoming tenderer.

"Think of them! They are always with me."

Ralph drew the hand quickly to his lips.

"It's the same with me," he declared, his rich voice vibrating with a thrill of joy. "I have loved you constantly from the first moment of our acquaintance, and greatly regret that I did not tell you so last summer. Several sentiments restrained me, among which was the fear of speaking too soon, and when, upon my return to college, I had reached a resolve to write you my views, I learned that you had sailed with your father. Now, there are thousands upon thousands of happy couples who never would have married if Providence had not actually bumped their heads together, but I do not intend to wait for any special aids of that nature. Pardon, therefore, dear Miss Stepp, now and here, a single question. Are you still free to accept me as a suitor for your hand?"

A look was a sufficient answer.

"Then I beg of you to regard me as such from this moment."

A brief silence followed, but it was a silence full of roseate hues and gladness unutterable. Probably the girl's hand returned the pressure of the hand in which it was resting. Probably, too, her eyes were more eloquent than volumes of commonplace declarations. Be that as it may, they could not have looked any happier if they had owned the whole world.

The journey into town was only too quickly accomplished. Passing the missionary printing establishment and school-room, the young couple took their way direct to the outer stone pier, where Capt. Stepp, a noble-looking man, with a boat and crew, was anxiously awaiting his daughter's coming. Her prevision respecting Ralph's reception was fully realized. No one had ever seen the honest old navigator more delighted.

"Why, look at that ship," he cried, when his joyous excitement had found expression, as he pointed at the Nor'wester, which lay in full view of the fort. "It is in that ship that I have earned every dollar I shall leave my daughter. And it was your father, as I must have told you last summer, who enabled me to buy her. He is the first friend I ever had, and the best one. You, doubtless, remember that he first named me commander? How came you here?"

"Oh, I am simply taking a trip around the world," replied Ralph, "and expect to sail in the next steamer for China."

"Well, well," commented Captain Stepp; "our meeting here is a strange one. But, come—let's be off for the ship, for you'll certainly honor us with a visit, Mr. Kemplin? I've forgotten all about Mr. Ripple in this excitement. Where is he, Maida?

Maida explained.

The surprise of Captain Stepp at Ripple's baseness was exceeded only by his consternation at the peril his daughter had encountered. An officer with numerous aids was immediately dispatched in quest of the offender, and the little party took boat for the Nor'wester.

A pleasant visit of several hours followed, during which Ralph made the acquaintance of Maida's aunt, Miss Alice Stepp, who was making the voyage, partly for her health and partly for reasons that were duly set forth by her niece.

"You doubtless wonder that Aunt Alice and I are with my father upon such a long voyage," the girl took occasion to say to her lover, when they had been left to themselves. "But he's now well along in years—was fifty-eight yesterday—and his health is not what it used to be. He lost my mother, you know, when I was a baby. He has had only Aunt Alice and me to live for all these years, and I have always been been with him. I am the living image of my mother, and he cannot bear to have me out of his sight."

"I don't wonder at it," said Ralph, emphatically, his eyes beaming with tender admiration.

"We are now on our way to the Arctic ocean through the Straits of Behring," continued Maida. "The right whales have gone up into those waters—at least such is father's theory—and as this is intended to be his last voyage he is determined to make a success of it. We shall probably remain here three or four days longer."

"And I expect to be here a like period."

A mutual sigh succeeded, but the communing of the couple was continued, and before night they were walking the deck arm in arm, greatly to the astonishment of the good maiden aunt, who wondered how and where they had "got so thick" with each other. The next day they were almost continually together, and upon the third day they were formally betrothed to each other.

During these days not the least trace was found of Hank Ripple.

The hour of separation came painfully soon for the lovers. We have neither time nor space to relate the sacred communings and equally sacred griefs of that adieu. It was agreed that the young Chicagoan should claim his betrothed upon her return home, and that they would then decide in family council and according to circumstances whether to settle in Chicago or elsewhere.

And so they separated, the Nor'wester resuming her voyage.

That same afternoon, as Ralph Kemplin was walking, gloomy and abstracted, near Kalika Bay, whither he had gone to look at the fish ponds and other curiosities, while awaiting the departure of his own ship, which was to sail upon the following morning, he suddenly found himself intercepted by three rough-looking sailors who signified that they had business with him.

"We're friends of Hank Ripple," said the spokesman of the trio. "In fact we came here in the Nor'wester with him but have deserted."

"Where is Mr. Ripple now?" asked Ralph.

"He has gone on with the ship, sir."

"With the ship? Impossible! We've had men looking for him for three days past."

"Nevertheless he has sailed in the Nor'wester, so as to be near the Cap'n's daughter!"

"Impossible!" protested Ralph, in a voice freighted with pain.

"Oh, not at all," answered the sailor. "He disguised himself so thoroughly that the Cap'n didn't know him, and no difficulty in shipping as a seaman in my place."

The information gave Ralph a chill of consternation.

"And that isn't all, sir," resumed the spokesman of the three ruffians, beckoning his comrades nearer, "Mr. Ripple thinks so much of you, Mr. Kemplin, that he has given us a hundred dollars to present his compliments to you. And here they are!"

The three men hurled themselves upon him at these words, and gave him a terrible beating, despite all he could do to protect himself, and then vanished as abruptly as they had appeared, leaving him for dead.

CHAPTER II.

UNDER A TERRIBLE SHADOW.

A couple of hours later, a native of the island, going home in that direction, found the young Chicagoan sitting up and looking calmly, yet wonderingly, around. Nearly all the Kanakas speak English, and this one spoke it fluently. Hoping to earn a trifle, he drew near, with a respectful salutation, and offered to bring a horse.

"A horse? what for?" returned Ralph.

"To take you to town, sir."

"Town? what town?"

"To Honolulu."

Marking the wondering stare with which Ralph received these words, the Kanaka added:

"You know where you are, don't you?"

"No. Where am I?"

The Kanaka retreated several steps rapidly, uttering a cry of horror in his native tongue, but returned to the charge.

"You can at least tell me who you are," he suggested.

"Who I am? I—I don't know!"

"But you must know where you came from and how you arrived here?"

Ralph shook his head, looking thoroughly puzzled, and responded:

"I don't know anything about it."

"You can certainly tell me your name," cried the Kanaka, in a frightened voice.

"Name? Name? I haven't any name as I know of."

Alas for the truth. The blows Ralph had received upon his head from his assailants had utterly annihilated his memory. Obliterated was all his past—his journey—his whereabouts—his relations to Maida Stepp and to his father and friends. He was ignorant of all the facts concerning himself, even to his own name.

The Kanaka was strongly tempted to take to his heels without further inquiry or comment. But he had more than the average Kanaka heart and brain, and he resolved to probe the mystery of Ralph's singular situation.

"Didn't you arrive here in a steamer from San Francisco?" he asked. "Are you not an American?"

Ralph contracted his brows in a desperate effort to furnish a solution of this problem, but after a full minute he was obliged to answer:

"I don't know."

"Where were you when you first knew anything about yourself?" continued the Kanaka.

"I—I was here!"

Smiling involuntarily at this reply, the Kanaka stepped nearer and lifted Ralph's hat, then starting back in painful amazement.

"Ah, I see!" he ejaculated.

There was a bump upon Ralph's head, between his ear and his temple, nearly as large as a hen's egg, and discolored to blackness. Touching this bump, gently, the Kanaka elicited a sharp cry of pain.

"I see," he repeated, giving his attention to various other injuries. "You've been waylaid—knocked on the head—almost murdered!"

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Woodsman's Wife Who Slew the Mother and Captured Two Cubs.

A desperate battle took place a few days ago between a famished she bear and the wife of Amos Corey, a woodsman on the Upper Beaverkill, near Turnwood, N. Y., says the New York Times. For several days bear tracks had been seen in the neighborhood, and once a good-sized bear had been seen crossing the road near Corey's cabin. The other morning Corey started with rifle and dogs to hunt down the animal, and had been gone about an hour when his wife heard a great commotion in the dooryard. Just then a little dog ran into the house yelping with terror and covered with blood. Mrs. Corey, thinking of the bear, seized a keen-bladed ax from the rack and, shutting her baby and little boy in a bedroom, ran into the yard. There she saw a huge she bear rolling and tumbling among the sawdust and chips of the woodpile, while over it hovered a swarm of honey bees. The bear had upset half a dozen hives of bees and the little creatures were having their revenge. Mrs. Corey watched the battle for awhile and then she made a stroke at bruin with the ax, inflicting a severe wound in the animal's side. With a howl the bear rushed upon her, unmindful of the bees. Rising upon its hind legs it advanced upon the woman and tried to hug her. Mrs. Corey plied the ax with energy, and after several blows struck the animal in the head, killing it instantly. She received during the battle a blow from one of the bear's paws, which badly lacerated one of her arms. After the bear had been killed the bees swarmed about Mrs. Corey, stinging her severely. They finally rested on the bushes near by, where she succeeded in hiving them. Afterward she was surprised to find that two little cubs had come out of the brush and were smelling about their dead mother. She captured them and after feeding them with warm milk they became quite tame. She will keep the cubs and raise them.

Cremating Garbage.

The consumption of garbage by cremation has been begun in quite a number of places in this country, and the one which is an object-lesson to our other cities in Massachusetts and New England is the double-fire system now in use in Lowell and in other parts of the country. The crematory is a brick structure forty feet long, ten feet wide, and twelve feet high, with a stack seventy-five feet in height. The top of the furnace is reached by a platform, and the garbage is collected in carts and dumped down the slopes into the feed holes in the top of the furnace. After the furnace has been charged two fires are lighted. The flames pass from the first fire to the garbage piled on the grates, and the gas and smoke attending the combustion then pass to the second fire, where they are consumed. All the products of the burning of the garbage must pass through one of these fires. We have not room for detailing how this system is managed, but the results are such that it works successfully wherever it has been tried, and its adoption in many of our large cities is apparently only a question of time.

Home-Made.

There should be a scale for all such things as home-made jellies, canned fruit, etc., as the articles produced on the farm would be better prepared than those put up at some factories.

THE Great Eastern was the largest ship ever built—680 feet long, 83 broad, 60 deep, and 28,627 tons burthen.

WOULDN'T TAKE A "DARE."

Stirring Events Resulting from Johnnie's Exhibition of Youthful Pride.

Johnnie started out with good intentions, just as older persons do, says the Louisville Courier-Journal. His father had told him not to leave the yard on pain of a dose of "peach-tree tea." Having been a small boy yourself you probably know the tingling properties of this heroic remedy. Early in the afternoon Willie came along.

"You gotter stay in!" opened up that young man with the ready insolence of unrestrained freedom.

"No, I musn't," answered Johnnie.

"Yes, you mus'."

"Hope er may die."

"Dare you like er black dog to come out."

"Double dare?" cried Johnnie, hoping against hope.

"Double dare 'n cross myself."

This was too much for any spirited person to bear, so Johnnie climbed over the fence, exclaiming as he touched the ground:

"Never took er dare, 'n never will."

The fire bells sounded just then and Johnnie and Willie started to go to the fire, but found it was too far away. Coming back Willie said:

"My pap-y's going to buy me a pony."

"Hones'?"

"Hope er me die."

"My pap-y 'ud buy me one, too, if I'd as' fer't."

"Over the right," threateningly.

"My pap-y's better'n yourn."

"My pap-y c'n whip yourn with his lef' han'."

"Can't."

"C'n."

This argument could not be settled with mere boasting words. They struck out together and soon were rolling in the dust. Then after much scuffling and the tangling and untangling of fat, little legs:

"Nuff?" from Johnnie.

No answer; more scuffling and the desperate wiggling of the under pair of legs, which finally became still.

"Nuff?"

"Y-e-e-s," very slowly and in smothered accents.

"'N my pap-y c'n whip yourn?"

"Y-e-e-s," after much consideration.

Johnnie got back in the yard just ten minutes before he saw his father coming out in the street. Johnnie opened the gate and waited for him.

"Why didn't you run and meet me, son?" asked "pap-y."

"'Cause you told me not to go out the yard."

"That's so—that's so," patting Johnnie on the head, as the coals of fire burned deep in that young man's conscience. Johnnie's behavior was beautiful that evening, and his efforts to avoid all reference to the morning command most skillful and successful. As he went to bed he said to himself:

"'Fi tole pap-y 'bout the dare an' Willie's pap-y bein' bettern him, he wouldn't do nuffin—but I guess I won't."

AN UNUSUAL ANÆSTHETIC.

The Dentist Entertains His Traveling Companion.

The drummer had told a commercial story, and the dentist, who had been extracting much pleasure therefrom, followed with a professional yarn.

"At one time in my early practice in a country town," he said, "there came to me a very nervous woman to have a tooth extracted. She carried on so that I could scarcely get her into the chair, and as soon as I put the forceps near her mouth, she screamed and bounced around so I couldn't do anything with her. After two or three visits, each worse than the other, I suggested that I take her to the nearest large town where a dentist administered gas. Well, the tooth hurt her so that at last she consented, and I took her there, about twenty-five miles by rail. I went armed with a pair of forceps, as a matter of habit, and when we got to the place and she saw the gas bag and the other appliances, she had them again worse than before, and I had to give it up and take her back home. I was thoroughly provoked and felt like taking a club to her, but she had money and was paying for her foolishness, so I tried to restrain my feelings. About ten miles out from the town as the train was plugging along about twenty miles an hour, and she was holding her jaw and I was holding mine, in the seat beside her, we struck a broken rail and the last thing I knew we were rolling down an embankment and being piled up at the bottom in a very promiscuous fashion. I don't know how it came about, but I wasn't hurt much and when my senses were fully restored I dragged my patient out through a window and laid her on a bank near by. She was pretty badly bruised and had been knocked senseless, and as I was endeavoring to restore her a brilliant thought occurred to me. The next moment I had out my forceps and the next I had out the confounded tooth. Two hours later one of the physicians who had been summoned had restored her to consciousness, and as she opened her eyes and saw me standing by her side, she clapped her hand to her jaw and exclaimed:

"'Oh, Doctor, I knew it would be terrible, but I did't think it would be so bad as that. However, though, it is out at last.'

"Then she went to sleep and it was a week before she knew the real facts in the case."

"Did she pay you anything extra?" queried the drummer, doubtfully.

"No," smiled the dentist, "but the railroad company did, $5,000, and I got half."

Hawks, Owls and Farmers.

The Department of Agriculture at Washington has recently published a work prepared by Dr. A. K. Fisher, assistant ornithologist of the department, under the title, "The Hawks and Owls of the United States in Their Relation to Agriculture." It is the general belief of scientific men that such birds—birds of prey, as they are called—are, on the whole, of great service to farmers; but this belief is directly opposed to that which has commonly been held by farmers themselves.

The ornithologists of the department have therefore undertaken to ascertain who is right, the farmer or the man of science. To this end about twenty-seven hundred stomachs of newly killed hawks and owls have been critically examined. The result may be summarized in a few words.

Of the seventy-three kinds of hawks and owls found within the United States, only six are, on the whole, injurious. Of these, three are so extremely rare as hardly to call for attention, and another—the fish hawk—is only indirectly harmful; so that of only two—the sharp-shinned hawk and Cooper's hawk—need any practical account be taken.

But this is only half the story. Not only are the overwhelming majority of such birds not injurious to the agriculturist—they render him continual and extremely valuable service by the destruction of numberless plant-destroying rodents and insects.

The red-shouldered hawk, for instance, is the commonest large hawk in many parts of the country, and is commonly known—as is the red-tailed hawk also—as the "hen-hawk." Of this hawk two hundred and twenty stomachs were examined, and of the food found in them less than two per cent. was poultry. The remainder consisted of mice, grasshoppers and a great variety of other things. More than sixty-five per cent. of the whole was made up of noxious mammals—mice and shrews especially.

Concerning Swainson's hawk, we are told that it is particularly fond of grasshoppers. One bird has been estimated to consume at least two hundred grasshoppers in a day. In the course of a month a flock of about one hundred and sixty-five, "which is a small estimate of the number actually seen together in various localities feeding upon grasshoppers," would destroy a million of these pests.

Facts like these should be taken into account by law-makers; but it is not many years since the legislature of at least one of the Western States—Colorado—passed a bounty act, intended to encourage the killing of hawks, Swainson's hawk included, and as a result thousands of grasshopper-eating hawks were actually killed at the State's expense!

How Gold Rings Are Made.

Gold rings are made from bars nine or fifteen inches long. A bar fifteen inches long, about two inches wide and three-sixteenths of an inch thick, is worth about £200. It would make three or four hundred four pennyweight rings. A dozen processes and twenty minutes' time are required to change the bar into merchantable rings. A pair of shears cuts the bars into strips. By the turn of a wheel, one, two, three times, the guillotine-like blade of the shears cuts the bar into slices, one, two, or three sixteenths of an inch wide. A rolling machine presses out the strips and makes them flat or grooved. Each strip is then put under the blowpipe and annealed. The oxide of copper comes to the surface and is put into a pickle of sulphuric acid, the bit of gold is stamped with its quality and the name of the maker, and is put through a machine that bends it into the shape of a ring, the same making a ring of any size. The ends are soldered with an alloy of inferior fineness to the quality of the ring. Many people imagine that rings are run in a mold because they can't see where they are soldered. The ring spins through the turning lathes, is rounded and pared, and polished first with tripoli and then with steel-filings and rouge.

A New Prepared Paper.

In Germany a patent has been refused, and the manufacture and sale have been prohibited, of a paper so prepared that any ink-writing upon its surface could be erased by the simple application of a moist sponge. The paper was made of the ordinary ingredients, with the addition of asbestos and parchment glue. The paper pulp, after rolling, was immersed for a short time (from six to thirty-five seconds, according to the thickness of paper to be prepared from it) in concentrated sulphuric acid at twenty degrees diluted with ten to fifteen per cent. of water. It was then pressed between glass rollers, passed successively through water, ammonia solution, and a second time through water, strongly pressed between rollers and dried on felt rollers, and, finally, on polished and heated metal rollers. The finished article is said to be precisely like ordinary paper. Its sale has been prohibited on account of the misuse to which it could be put.

"Watch Stopped, Has It?"

"Watch stopped, has it?" asked one traveler of another. "Now, I suppose you'll pay a dollar to clean it. But let me give you a tip. Open both of the back cases so, hold it with open side down and tap it with your finger-nail a dozen times. Don't be afraid. Snap it again. Now move the second hand. Is it all right? I thought so. A drummer put me up to that trick. Probably there were only a few specks of dust in the works and you've rapped them out. Very likely it will now run for a year and you've saved your dollar. If it doesn't run after the little jar that you gave it, then it is time to take it to the jeweler."

Dumas at Work.

The "Englishman in Paris" relates that he one day called to see the elder Dumas, and inquired of the servant, "Is monsieur at home?"

"He is in his study, monsieur. Monsieur can go in."

At that moment I heard a loud burst of laughter from the inner apartment, so I said I would wait till monsieur's visitors were gone.

"Monsieur has no visitors; he is working," replied the servant. "Monsieur Dumas often laughs like that at his work."

It was true enough; the novelist was alone, or rather in company with one of his characters. He was simply roaring.

Lightning as a Censor.

During a storm at Canton, Ohio, the other day lightning struck the residence of Edward Haller, went down a sheetiron chimney, passed through a slate roof and went straight into the room where Mrs. Haller was sitting and burned the book she was reading. Mrs. Haller declines to tell the name of the book.

His success in the treatment of piles can be amply attested by hundreds whom he cured during his former visits. I can cure any case of piles, no matter of how long standing, or how hopeless the case may be. The patient suffers no pain or inconvenience. In most cases one treatment is sufficient, which takes only a few minutes, and the time required for a cure is about two weeks, during which time the patient is not inconvenienced from business. 20tf

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY........AUGUST 24, 1893.

Half rates to the fair are again likely to prevail. Western roads have begun it now.

Holman has been pushed off the chairmanship of appropriations. We believe this is a mistake.

Another man went over Niagara Falls Sunday. Boat upset in the river above. Body not yet recovered

The recent attempt to corner gold and bring it to a premium failed, but paper money went to a premium instead.

The fact is our first money standard, was a silver dollar, not a gold one. The law of 1892 said "of the value of a Spanish milled dollar"

There was a ball on Midway Plaisance last Wednesday evening at which thirty-five nations were represented among the dancers.

The tariff should not be disturbed is now the republican cry. But this is the very thing that has caused the most trouble. It has been so arranged as to benefit one while it robs a hundred. Free silver or no silver could not do as much evil.

There is no good reason why the government should not take this good time to issue in greenbacks to the amount of money needed for the business of the country. We could just as well have only that one kind of paper money instead of eight or ten.

The Lagrange Register speaks of an old soldier there having his pension taken away. It would be a good plan to have all such items give a correct statement of the grounds on which the pension was taken away. Then we could see who is to blame. Give us reasons.

The Bering Sea matter about seal catching has been mainly decided against the United States, This is to be regretted, yet it will be remembered by readers of the Courier that we have several times expressed a doubt as to whether our purchase of Alaska gave us all the privileges we were now claiming.

Gold keeps coming in from across the sea. Four and a half millions reached here last Friday, and nearly as much more was on its way. But no matter how plenty any kind of money is, it will do the people no good unless they have some way to get hold of it. A man must have something—work, wheat or other production—to exchange for money, or how will he get it?

Republican editors are scared for fear the tariff will be reduced. Manufacturers, they say, are shutting down. So they are, and so they have been for all the long years that the tariff has been on. And even now, the tariff is just as the republicans left it. The old story about shutting two men in a room and seeing them get rich swapping jack knives illustrates the republican idea.

Editors of republican papers are by no means to be despised by democrats. The kind of political talk they are giving can hurt no party, but their own. Its silliness is transparent, and as was the case in the last campaign, their readers are liable to recognize the utter nonsense of their arguments and go away disgusted with them—then vote the democrat ticket. The weakness of republican papers, the strength of democratic papers and the intelligence of the people, gave democrats a great victory.

The Money Question.

The Terre Haute Gazette of Aug. 14, was sent out to many editors and democrats not editors, in which Bro. Ball marked the following questions and asked for replies.

1—Are you in favor of the unconditional repeal of the purchase clause of the Sherman Silver law?

2—If that is repealed would you have the government cease coining any more silver, following the example of France, which keeps about $700,000,000 worth of silver at a ratio of 15½ to 1 at par with gold coin, to which latter metal her mints are free.?

3—Or would you have the government throw the mints open for the free and unlimited coinage of silver? and if so at what ratio?

In reply to the first question, we are in favor of the unconditional repeal of of purchasing clause of the Sherman law. But we will accept a conditional repeal if it is satisfactory.

To the second question;—No, government should not cease coining silver to a reasonable amount. One great fault of the Sherman act, was that it stopped the coining of silver, leaving it on the hands of the government in the form of bullion, a mere merchantable commodity which happened to depreciate enough to entail a loss of about forty millions. Silver purchased should be coined, but the amount to be coined should be subject to carefully considered regulations.

Third—It would not be wise to have the mints thrown wide open. We are producing a vast amount of silver, and it might not be wise to coin all of it. It might in several ways embarrass the government or the business of the country. As to the ratio, our present one of 16-to-1 is probably as good as any; of course it does not represent the true relative values of the two metals. But any other ratio would be open to the same objection. A ratio of 28 to 1 might be nearer the facts just now. But a month hence it may be 24 to 1. We cannot change the ratio often enough to keep up with the fluctuating values of any two metals—not even of gold and silver. Besides, a change of the ratio would leave us with many millions of 16 to 1 dollars on hand, and these would either have to circulate side by side with those of the new ratio, or else be returned to the mint and be re-coined at great trouble and expense.

The DeKalb County Battalion.

The meeting at the fair grounds on last Saturday was fairly well attended. The battalion was drilled for about an hour by Col. Leighty. It looked as if the pendulum of time had swung backward thirty years and the "boys" were drilling to go to the front to offer up their lives that the country might live. The "boys" of last Saturday did not keep step with the celerity of thirty years ago. Instead of young men full of life and activity, we found in the ranks old men, gray haired veterans, that know what it is to go and defend their country. They know what the preservation of this country in our grand republic means. Too much cannot be said in praise of the courage and the patriotism of these "old boys" who stood by the Union when to stand for your country meant something. After the drilling a splendid dinner was served in the dining hall, which, to say the least, was splendid and I think by the way the "boys" "laid holt" that it was highly appreciated. Dinner over, the boards were cleared for a business meeting of the battalion in connection with the attending of the encampment at Indianapolis in September. After business meeting was over, some declamations were rendered by some young ladies which I judge were well received, if the hand clapping was any indication. Rev. J N. Wilson was then introduced and made the first address. The next speaker was Hon. W. L Penfield, who spoke from the standpoint of a lawyer He spoke on the subject of fraudulent pensions and, of course, gave the present administration a "dig in the fifth rib" During his remarks he called on Wm. Oiler to rise to his feet. Then he said, "There stands an old soldier, 87 years old, who was wounded at Pittsburgh Landing and has seven inches of bone out of his right leg below the knee." This is true, but the speaker wanted to carry the impression the present administration had done Mr. Oiler a grand injustice by suspending his pension. Now, let us see what are the true facts in Mr. Oiler's case and whether the present administration is guilty of a great wrong toward him. He was first pensioned as a Mexican soldier about five years ago at the rate of $8 per month, service pension. At the time of granting the Mexican pension, he had an application pending under the law of June 27, 1890, which some time after the granting of the Mexican pension, was allowed at the rate of $12 per month There is a clause in the law of June 27, 1890, which says that this law shall not be construed to give any pensioner two pensions. Mr. Oiler accepted the pension granted under the law of June 27, 1890, thereby cancelling his Mexican pension certificate. But, notwithstanding the special condition in the law of June 27, 1890, as to two pensions, Mr. Oiler executed both vouchers and drew both pensions When this was discovered by the pension department, his pension was suspended until the time that the money that he drew illegally is refunded to the government. That Mr. Oiler drew this money from the government knowing he was not entitled to two pensions, no one will charge him with. When he executed the two vouchers, he believed he was entitled to the two pensions So far as the wounded leg Mr. Penfield referred to, Mr. Oiler has a claim pending under the disability law and it has been pending for the last fifteen years, and not allowed yet. He never got a cent on that wounded leg. He is a valiant soldier of two wars and ought not to be compelled to even take a pension under the law of June 27, 1890; but, instead, should have a pension granted under the disability law, or the "old law" for wounds received in battle, and I do hope that some lawyer, from a lawyer's standpoint, will take "holt" and assist him to get his original claim allowed, which he justly deserves. Mr Penfield also asked another old soldier to stand up, saying, "There is an old soldier that has been dropped from the pension rolls by the present administration." I asked this man why he was dropped, and he told me it was because the Board of Examining Surgeons, in their report of his examination, had reported that his disability was not of a pensionable degree. I think Mr. Penfield would not have refered to these cases as he did if he had known the facts. All in all, Mr. Penfield's remarks were well received. After Mr. Penfield, remarks were made by Gen. Blair, showing up some of the injustices sustained by the old soldier at the hands of the government by the pay of the soldier as compared with that of the bondholder. Following Gen. Blair, Capt. Hartman, of Auburn, made some remarks. "The boys" always crane their necks and open their ears when Capt. Hartman steps on the rostrum. Take it all in all, the picnic was a success. Although not largely attended, it was well enjoyed by all present. A photographer took the picture of the battalion, 115 in ranks. An annual picnic will be held and we hope every old soldier will attend.

Old Soldier who was there.

Court.

Last week, as we went to press, the case between Bert Weidner and Daniel Oberholtzer was going on. The history of this case is quite interesting. At the age of 17, Weidner went into the service as a substitute, getting $450 for going, He gave the money to his father who used it to buy the land now in dispute, taking the deed in his own name. After Bert returned from the army, there was some difficulty between him and his father off and on, he claiming that as the land was bought with his money, it was really his. We believe there was a suit about it, but Bert was worsted. When his father died, he willed the land to his second wife, Mrs. Oberholtzer, and when she died, her children by a former husband inherited the property. This case was well fought over, as there were two strong sides. Weidner had a right to the property bought by his money, and Oberholtzer, it is said, had really earned a good share of it by caring for old Mr. Weidner in his last years The judge decided that the law was with Weidner and gave him the forty acres.

John Boots sued to collect his note against John Neal—the one J. M. Hook and R. Sawvel had signed—and got judgment for $224. It was to secure Hook and Sawvel for signing this note that Neal gave them a mortgage on the two horses which Neal afterwards sold, as mentioned last week. Neal has left town. Some time has been spent on the J. L. Davis matter.

The success of Mrs. Annie M. Beam of McKeesport, Penn., in the treatment of diarrhœa in her children, will undoubtedly be of interest to many mothers. She says; "I spent several weeks in Johnstown, Pa., after the great flood, on account of my husband being employed there. We had several children with us, two of whom took the diarrhœa very badly. I got some of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy from Rev. Mr. Chapman. It cured both of them. I knew of several cases where it was equally successful. I think it cannot be excelled and cheerfully recommend it." 25 and 50c bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Mr. Thomas Batte, editor of the Graphic, Texarkana, Arkansas, has found what he believes to be the best remedy in existence for the flux. His experience is well worth remembering. I purchased a bottle and received almost immediate relief. I continued to use the medicine and was entirely cured. I take pleasure in recommending this remedy to any person suffering with such a disease, as in my opinion it is the best medicine in existence." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Some filthy hog, with two legs, spit a lot of tobacco juice against the clean plate glass in Gugerli's front window. And then to make his enjoyment more complete, he rubbed it around. Such chaps are not fit to live.

The next regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be at the home of Mrs. G. S. McCord, opposite M. E. parsonage Tuesday evening, Aug. 29. Officers will be elected for the coming year. Members are expected to be present.

We are informed several suits will be brought against the Wabash railroad for damage by fire in the eastern part of the county. Fences, meadows, late crops, and in one instance, an orchard, have been destroyed by fire started by sparks from passing engines.

The big plate glass in the Seventh St. side of the Kiblinger corner, cracked from top to bottom about a week ago, without any apparent reason. It is 6x12 feet, and will be quite a loss, though a part of the old one will be saved. A new one is here already to take its place.

Mrs. Sam. Buss, daughter and son, of Chicago, have been here a week or so, helping to care for her mother, Mrs. J. O. P. Sherlock, who has been very sick, but is now improving. She is also visiting Mrs. Cass and A. M. Case's family, the ladies being sisters. Mrs. B. brings word that her people, and the Auburn colony in Chicago generally, are doing well.

J. R. Palmer has a bad right hand being a case of blood poisoning. He has been assisting to care for his wife's mother, Mrs. Samuel Plattner, east of town, who is very sick, having the same disease, and it is supposed he contracted it in that way. Dr. Hines is treating him and hopes it will not prove serious. John is an industrious man, and we would feel sorry to see him laid up from his business.

John N. Reynolds, of Atchison, Kansas, was here Monday, and gave his free lecture on the street. He told the story of his being sent to the penitentiary in that place on a charge of sending fraudulent circulars through the mails, a charge which did not amount to much if his explanation is true. He had been a prominent citizen, and was popular enough to be elected to the state senate, while in prison. His mission here was to sell a book he wrote while in prison and he made it pay evidently.

C. P. Houser showed us some of his new crop of plums this week. There seems to be no limit to the amount of this fruit a man can raise if he cares for them properly. Mr. Houser used a McAnally sprayer on his, and though the trees are very young the crop is wonderful. One tree four years old had 1½ bushels and one limb 16 inches long had 72 fine plums while a limb he showed us, six inches in length, had thirty. It was simply surprising. His plums are the Lombard, Green Gage and Moore's Arctic, and are just getting ripe.

The joke is on Judge Powers now. Tuesday, he came down from Angola, taking a seat in one of the three coaches that were to be switched off onto the main line at Waterloo to run to the world's fair. He was told to change there but got to talking and did not notice that his coach was being switched back and forth there, till some one asked if he was going to Chicago. He said he was not but was on his way to Ft. Wayne, from which place he would return to Auburn at noon to hold court in the afternoon. He got off and hired a team to bring him to Auburn.

Special Notice.

There is located within the town limits numbers of old vaults and stables reeking in stagnant putrescent filth that no person should knowingly permit on their premises. The Waterloo Fair.

Last Friday there was a called meeting the stockholders of the society to consider to what extent new cattle stalls should be erected. It was found the old ones had all collapsed leaving a gap of 440 feet to be filled along the line of the last purchase of land. It was decided by a unanimous vote to put up as many stalls as would be needed, and put in a good fence the remaining space. It was also decided to adhere to to the 10 per cent rule in speed entries unless a different course should appear absolutely necessary when fair time approaches. The fair begins Oct. 9, and there is every prospect that the attendance will be large. They have never had such a show to get horses of high speed before.

Teachers' Institute.

The institute is in session and was an assured success from the first hour. About 175 were present the first day, including many of those who have had more or less experience in the work. But there were also many strange faces especially the younger ones, but they are a bright, wide-awake and intelligent looking company, and are deeply interested in the work before them. The instructors have in the main, followed a new line. We may mention Prof. Wood, who has been giving them practical lessons in the more common sciences—especially in electricity, which may now be considered as the one most prominently before the public. The lectures Monday and Tuesday evenings were of a high order, and intensely interesting. To-night Willetts will lecture, last evening being the lecture of Gunsaulus. There is much good work—more than we can mention. We are only sorry that we could not give our readers more of the good things to be heard. The only way to get the benefit of an institute is to attend its sessions, day and evening. We can only add, it is fully up to the standard of the many excellent ones that have gone before.

The Child Wasn't Stolen.

Sunday afternoon there was a great excitement in the north part of town. A little daughter of Mrs. Joe Beugnot ran home crying out that her little sister had been stolen. She said she saw her in a buggy with some men who were driving south. As the little one was not in sight, the story that she had been stolen seemed reasonable and there was a great ado. Harry Lewis started out on his wheel and followed the rig to the Junction. But there he became satisfied that the child was their own, and not Mrs. Beugnot's. In the meantime, however, the alarm had spread, and finally Sheriff Ralston was put on the track. He followed the parties to St. Johns and there overtook them and found they had no child but their own. He came back and found that after he had started south, Mrs. Beugnot's little child had come home, for it had all the time been at one of the neighbor's.

THE city of Asuncion in Paraguay is described by a correspondent as one of picturesque charm and full of relics of magnificence. It is lighted by electricity, and with its one-story houses, painted white, pink, green or lavender, with floors of Paraguayan marble in colors, presents a half Oriental and half mediæval appearance. The location in the harbor with wooded hills in the background is one of picturesque charm.

THE Boston Globe waxes eloquently indignant over the discrimination shown against young women in English colleges, and refers with considerable heat to the fact that ten young women have passed the examination for the mathematical tripos at Cambridge, but cannot be given a degree. Can it be possible that Harvard has taken down the bars between the sexes and admitted women to the university on terms of equality with men? Or is the Globe still living in a glass house?

A MAN killed himself in Philadelphia and left his body to a medical college. This was his dying message, written on a postal card: "A Chump for Dissection—Professor: Cut my body up to show the young cranks how a chump is made. I have been a chump ever since I became a man. I owe nobody anything. I have no money and no friends. Don't let my friends have my body.—A Chump." This man may have been a chump, but it is doubtful. It is one of the paradoxes of life that when a man knows he is a chump he is not a chump.—Buffalo Express.

A RETURN made by a British Government agent shows some peculiar things regarding the prices of bread and flour at different points on the Continent of Europe. For instance, flour retailed at 2 cents a pound at Budapest and 5 cents a pound at Paris, Frankfort and Florence. At Lille, flour was 4½ cents a pound, and white household bread 3½ cents a pound; at Berlin these figures were exactly reversed. Of course, quality has much to do with price; but it is remarkable how the price of bread varies with different cities. In some English cities it is almost given away; and in some American cities it brings two or three times the price that it does in England.

COL. MURPHY, the Apostle of Corn, makes a practical suggestion regarding missionary work, which if generally adopted would very soon tell in our exports of corn and corn-meal. It is that the millions of adopted citizens in the United States, when writing their friends in the old world, mention the excellence and cheapness of corn as a human food. They would confer a benefit on the land of their birth and the land of their adoption. We have exactly the food that the poor of Europe need, if they only knew its value; and it is only by persistent and varied effort that their prejudices can be overcome for their own good and ours.

THE problem of manufacturing a non-corrosive paint for the bottoms of steel and iron warships, which has been vexing the navy officials for a long time, has just been satisfactorily settled. A paint was invented in Germany, several years ago, which had the desired properties; but, as the government requires American-made paint on American warships, it could not be used. Now, however, the German paint plant has been removed to this country and United States cruisers will now have non-corrosive bottoms. The question of suitable paint for use in salt water has troubled all countries, the Japanese alone having had a non-corrosive article. This is a lacquer whose composition they keep secret.

FRANK R. STOCKTON, writing in the Forum of Mark Twain and his recent works, says: "Mark Twain's most noble characteristic is courage. Few other men—even if the other men could think of such things—would dare to say the things that Mark Twain says. To describe the travels of a man on a glacier, with particular reference to the fact that being pressed for time he rode upon the middle of the glacier, which moves faster than the edges, is one of the bravest things in literature. It required courage to write 'She,' but She could not possibly exist and glaciers do move. Mark Twain is a high jumper, but he always jumps from the solid rock of fact and is not afraid of breaking his neck by falling back upon it."

A DISPATCH from Kokomo, Ind., recently reported the death of Juan Burger, the 13-year-old son of a citizen of that place, from the direct effects of cigarette smoking. In his room were found 988 empty cigarette boxes he was saving up to send to the manufacturers for a prize. He had come within twelve of the prize when inevitable death stepped in and claimed the victim—of narcotic poisoning—and yet, with these fatal results constantly reported, there are thousands of parents who are so unwise as to offer no objection or to make no effort to prevent their children from continuing a habit which, if it does not soon kill them, dwarfs and wrecks them for life! And in the face of this cigarette murdering there are manufacturers sordid andreckless enough to offer a premium for the murder of children! It is a pity no law can be found which will stop the evil. It is even more a pity that there is not some law which will visit the severest penalties upon those who tempt children into this pernicious habit by the offering of prizes.

JOHN CUDAHY, the great packer, many times a millionaire as was commonly reported, played the role of "plunger," and plunged into financial ruin. For many years he had been a remarkably successful man. By close attention to a great and profitable business, and by shrewd buying and selling and handling of pork products, he had accumulated a vast fortune. He might have retired at any time and been as happy as vast wealth can make any man for the rest of his life, enjoying the best that money can afford, and doing good all around him. His income was so vast that it would have been a serious effort to spend the tenth of it. He was conducting a colossal enterprise, and he employed an army of well-paid men. Had he been content with that he would have prospered. But he had the speculating spirit. He was not content until he had risked all on the turn of a card—and he lost his fortune. Why did he do it? is the inevitable question that must be asked. Why do other men commit the same folly? What becomes of their conservatism, their reflection, their common sense, their judgment? Even if they double their fortune by a speculative stroke, of what good is it to them? It does not increase their happiness. It only doubles their discontent, and makes them doubly anxious to risk everything again in one grand plunge, and venture all, taking the chances of going down so far that recovery is impossible. It is double or quit, and it usually is quit forever. If they double they only double their own cares. If they lose they go broke, and are wretched the remainder of their lives. This millionaire has plunged into ruin, but the plunging will go on, and other millionaires will go, like him, on a "corner" speculation. Those who are not millionaires and don't gamble have every reason to be thankful that they have not the money for a big plunge.

His Reason.

In administering punishment in the navy different penalties carry with them reduction to a lower conduct class. Of these there are four, the fourth being the lowest, and one placed in it is deprived of shore leave for a period of three months. For some breach the executive officer of the United States ship Juniata found it necessary to place a man on the fourth class, who decided to try to obtain a mitigation of his sentence. With this object in view, he sought and obtained an interview with the executive officer, when the following conversation ensued: "Well, L——, you wanted to see me?" "Yes, sir, I did. I wanted to know, Mr. B——, why you put me on the fourth class?" "Ah, you wanted to know why I put you on the fourth class, eh? Well, I'll tell you, L——, I put you on the fourth class because I hadn't a fifth class to put you on. Now go forward." He went.

A WESTERN geologist says that Kansas can raise wheat for another 1,000 years before exhausting the necessary properties of the soil.

DUE TO REPUBLICANS

HARRISON, NOT CLEVELAND, IS RESPONSIBLE.

The Country Is Now Reaping the Bitter Fruit of the Policy Adopted by the Late Republican Administration—No Fixed Ratio Possible.

Where the Blame Lies.

The country is now reaping the bitter fruit of the policy adopted by the Republican administration, as there has been no legislation or session of Congress since the inauguration of President Cleveland. The present depression in business is the legitimate result of the Sherman bill, the McKinley bill and the wasteful policy of the Harrison administration. The Sherman bill (which was expected to make money plenty) is now acknowledged to be such a failure, and so bad, so full of danger to a sound financial condition, that nobody defends it. It is repudiated even by its father, who admits it ought to be repealed. The McKinley bill, with the rest of the Republican measures, inaugurated an era of wild speculation.

High protection was to give success to any business venture. Men rushed into all sorts of schemes to get rich at a bound. Trusts were formed and multiplied, to sell watered stock, and to increase prices. Banks were started by men who wanted to borrow and not to lend. The tide of speculation was raised so high that prosperous men like McKinley and Ex-Secretary Foster were swept into the current and ruined. The inevitable result of this wild craze is collapse and failures. The weak visionary concerns go to the wall and wind up. The strong find the market overstocked. Banks that made their loans to the speculators are compelled to stop. Excessive protection, inspiring the hope of excessive profits, always has, and always will, cause such a rush into protected business as to result in overproduction.

The McKinley bill has a share with Sherman bill in bringing about the present disturbed condition of business in the country. It is not Cleveland that is responsible for this, but Harrison and the Republican administration. We can now see how much the country has lost by the election of President Harrison instead of Cleveland. With nerve enough to veto the McKinley bill and the Sherman bill, and any other mischievous measures, Cleveland would have saved the country from the disasters that a mistaken policy has brought upon it. We repeat, it is Harrison, not Cleveland, who is responsible.—New Age.

McKinley on the Sherman Act.

The Sherman silver-purchase bill was passed by Congress in 1890. Soon after its passage Major McKinley came to Grand Rapids and addressed an immense Republican meeting in Hartman's Hall. In the course of his speech he eulogized the action of the Republican majority in Congress. One of the reasons which he urged as the occasion for eulogy was the passage of the Sherman law. He did not claim that it was a compromise or anything of the kind. He made no apologies for it. He gloried in it as a great and noble act of a Republican Congress. He said:

> What have we done? We have passed the silver bill—the best silver bill that was ever put upon our statute books. What does it do? It utilizes every ounce, every pennyweight of the silver product of the United States. The Government buys 4,500,000 ounces every thirty days, and issues its Treasury notes for that sum, and makes them redeemable in gold or silver, and makes them receivable for debts, public and private, absolutely a legal tender that puts in circulation a little more than two millions every thirty days, and in addition to what is put in circulation under the old law, the two millions of coinage a month. Then we have made this silver as good as gold, and silver to-day is nearer on an equality with gold than it has been for eighteen years; and why shouldn't they be side by side in the business of this great country?
> Grover Cleveland's administration discounted silver from the moment of its inauguration to the conclusion of his term; aye, he commenced discounting it before he was inaugurated and wrote a letter to several Representatives in Congress demanding a suspension of the coinage of two millions of money, and said if it was not done it would produce financial disaster. It was not done, and we had no financial disaster.
>
> We said in our platform of 1888 that gold and silver must be used as money. We made that pledge good, for gold and silver are together, side by side, self-reliant, each distinct in individuality, but like unto each other as those who love.

The extract is given without comment. It needs no comments. It is the expression of the views of the great Republican leader on one of the national questions of greatest import today.

Big Pension Leak.

Every candid mind must approve and applaud the work that Commissioner Lochren is doing in revising and purging the pension rolls. He is granting every new pension for which a just claim is made out. He is suspending no pension allowable under the law. He is simply stopping the payment of millions of Government money to men who are not entitled under the law to receive it.

The suspensions include two classes of cases—viz., those in which the allowance has been secured by direct fraud, and those in which, without fraud on the pensioner's part, the allowance has been made contrary to law. There were 250 cases discovered in Virginia, 250 in Iowa, and about 1,000 in New Mexico in which pensions had been secured by plain fraud and false swearing, for men who had never been in the service at all. To strike these from the rolls was as manifestly a duty as to stop any other form of stealing. But the other class of cases is much the larger. Investigation shows that about one hundred thousand pensions were improperly granted under Raum's extraordinary order No. 164, which flagrantly perverted the plain intent of the law. These pensions take about $11,500,000 a year out of the Treasury. The Commissioner is as much bound to suspend such pensions as he would be to stop the payment of salaries in his office of persons not employed there.

No Fixed Ratio Possible.

The Sherman act should be repealed unconditionally and without delay. It is time to abandon the experiment of legislating against the laws of nature. The attempt to maintain a fixed ratio between the values of gold and silver by act of Congress is merely a new edition of the Pope's bull against the comet. The national faith is virtually pledged to redeem all varieties of paper currency in gold, and the apprehension arising from the possibility of any other course is sufficient of itself to arrest the operations of finance throughout the country. This apprehension can be removed only by an explicit and frank adoption of the single gold standard. If the present gold reserve is inadequate for that purpose, a sufficient addition should be made by the sale of gold bonds. Better increase the national debt than wipe out enormous values and destroy business from Maine to California.—Harry Pratt Judson, Professor in the Chicago University, in Review of Reviews.

Garfield on Pensions.

As Gen. Garfield pointed out twenty years ago, the number of pensioners ought to diminish as the war grew more remote, and the expenditures on this account "steadily decrease, unless our legislation should be unwarrantably extravagant." This is what actually happens where any pension system is economically administered. The State of Georgia some years ago began paying moderate allowances to crippled ex-Confederates and to the needy widows of men who served in the Southern Army. Ten years ago there were 1,000 men who drew $100 a year for the loss of a limb or for total disability. Now there are only 773 pensioners under this head. If our pension legislation had not been so unwarrantably extravagant, the number of Union soldiers on the roll would be now much smaller than in Garfield's day, instead of larger by hundreds of thousands.—New York Evening Post.

THEY MUST BE REPEALED FIRST THE SHERMAN LAW AND THEN THE McKINLEY LAW SILVER MESSAGE

—Chicago Herald.

Less Lungs, More Brain.

This is a good time for the "friends of silver" to give their lungs a vacation and to place the gray matter of their brains on duty. Their gray matter will observe that it is not the "gold bugs" or the "bloated bondholders" of Wall street who are petitioning Congress to repeal the Sherman act and to return to a sound currency. In fact, these rich speculators are enjoying immensely the prospect of cheap silver They hope their allies, the silverites, may be successful in preventing the repeal of the Sherman law for many months, and that business will fluctuate from hot to cold several times during each month of tampering with our currency. They have the capital, and can buy low and sell high, by taking advantage of the business necessities of the country. After one or two years of this work, or when all of the available cash is squeezed out of industry, they will be willing to desist for awhile to allow the country to recuperate. They would then pray for another cheap money scare.

While industry is suffering and business houses and banks are tumbling, because of the money stringency, big fortunes are being doubled in Wall street. But little has been learned as yet of what has occurred. It has, however, leaked out that Mr. Addison Cammack has made $1,500,000 during the past three months, and that the profits of A. J. Weil & Co. since June 11 aggregate $2,000,000. Bigger speculators are probably making bigger "profits." The present fear of cheap money will cost honest industry and labor hundreds of millions of dollars. It will be extracted by aid for the rich speculators. More charities and almshouses for the poor, more steam yachts and foreign castles for the rich. "To him that hath it shall be given, and from him that hath not it shall be taken away, even that which he hath;" but never more rapidly than when our currency system is being juggled with in the interest of silver-mine owners, who use the mortgaged farmer and the poor laborer as their tools. When these same farmers and laborers awaken and realize what they have done they will feel like kicking themselves into the great big sea.—B. W. Holt.

A Moral Panic.

The key to the situation is obviously the Sherman silver law, the prompt repeal of which is urgently demanded by the logic of the situation. In previous financial disturbances in this country relief has always been obtainable from the borrowing of foreign capital, which was invariably ready to come over here on good security and good interest so long as there was no question as to what an American dollar meant or would mean for a twelvemonth. This time that resource is hardly available to any extent. The collateral we offer is good enough, and the rate of interest eminently satisfactory, but Europe shakes its head and declines to be tempted by any rate of interest so long as there is any question as to whether we are going to be a gold dollar or a silver dollar country. This lack of confidence abroad very seriously aggravates the lack of confidence at home, hence the statement above that the silver bill is the key to the situation. Without discussing the merits of the silver controversy, it is plain that our first duty and interest is to restore confidence abroad. This is a peculiarly "moral panic." All our resources are intact, and there is neither plague nor famine within our borders. Confidence is all that is lacking, and the return of that means the return of prosperity. Repeal the silver bill without quibble or delay, and the upward movement toward normal conditions will begin on the instant. There should be no uncertain sound to the President's forthcoming message to Congress. After that is done, which alone can set us right in our own eyes and in those of the world, there will be opportunity for careful deliberation upon any further financial legislation that may be needed.—Dry Goods Economist.

Gold Bugs.

"'Gold-bugs' may be bad enough," remarks the Indianapolis News, "though we confess we never saw saw a gold-bug and do not know what a gold-bug is, but patriotic men will be quite likely to prefer them to secessionists and traitors, who would hang John Sherman, march through blood to a silver throne, and wreck the country which they profess to love, just to make a market for Western silver at double its actual value.' If this convention may be taken as one of the first fruits of free silver, it affords only one additional reason why the movement should not succeed. Gov. Waite is a very valuable ally of the gold-bugs."—New York Post.

GOV. MCKINLEY is busily engaged in explaining why the wicked Democrats are to blame because his high tariff on wool and wheat has not kept up the price of these articles.

HARVEST OF THE YEAR.

Summary of the "American Agriculturist's" Annual Review.

The harvest of 1893 in the United States is in many respects similar to that of three years ago, but with every prospect that home consumption and an increase of foreign demand will also advance values so as to yield as large a net return to farmers as on the average of recent years. Indeed, the American Agriculturist's annual review makes a distinctly encouraging exhibit in spite of the prevalent drought, though it is admitted that the financial stringency may interfere with the early movement of crops and have a temporarily restorative influence on prices.

Present indications point to a crop of 1,750,000,000 bushels of corn, contrasted with 1,650,000,000 last year, and over 2,000,000,000 bushels in the immense yield of two seasons previous. But unless abundant rains prevail throughout the corn belt in August, followed by milder weather, the production may shrink to 1,600,000,000, and may even drop to the size of the 1890 crop, when we harvested less than in any year for a decade, with a single exception. While the area in corn is some 2,000,000 of acres greater than last year in the seven corn surplus States, over a million less acres are devoted to maize than was the case two years ago. The corn crop has been greatly injured so far during August, the first two weeks of the month having wrought ten times as much damage as the whole month of July. Kansas will not raise more than half a crop, having but very little except the eastern quarter, and Nebraska's crop has been seriously curtailed.

The wheat out-turn will not exceed 448,000,000 bushels, compared to 614,000,000 bushels as the average for the past two seasons and 400,000,000 bushels in 1890. Nearly 2,500,000 less acres were devoted to wheat last year, and the bulk of this decrease was in the surplus States, which bid fair to have 78,000,000 fewer bushels than last year and 125,000,000 bushels under the surplus States' product in 1891.

Available supplies of old wheat are 40,000,000 bushels greater than a twelve-month ago, but even allowing that farmers also hold 17,000,000 bushels more old wheat now than then, the total supplies for the ensuing year are only 500,000,000 bushels, or 117,000,000 bushels less than the average of the two previous crops. Our home consumption has averaged 365,000,000 bushels annually, leaving an apparent export surplus of 135,000,000 bushels, against exports last year of 192,000,000 and the season before of 265,000,000 bushels.

This year's acreage of oats was never exceeded except in 1889, when over 865,000,000 bushels were grown on 27,460,000 acres, compared with 620,000,000 bushels on a slightly smaller acreage this season. This is within 40,000,000 bushels of last year's out-turn and just about an average of the three previous crops.

Reviewing the financial situation from the farmers' standpoint, the American Agriculturist concludes:

> The prospect for prices in the early future depends more upon the monetary situation than upon natural conditions, all of which point to causes that should result in higher prices. But the wheat crop is conceded to be over 150,000,000 bushels less than last year in the leading importing countries. Stocks abroad are not materially larger than a year ago, so that the excess of 50,000,000 bushels in the United States in old stocks still leaves an indicated shortage on the bread crop of the world of 100,000,000 bushels of wheat. This allows Russia as good as last year. The European rye crop is hardly a fair average; oats are under average, and potatoes are injured by drought. With no extra surplus of the bread crops and an assured deficit of wheat, the United States are likely to be called upon to export as much wheat as last year, if not more. Indeed, exports have been much heavier since July 1 than last season. The conclusion is justifiable that present prices of all grains are abnormally low, as there is little evidence of our ability to spare as much wheat as Europe wants, unless a large underconsumption prevails in the United States.
>
> The hay crop is believed to represent a value to the farmers of $1,000,000. Corn at 45 cents per bushel comes next with a total of $725,000,000, followed by wheat valued at $300,000,000, if worth 60 cents a bushel, and oats worth $185,000,000, if valued at 30 cents on the farm. Potatoes promise to net an average of 70 or 75 cents per bushel or a total of $125,000,000. This list is about one-half the prospective value of the cotton crop of 1893, reckoned at $35 per bale.

APPEAL TO WESTERN FARMERS.

Asked to Send Provisions to the Hungry Thousands in New York.

The delegates and speakers to the Farmers' Alliance and People's Party State Convention at Sylvan Beach, N. Y., issued the following appeal:

> Farmers of the West: A cry of hunger and starvation comes up from the heart of the great metropolis—New York. It comes from the throat of tens of thousands of American citizens who are without work and without bread. It ascends to heaven amid the noise of the call-board on the stock exchange and the jingling of the gold on the money counters of Wall street. It is intensified by the tears and moans of starving mothers and famishing children. Men are becoming desperate from want, and the gaunt specter of famine stalks abroad unheeded by those who have grown fat by the pillage of labor and the ravaging of industry. The lobby approaching the council chamber of the republic is filled with the paid agents of the moneyed oligarchy ready to debauch the people's representatives and weld the chains of financial slavery still more securely on the neck of labor. The money sharks are unrelenting, the Government indifferent, and the people desperate. By the pangs of hunger, law-abiding, honest men are being transformed into wreckless wolves, and this is the condition described by the enemies of the people. They starve them first in order to furnish an excuse to kill them afterward.
>
> This must not be. The starving poor of New York must not become the prey of designing enemies. Farmers, you must feed them. Well, now, you are poor. We know the labor of your hands is unrequitted and your toil and perseverance unrewarded. But these men and women are your brothers and sisters. Their cause is your cause. Their starvation and your poverty are the joint production of our common enemy. Send speedily of your corn and wheat, your potatoes and breadstuffs, that disorder and bloodshed may be averted. Let the president of each alliance call his alliance and act without delay. Ask your railroads to furnish transportation free as you give your substance. Organize relief committees at once and communicate with Mr. David Rousseau, 310 Mott avenue, New York City, who has been selected by us as the consignee of relief supplies and who will arrange for their prompt and effective distribution.

No Money to Move Crops.

The most serious problem which the Northwest finds itself confronted with at the present time as an incident of the financial depression, is how the crops shall be moved. There is not sufficient money in the country to send the stream of golden grain flowing into the markets, and aid must come from somewhere. Several meetings of bankers and jobbers have been held at Minneapolis, to decide upon a plan of action, but none has been agreed upon. To harvest and move or market the crops requires within the next three months the use of a very large amount of money. It seems to be conceded that the necessary money cannot be obtained from the usual Eastern sources, and that the local banks can do but little toward furnishing the needful in actual cash. To meet the emergency, a proposition has been discussed that the banks of St. Paul and Minneapolis should create a local currency by issuing, on the lines of the tried plan of New York banks, clearing-house certificates in denominations of $5, $10, $20 and $50, which would be loaned to the buyers to be used in payment of wheat to farmers and freights and charges to railways, and thus carry the wheat to market, when the proceeds would be returned to the banks, thus putting them in funds with which to redeem the local currency.

Cutting Down the Telegram.

"John," said the old man in London to his son, "I will give you £100 to go away with. Maybe, as you don't like my business, you will find a better one."

Three weeks later the young man landed in New York. A month later, finding but £6 pounds in his possession, he determined to sail home again. It was best to let his father know beforehand, but how? A letter would be too slow, so off went John to the telegraph office.

"A dollar a word to London, sir," answered the polite clerk to his inquiry.

"I want to tell my father I've spent all my money and I'm sorry and I'm coming home and want him to forgive me and a lot of other things, and I can only pay for six words to tell him everything," said John.

"Cut it short," replied the clerk.

John sat down and thought. An hour after, to his immense astonishment, the old man received the following cablegram:

"Squills, London. Fatted calf for one."—Boston Globe.

Our Rapid Transitory Existence

Is brief enough without our shortening it by seeking medical aid, when we are somewhat unwell, from sources where it is only obtainable with great risk. Even if the old doctrine were true that violent diseases require violent remedies, it does not follow that drastic purgatives, narcotics, powerful "sedatives" of the nervous system are advisable in cases where slight disorders manifestly call for the use of milder means of recovering, involving no subsequent danger, but equally efficient. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters not only relieves, but ultimately and completely relieves disorders of the stomach, liver, bowels and nerves. It is a genuine tonic, healthfully stimulates the kidneys, it is a thorough alterative, and a most effectual preventive of chills and fever and bilious remittent. The atmost confidence can be reposed in the purity and safety of its medicinal ingredients.

Relieved.

A sergeant of an Irish regiment used to dislike one of his men whom we will call Brady. One day, after drill, at which the sergeant had relieved his mind on the squad, and Brady in particular, Brady walks up to the officer—who, by the way, squinted horribly—and says,—

"Sergeant, if I was to call you a squinted son of a busted bomb, what would I get?"

"Faith," says the sergeant, "you'd get six months."

"And if I only thought it?" says Brady.

"Oh, you'd get nothing."

"Well," returned Brady, "by jabers, I think it!"

J. S. PARKER, Fredonia, N. Y., says: "Shall not call on you for the $100 reward, for I believe Hall's Catarrh Cure will cure any case of catarrh. Was very bad." Write him for particulars. Sold by Druggists, 75c.

A Curious Instrument.

The Scandinavian "lur" is a slender bronze horn in the shape of an S. It is found in the bogs of Sweden and the coast of Germany near Denmark. Its length is six to seven feet, and the twist is in two planes. The metal is thin, and cast in sections, which have been fitted together. There is no existing musical instrument like it, and its probable age is 2,000 to 6,000 years. Not long ago some of these ancient "lurs" were played at a concert given by Dr. Angul Hammerich at the National Museum, Copenhagen

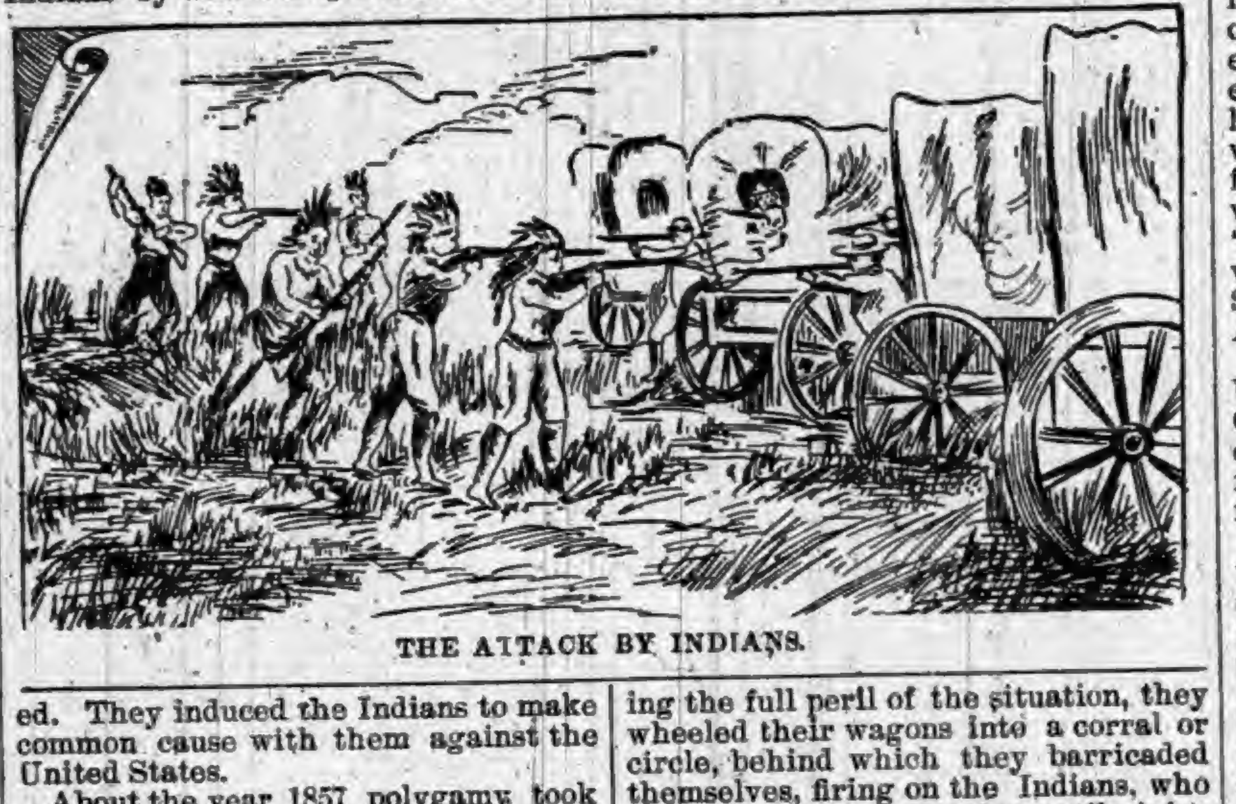
MURDER BY MORMONS

STORY OF THE MOUNTAIN MEADOW MASSACRE.

How One Hundred and Twenty Emigrants, Men, Women and Children, Were Deceived and Slaughtered at the Instance of the Mormon Church.

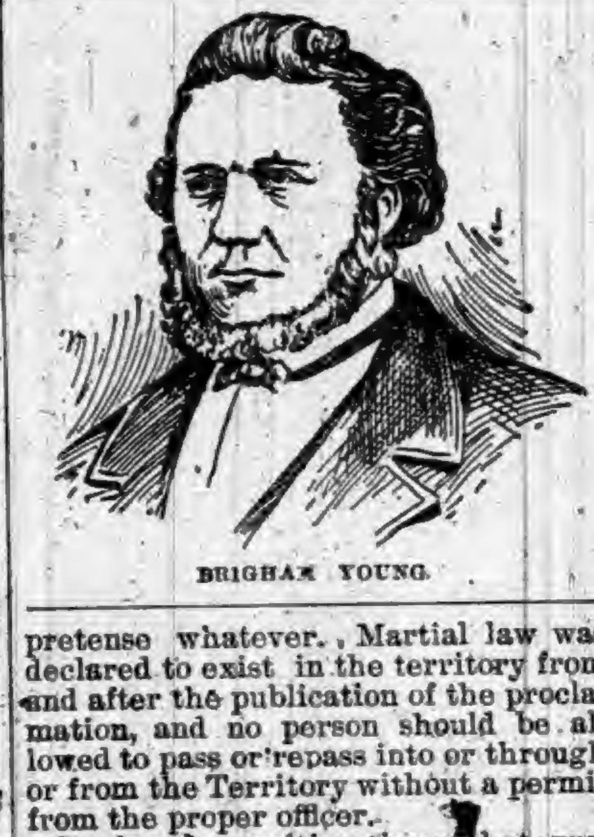
A Tale of Blood.

After the assassination of the Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith, and his brother Hyrum, while confined in the jail at Carthage, Ill., on the 27th day of June, 1844, the followers of the prophet, owing to the undue amount of prejudice and hatred that existed against them, were compelled to leave their homes in Illinois and Missouri and seek an abiding place in a more remote party of the country. On leaving Nauvoo they had not determined where to go, but their destination pointed westward. After a thorough investigation, it was decided to settle in the great Salt Lake Basin, where they are residing at the present day. There they at once commenced the building up of one of the most remarkable and powerful colonies of modern times. Their proselytes amounted to many thousands, who soon came pouring into the New Jerusalem. This condition of things continued until they became powerful and defiant, having organized a government of their own. For a long time they flourished unmolested. They had ingratiated themselves in the confidence and friendship of the Indians by whom they were surrounded. They induced the Indians to make common cause with them against the United States.



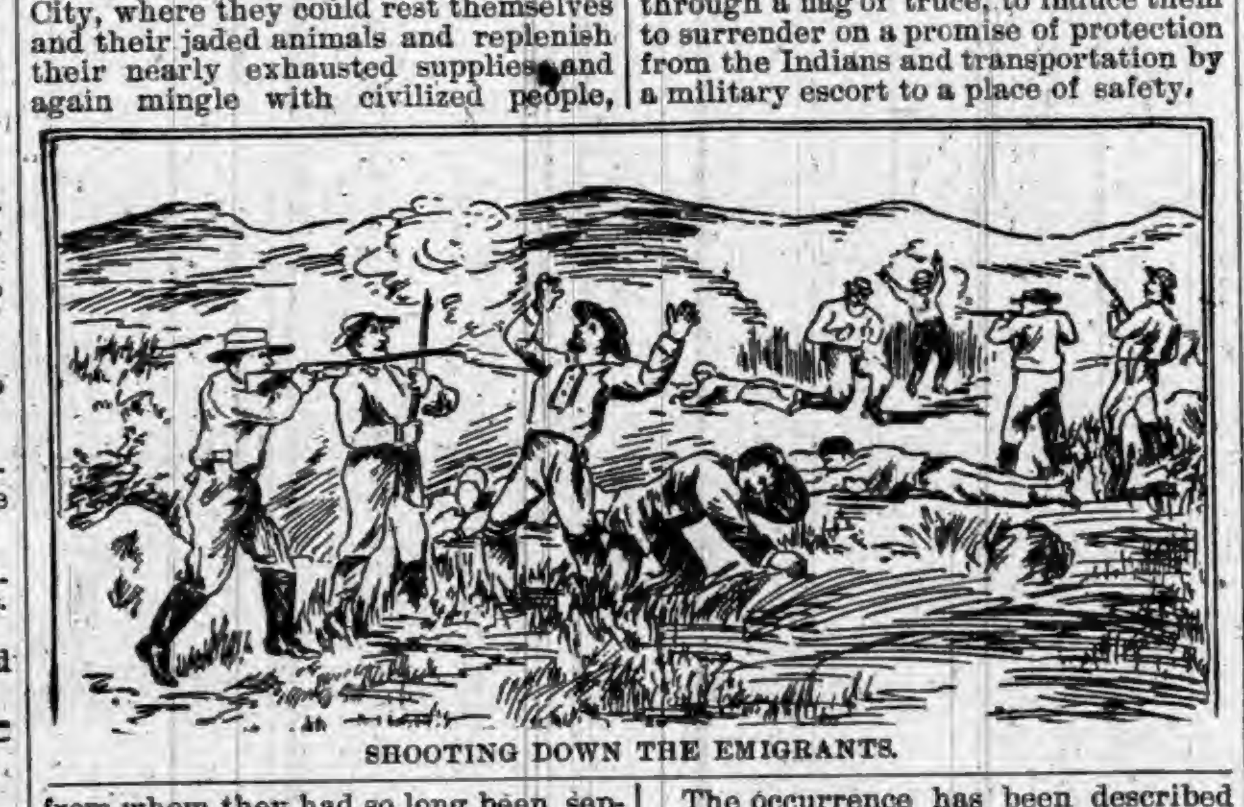
THE ATTACK BY INDIANS.

About the year 1857 polygamy took on its most revolting shape, and crime and immorality became rampant. At last Congress took the matter in hand, and a Territorial Government was formed for Utah and Government officials were sent out to take charge of the territorial affairs. But they could accomplish nothing and they soon realized the fact that their lives were in jeopardy. The Mormons during this time were preparing to resist any further encroachments on the sacred soil of Utah by Gentiles. And to this end Brigham Young, on the 16th day of September, 1857, issued a proclamation forbidding all armed forces from entering the Territory of Utah under any pretense whatever. Martial law was declared to exist in the territory from and after the publication of the proclamation, and no person should be allowed to pass or repass into or through or from the Territory without a permit from the proper officer.



BRIGHAM YOUNG.

During the exciting times that prevailed in the far West that summer, an emigrant train was dragging its slow length over mountain and plain toward California, anxiously looking forward to that "oasis of the desert," Salt Lake City, where they could rest themselves and their jaded animals and replenish their nearly exhausted supplies and again mingle with civilized people, from whom they had so long been separated. These thoughts buoyed up the tired wayfarers as they plodded along. This train was made up in Northern Arkansas, and was known as "Capt. Fancher's train." It was composed of fifty-seven men and sixty-two women and children. They had thirty good wagons and three fine carriages, about sixty horses and mules, and 600 head of cattle. An army officer who camped with them on the Platte, in June, said: "It was without doubt the finest train that ever crossed the plains." To the utter amazement of the emigrants, on reaching Salt Lake City, they were refused admittance, assistance of every kind was withheld from them, and they were abruptly ordered to proceed on their journey.

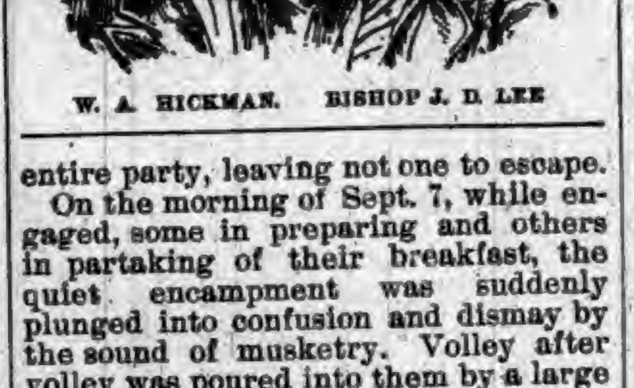


SHOOTING DOWN THE EMIGRANTS.

Mountain Meadows.

At the village of Corn Creek they halted, without any hope of succor, for at this place resided the chief hierarch of Southern Utah. But they made bold to inquire regarding the possibility of their finding forage for their worn-out animals. The official (whose instructions had been sent to him from headquarters) readily informed them that at a spot called the "Mountain Meadows" they would get what they required. To this place they hopefully hastened, where they found good and abundant pasturage for their stock. Here they hoped to rest awhile after their fatigues and disappointments. The Meadows was a small valley, or mountain pass, about five miles in width. At the western end of the Meadows was a large spring, near which the emigrants encamped, several miles from the town of Pinto, in the present county of Washington. Meanwhile the unsuspecting emigrants rested in perfect ignorance of all that was passing about them—of the treachery that was then secretly scheming their utter destruction.

But how was their destruction to be accomplished? With all their power and ready appliances the Mormons realized that they could not safely undertake the destruction of 120 human beings without discovery. So it was determined to employ the assistance of Indians in the bloody work, for the blame of the entire massacre could then be placed upon them. The plot was a shrewd one. The Indians, with a promise of plunder held out to them, were to fall upon and massacre the entire party, leaving not one to escape.



W. A. HICKMAN. BISHOP J. D. LEE

On the morning of Sept. 7, while engaged, some in preparing and others in partaking of their breakfast, the quiet encampment was suddenly plunged into confusion and dismay by the sound of musketry. Volley after volley was poured into them by a large body of Indians from a gulley near by. By this terrific onslaught seven of the emigrants were killed and sixteen wounded, and the remainder overwhelmed with consternation, but only for a moment, for they were brave men, ready for any emergency, quick to resist a surprise. Instantly realizing the full peril of the situation, they wheeled their wagons into a corral or circle, behind which they barricaded themselves, firing on the Indians, who kept up a random shooting until nightfall, accompanied by wild whoops and unearthly yells. Several Indians were killed and a number wounded.

With all its horrors, the attack was a failure. The Mormons were frustrated in their designs. The brave emigrants proved masters of the situation, convincing their enemies that they had resolved to sell their lives as dearly as possible, and there was but little hope of subduing the Arkansans by an open fight.

At this juncture of affairs a messenger was dispatched to Cedar City to inform the authorities there that the emigrants were ably defending themselves at the Mountain Meadows, and could not be routed. Steps had already been taken with reference to obtaining the Lord's will regarding the destruction of the Fancher train. For the day after the train had passed through Cedar City a church council was called by George A. Smith, one of the Twelve Apostles, at which women were present, and after due consideration it was decided by unanimous vote to be the will of the Lord that the emigrants should be destroyed. The manner selected was an Indian massacre, but this had failed. A council of Mormons in the Meadows was called for Thursday evening, at which orders from President Height were read. They directed that the emigrants should be decoyed from their stronghold and exterminated. There being a feeble remonstrance against this order after a slight controversy, they all knelt with elbows touching in a "prayer circle," and asked for divine guidance. The Council remained in session until daybreak, and all the minutiæ of the following day's work were arranged for. A hasty breakfast was dispatched and the preparation for the Lord's work, as they called it, was at once begun.

At first it was thought best to cut off their supplies and starve them into surrender, but this would take too long a time. Finally it was concluded, through a flag of truce, to induce them to surrender on a promise of protection from the Indians and transportation by a military escort to a place of safety.

The occurrence has been described since by an eye-witness, under the solemnity of an oath. A man stepped out of the line of soldiers, and holding up the flag so that all could see it and understand its import, he advanced toward the corral. He was accompanied by two or three others, the most prominent of the number being Bishop John D. Lee, Indian Agent, who had been specially selected by Mormons high in authority to carry out this treacherous act to its swift and bloody conclusion.

Three of the emigrants came out of the corral and went forward to meet the bearers of the truce flag. Lee then declared that he came as a friend, and proceeded to state that the Indians were greatly irritated and were determined to destroy the whole party; that he and the company of soldiers had come there in the hope of assisting them: but after a talk with the Indians he found them very determined, and nothing would pacify them but the surrender by the emigrants of the whole of their provisions, arms, cattle and horses. "If you do this," he assured his discouraged listeners, "the Indians will cease to molest you, and under any circumstances we will protect you from their violence."

MORMON TEMPLE, SALT LAKE CITY.

The Massacre.

At last the specious arguments of Lee prevailed, and the emigrants consented to the terms which alone—so they were repeatedly told—would insure them safety. Lee then arranged the plan of capitulation. The wounded men and the younger children were placed in the wagons and driven past the troops, the women and older children following on foot. The work of destroying these had been assigned to the Indians, who were waiting in ambush for the signal to commence their part of the bloody work. The men were placed in single file, and by the side of each defenseless victim marched a Mormon soldier carrying a loaded musket. Thus they had proceeded for half a mile, when the chosen spot was reached. Here a halt was called, a signal given, and the next moment every soldier had fired on the man beside him, and all the brave men lay dead or desperately wounded. Not one man was left to tell the tale. The Indians meanwhile had sprung from their ambush and fallen upon the women and children, who ran in every direction shrieking and screaming. All the women were soon put to death and nearly all the children. Seventeen of the innocent little creatures were spared because they were so young that no after revelation of the atrocious deed could be feared from them. The dead were not buried

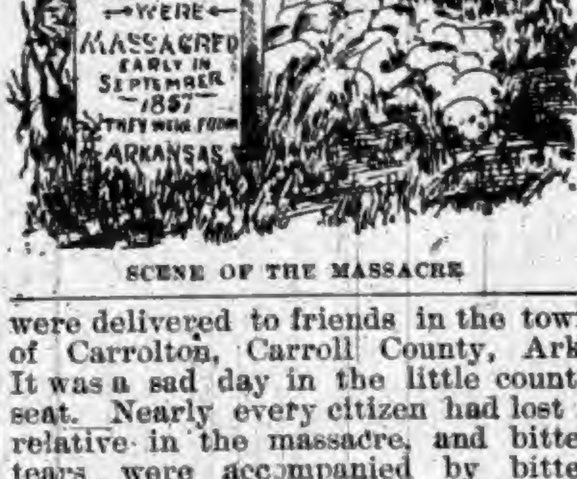
The following spring the remains of the butchered emigrants were subsequently gathered together by Maj. Carleton, United States Commissioner, and a detachment of soldiers. He described the scene as most horrible to look upon. He buried the remains in one common grave, and over them erected a pyramid of stones, surmounted with a cross of red cedar, on which he inscribed: "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." At the foot of the pyramid a stone monument was erected, on which was engraved: "Here 120 men, women, and children were massacred in cold blood early in September, 1857. They were from Arkansas."

This report was also made to the United States Government by Lieut. Carlton. But Brigham Young, as Governor of the Territory of Utah, made no report to the United States Government of this massacre.

Shortly after its erection the cross was torn down, the words obliterated, and in their place was substituted: "Vengeance is mine, and I have had it, saith Brigham Young."

It was charged that this was done by the orders of Brigham Young, but it was never proven. This desecration and infamous boast of a hellish assassination was removed by the soldiers and another cross substituted with the burning Scriptural words: "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."

The little children who had been spared were given over to the Indians, no doubt, to lend color to the report at once spread by the Mormons that the massacre was the work of the red men. These children were subsequently recovered from the Indians, and, on June 29, 1858, were sent East overland, in spring wagons, escorted by soldiers. Every possible provision was made for their comfort, and in due time they were delivered to friends in the town of Carrolton, Carroll County, Ark. It was a sad day in the little county seat. Nearly every citizen had lost a relative in the massacre, and bitter tears were accompanied by bitter curses on the murderers. The children were all cared for and brought up by relatives and friends living in the neighborhood of their former homes.



I will repay, saith The Lord

SCENE OF THE MASSACRE

Execution of John Lee.

Such a monster crime could not be forever kept from the knowledge of mankind. Although for a long time the opinion prevailed that the Indians had committed the massacre, it was not long until the true facts in the case were developed. The Mormon Church had ordered the destruction of the "Fancher train," and Bishop John D. Lee was appointed to execute the order. John D. Lee, being the chief actor in the bloody drama, was the first one called out to answer for the crime. Three different trials were had in his case, the jury each time failing to agree. The witnesses in the case being principally Mormons, dared not tell the truth, for an avenging sword hung over their heads, hence the trials were mere farces. The excitement produced by these trials in the public mind was running high, and a general uprising against the Mormons was threatened if the courts failed to convict the guilty parties. The church authorities became alarmed for their own safety, and decided to sacrifice Lee, and on the next trial the testimony against him was overwhelming. The witnesses made a clean breast of the whole story, describing minutely the main facts of the horrid tragedy, which the writer has without bias faithfully narrated. Lee now realized that the church had deserted him and that he was lost. He broke down completely and openly cursed the Mormon leaders. The jury was out three hours, and brought in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. Judge Boreman informed the prisoner that, under the statute, he had the choice of being hung, shot or beheaded. Lee said: "I prefer to be shot." He was accordingly sentenced, and on March 23 the sentence was executed in the Mountain Meadows, at the scene of the massacre. At the last moment Lee confessed that he had killed five of the emigrants with his own hands, and that all the charges alleged against him in the indictment were true. He made a short speech, declaring his faith in Mormonism as taught by Joseph Smith, and his assurance of a place in the Mormon heaven. He then sat down on his coffin, a short prayer was offered, the order to fire was given, five rifles were discharged and he fell dead without a struggle.

In Madagascar.

The island of Madagascar has two distinct climates, two classes of natives, and two classes of fauna and flora. Along the coast it is tropical and malarious, and the natives are darker and larger than in the interior. The interior is a high tableland, and mountainous. There the climate is cooler and the natives smaller and lighter in color than on the coast. But in the interior they are more intelligent, and they rule the island.

LOVE is work, not sweet words.

Motives and Principles.

People act more from impulse and instinct than reason, or convictions. The calm deliberative man often gains the prizes in life, but not generally so. The rushing venturesome fellow plunges ahead either breaking down, or going over everything in his way. A man who waits for success to come to him without trying to make it will hurry long and find little. The man whose motives and principles are good must employ with might his energy and discretion to make them come to useful account. If we want to be beloved, and trusted we must show that our motives and principles are worthy of belief and confidence, otherwise, doubt and surmises will make us unsettled and undecided whether to approve or disapprove the circumstances and their course to consequent events of direct or undirect action. The outward and visible signs do not show the real man, but the inward trend of thought and feelings makes the man of intrinsic worth. It is always a mark and indication of good motives and principles in any one who is steadfast and straight-forward in what he says and does for a sense of duty and right, nothing fearing to show or seeking to hide. It is not the deed a man does but the way he does, it should plead for the man's compensation in doing it. Men of good principles are true to their convictions and not false to any one.

A Smuggler's Trick.

Nearly everything made or produced outside of France is taxed before it can enter that country, and there is a special tax to permit its entrance to Paris. Upon spirits and wine the duty is considerable, and the authorities are exceedingly vigilant in collecting it. This is a point at which vigilance is quite necessary, judging from what one hears as to the methods of smuggling in vogue. We are told that during the cholera scare liquors were surreptitiously brought in by means of coffins, and we have heard of one enterprising liquor dealer who cheated the government for a long time by means of a dummy footman. That is, he had a wooden contrivance on the seat of his carriage shaped and dressed like a footman, and the innocent-looking luxury was filled, not with animal spirits, but with the kind which at the gates of Paris are held to be contraband.

Literary Piracy.

There are a great many pirates in the publishing business in this country, more's the pity. When Walter Besant was in Chicago he saw, lavishly displayed in the windows of a book store, copies of a gaudily-covered work entitled "The Chaplain's Secret," by Walter Besant. The novelist could not remember that he had ever written such a book, although he was the author of "The Chaplain of the Fleet." To make sure, he bought a copy and found that he had not written it. Then he went to the publisher and politely requested that the book be withdrawn or that his name be stricken from the title page. The publisher impudently refushed to comply with the request, and Mr. Besant went away disgusted. If there are no laws to protect authors from such usage as this there ought to be.—Washington Evening News.

A Curious Dialect.

A Berlin magazine describes the negro-English of the west coast of Africa. Whoever means to do business on the west coast of Africa must learn this curious language, be he a German or a Briton. Luckily, this is not very difficult. The whole language comprises only about three hundred words, and these people despise every one who does not speak it. The extreme simplicity of the idiom is well illustrated by the following examples:

Dem steamer go sleep here for night, the steamer will anchor here to-night; dem steamer him belly be full, the steamer is fully loaded; dem steamer be hungry, the steamer has still room for cargo; when sun come for bed, when the sun sets.

The Professor's Counsel.

"My friend, let me give you a word of advice. Be kind to the dull boys."

"Certainly," said the young teacher; "but if they won't learn their lessons?"

"Be kind to them, pet them, make them your warmest friends."

"But—"

"No buts about it. Win their love if you can. Some day, in after years, when you are old and helpless like me, you may need the assistance of a wealthy man."

"Of course; but—"

"Well, the dull boys are the ones that get rich."

IT is queer, but a lively bolt often results in a deadlock.

A Disagreement.

Outside a one-man band was awakening the echoes by a strenuous and sustained effort.

Inside there was scarcely less harmony.

His bosom was heaving tumultuously, while the wife of his bosom had thrown herself upon the sofa in an attitude of deep dejection.

"Why—"

She was tearfully reproachful in tone.

—"do you always disagree with me?"

He looked pained.

"My love," he protested, in evident distress, "when have I disagreed with you?"

"Why, this very minute I asked you if you didn't think the lady in the next house was really a better cook than I am, and you said yes."

She wept so softly that the one-man band made the evidence of her grief inaudible.—Detroit Tribune.

All in the Stomach of an Ostrich.

An ostrich which recently died full of years had an extraordinary collection of articles in its stomach. Some of these were more suitable for a gunsmith's store than a paunch, however tough and adapted to the digestion of obdurate food. But the strangest of all, tossing about in the gastric juices, was a prayer book. The scoffing may say it was a very orthodox bird, and of a literary turn of stomach. That the volume should have been decipherable after being engulphed for a considerable period affords hope to careless people who, in the neighborhood of a cassowary, might chance to lose their pocketbook well padded with bills. This, however, is not the usual way in which pocket money goes. There are many forms of ostrich more annoying than the one with feathers.—San Francisco Call.

Cæsar's False Teeth.

Those who imagine that the care of teeth and the replacement of the natural grinders with false ones is "something new under the sun," may be surprised to learn that artificial teeth were made of ivory, placed on plates of the same material, and held together and in place by gold wires and rivets from 500 to 1,000 years before Christ.

Herodotus, "the father of history," tells us that the Egyptians of the fifth dynasty understood the diseases of the teeth and their treatment. There are passages in history to lead one to the belief that both Cæsar and Antony wore artificial teeth.

Frightened the Shark.

Thomas McDermott, an English man-of-war's man, has received a Stanhope medal for saving two of his comrades from imminent peril of being devoured by a shark while sailing off the coast of Zanzibar. The two men were bathing and had dived out of a boat when a large shark was seen within six feet of them and making toward them. Without an instant's hesitation McDermott, with all his clothes on, jumped overboard right over the shark, and by the splash created frightened the fish from its prey, thereby giving time to his comrades to regan their boat.

Reviving Frozen Butterflies.

Insects that spend most of their lives in a torpid or semi-torpid condition are not always killed by being frozen. Instances are numerous of travelers in the Rocky Mountains finding butterflies above the snow-line, frozen stiff. When carried to a warmer climate or into a cabin they often completely revive. Their normal vital power is so low that a degree of cold that would prove fatal to other creatures does not kill them.

The New Bread

As endorsed and recommended by the New-York Health Authorities.

Royal Unfermented Bread is peptic, palatable, most healthful, and may be eaten warm and fresh without discomfort even by those of delicate digestion, which is not true of bread made in any other way.

To make One Loaf of Royal Unfermented Bread:

1 quart flour, 1 teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful sugar, 2 heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder,* cold boiled potato about the size of large hen's egg, and water. Sift together thoroughly flour, salt, sugar, and baking powder; rub in the potato; add sufficient water to mix smoothly and rapidly into a stiff batter, about as soft as for pound-cake; about a pint of water to a quart of flour will be required—more or less, according to the brand and quality of the flour used. Do not make a stiff dough, like yeast bread. Pour the batter into a greased pan, 4½ by 8 inches, and 4 inches deep, filling about half full. The loaf will rise to fill the pan when baked. Bake in very hot oven 45 minutes, placing paper over first 15 minutes' baking, to prevent crusting too soon on top. Bake immediately after mixing. Do not mix with milk.

 Perfect success can be had only with the Royal Baking Powder, because it is the only powder in which the ingredients are prepared so as to give that continuous action necessary to raise the larger bread loaf.*

* * *

The best baking powder made is, as shown by analysis, the "Royal." Its leavening strength has been found superior to other baking powders, and, as far as I know, it is the only powder which will raise large bread perfectly.

THE JOHN ROBINSON SHOWS.

Sixty-nine Years Under one Continuous Management.

Some poet has said or sung, "the day may come, the day may go, the world moves on forever." Like the world, the John Robinson Show for sixty-nine years has been steadily moving on its never ceasing march. Numberless shows have come and gone since it has had its beginning, yet in all these years it has never lost a single season, never missed its appointments, and never failed to gratify to the fullest extent the expectations of the public. Each year growing apace, each year bountifully adding to its multifarious attractions, it comes as a vision of enchantment, and reviving the memory of past enjoyments, it present fresh surprises, fresh delights and fresh attractions. So will it be with the season that is with us For the current year the management have associated an unprecedented auxiliary to their already vast schedule of enjoyable features and one which cannot fail to invite patronage, only limited by the capacity of the canvas.

We allude to the production on a scale of opulent splendor never precedented, of the production of the new Biblical Spectacle, Solomon, His Temple and the Queen of Sheba—a spectacle prolific in grand scenic effect, impressive in pomp and pageantry, realistic in its reproductions of the patriarchal era, sacred in its biblical associations, and enchanting in its ballets, poses, marches, and groupings. The visit of the Queen to King Soloman's Court, with her immense and richly costumed retinue, the Judgment of Solomon, the Sacrifices in the Temple, Solomon's Seven Hundred Wives, the Grand Procession to meet Sheba's young and lovely Queen, the Walls and City of Jerusalem, the Inner Courts of Solomon's Temple, Mount Moriah and the City of David, the Great throne of Ivory, the Sacred Ark of the Covenant, the bewitching Ballet of Lovely Cresset Girls and myriad features that cannot be given in detail, are the attractions this wondrous Spectacle presents. With a feature so desirable added to its admirable Four ring Circus, the vast menagerie of rare and seldom-seen wild animals, and the great Royal Roman Hippodrome, the many canvases, spacious though they be, should and will be packed from center to circumference, by eager and gratified spectators during the sojourn of the John Robinson Show.

The show will exhibit at Auburn, Ind., Aug. 25.

Chicago and the Fair.

Interesting pointers for those Who visit it and Information for those Who Don't.

Looking over the city in the vicinity of the fair ground, on every hand is seen buildings of various sizes, intended for hotels or boarding houses. Many are finished and occupied, while now and then one is seen half completed and abandoned. And no doubt many of those that are occupied are not paying. The fact is, Chicago had about enough hotels and boarding houses to accommodate the crowd without building more.

IN THE GROUNDS.

About the first thing one does is to look around on the scene of magnificent grandeur, a scene such as the world never saw before and may never see again, for the undertaking is one that is not likely to be attempted again by any other city or country. After a hasty glance at these wonders of buildings and landscapes, the visitor, if he be a Hoosier, turns northward to the Indiana state building. Indiana has no exhibit in its state building. The building was made only for the comfort and convenience of its people when they visit the fair. It is a fine structure, beautiful and convenient, and not only Hoosiers, but people of all sorts crowd its wide verandas all day long in hot weather. The first floor is for a general meeting and visiting place, as are also, the verandas. On this floor also are rooms for comfort, for checking parcels without charge, and on this floor is kept the register, in which all people from this state are requested to write their names. On the second floor are the offices and the large reading room in which meetings are held, such as the two recent gatherings of Hoosier editors, and the reception rooms are across the hall, On the third floor is the large room with its chairs and tables where lunch can be eaten. This is a great convenience and a saving to our people. We can carry a box of lunch into the grounds, get it checked here, free, and at noon come and get it, go to the third floor and set at tables and eat it. In this room we can buy coffee, ice water, iced tea or lemonade, which are the only things that are sold in the building. Near by is the large California state building made on the general plan of the old "Mission" buildings built many years ago in that then province of Spain by the old missionaries or priests. It looks queer among the modern buildings around it. Near it are planted immense palms and other trees and plants of the tropics. Inside, it is full of wonderful things, minerals, specimens of wood, dried and fresh fruits, wines, etc. There are large globes, pyramids, etc., covered with oranges and lemons, and an immense horse and rider in armor, both covered with dried prunes. On the second floor are various exhibits, like that of the Wells and Fargo express, which has an interesting historical feature. There are the old iron chests formerly used to carry gold from the mines, and near by we see the arms of the messengers who guarded them, some of whom lost their lives in doing so. On the other side from this in the same gallery, articles made by Indian women, and other strange mineral and vegetable productions of the state are sold to visitors as curiosities and articles of use. One of the ladies here selling lace work and needle work made by Indian women is Miss Jennie Ryerson, the lady made so well known to the readers of Helen Hunt Jackson's story "The Little Lace Peddler," in Harper's Bazar a few years ago. This lady is an old time friend of the COURIER folks, and a great traveler, being acquainted with the west from Mexico to Alaska. She is still selling lace and has a world of interesting items for all who can spare time to talk with her. Illinois has near by, the largest state building on the grounds. It is larger and more attrtctive than the great exposition building that used to hold forth on the lake front. It is filled in all parts with displays from all over the state, including all sorts of farm products, minerals and metals, as well as manufactured articles, relics, etc. Like several other state buildings, there are pictures, ornaments, etc., made in wheat, oats, corn and millet, some being very beautiful and artistic.

A trip around the north part of the grounds will enable one to see all the state buildings proper. Only the middle, western, and a few southern states make displays of their products. The others, including the eastern states, have built for the comfort and convenience of their people, on the Indiana plan. Vermont has a queer little building that you enter through a sort of gate, then pass a wide door, stepping over a wide stone threshhold and you are in a little court, with the sky above you, a paved floor under your feet, some "lockers" or seats solidly fixed against the wall around, on which we suppose the occupants are to rest. But no one sat on them and only one or two people were in the cramped little rooms inside A fine fountain played in the middle of the court. The building itself contains little to detain the visitor It represents a "villa" or dwelling of the old Romans in Pompeii.

Kansas has a large building, showing an abundance of its varied products, nicely arranged, on both floors. There are plenty of the animals, including waterfowl and land birds, stuffed and mounted, and a large area is occupied by the valuable collection of stuffed animals belonging to the state museum. This is very valuable and includes not only Kansas products, but those from over the United States and Canada. Large moose, the great mountain sheep, the large white mountain goats, buffalo, coyotes, many kinds of foxes, and a couple of prairie wolves fighting and showing their teeth over the partly eaten carcass of a buffalo—the remains perfectly dry and so preserved these many years. It is the last piece of real buffalo carcass we are likely to see. Up at the floor of the second story a model train of cars is running around the circular opening, its tiny whistle never failing to "toot" as it nears its home station. It looks natural.

The Idaho building is another queer one. It is a large, two story log structure, with large fire places on both stories. You enter through and under a large arch of rough stone, a massive affair that can be closed with a strong, open-work gate. Then a few steps farther on, we pass into the building proper. Everything is rustic and savors of the wilds of the frontier. Yet one cannot believe there was ever a log house like this It seems more like a creature of the imagination of some border genius—some educated misanthrope who had fled from a society he had tired of, or that had tired of him, and had carried his cultivated tastes and his disappointments into the outskirts of the country, and later, had invented this structure to misrepresent his new state at the world's fair. We cannot believe it represents a real home. The big bear traps of steel used as andirons would settle that.

The great state of New York gave over half a million for its exhibit at the fair, and a good portion of this was spent on its state building and its furnishings. It is a "real" building, strong and substantial, and will be given to the city when the fair is over. It is an exact copy of the fine old residence of the Van Renssalaers that stood in New York City till recently. It is a very aristocratic mansion, with its large entrance hall, its broad stairways richly carpeted, as are also its floors. The furniture is rich and costly, some of it of ancient days. On the walls are pictures of the old time aristocrats who evidently outshone in the magnificence of their surroundings, the more frequently mentioned F. F. V s of Virginia and the South.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Dan Leas and wife are at the world's fair,

Mrs. Ryan Clutter has been in Waterloo for a few days.

Mrs and Mrs. Gill returned from Chicago Tuesday night, where they have spent a week or more.

Rev. Klotz has been building another cement walk. This time it is on Franklin street fronting his residence.

Miss Ada Beck was married to Mr. Prosser August 16. The latter is one of the telegraph operators at this point.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. DeLong, of Newville, spent Sunday here with Dr. Chamberlain's family, the ladies being sisters.

Douglas Kelley and wife, and his sister Carrie, of Auburn, are away on their usual annual trip to see the latter's farm near Syracuse, Kosciusko county.

Ed Blattner was here last week. He reports the family well. His son Frank, now an attorney at Tacoma, Ore., is doing well and rising in his profession.

A number of our people attended the lecture of Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus on "Savonarola," last evening, either by private conveyance or otherwise, at Auburn.

Ellsworth Montavon, who does such good work sprinkling our streets, made his appearance Monday with a fine new sprinkler, new shape, newly painted and new all over.

Mr. Bundy returned Tuesday from Chicago, where he has spent five weeks visiting a married daughter and sons, as well as taking in the beauties and wonders of the great fair.

The stockholders of the fair met here last Friday and unanimously agreed to have the cattle stables built up as far as needed They are bound to make the fair a success this year, and the prospects are surely good.

Another grand excursion train to Chicago passed through Waterloo Tuesday, stopping for passengers. The round trip ticket was at a much reduced rate, good for ten days Three coaches from the north, carrying 107 passengers, were connected with the main line here.

A man registered at the Locke Hotel a week or so ago, as Frank Peabody, of Ft. Wayne. He got a rig at Robinson's livery barn and went up into the edge of Michigan, but did not return. Later it was found that he had left the buggy and had pawned the horse for $6. He has not been found.

The Long Distance Telephone line along the north side of town has a test station at the Lower residence across from the fair ground, the lines running into the house, where an office is kept This is to enable them to test the working of the line at any point. They have another test station near Toledo.

The Ft. Wayne District of the Northern Indiana Conference Free Methodist church hold their district campmeeting at Dundee, Ind., Aug. 23 to 29. Rev. E. Mathews, of Ft. Wayne, will be present Rev. Kemp and family and perhaps others from Waterloo went Tuesday morning, taking provisions, bedding and tent, prepared to stay to the end.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church having earned the necessary number of dollars, have bought a carpet for their church, made it and laid it down in good order. Woman is called the weaker vessel, but she does an immense amount of hard work. The audience room is now very pleasant and attractive, with everything new and fresh, paper and carpets, and all needful accessories A new pastor also, all in harmony and sweet accord. Dr. Fry is a refined, cultured man, seemingly very spiritual. Surely much good work should be done for the Master.

Capt. Samuel Edge, who had been sick for some weeks and lingered unconscious and seemingly near death for many days, died Wednesday evening, the 16th, at 7 o'clock. The funeral took place from the residence at half past three Thursday afternoon. He was dressed in his officer's uniform and was buried by the military, according to army custom. Three sons and a daughter and a sister of the deceased were present, besides other relatives. The daughter, the last to depart, left Monday of this week for her home in Missouri.

BUTLER.

Mrs. Weber is reported quite sick. Her mother, Mrs. Helwig, is also quite poorly.

J. A. Campbell has conquered the two wheel carriage and can be seen most evenings distancing many of his young competitors.

The factories are forging ahead, notwithstanding the hard times and scarcity of money. Our bank also seems to have an extended lease of life.

We have four drinking fountains on our streets now, where a good cold drink of the best and purest water the earth affords can be obtained, day or night.

Destructive fires are prevailing in many places near the railroad. Frank Reynolds suffered severely again last week from sparks from a passing engine.

Mrs Hines, our popular milliner, is spending a few days at the fair. Several other Butler people are there also. Among the number are John Plowe and wife.

The M. E. Sabbath school had a very enjoyable picnic at Gypsy Hill, three miles east of Butler last Tuesday. The attendance was very good and old and young enjoyed the occasion.

Milton Jones, of Franklin, suffered the entire loss of his clover huller by fire from the engine or friction on the C. C. Boyer farm, now owned by a Mr. Maurer. Mr. Maurer lost a few bushels of clover seed, a wagon, etc It was a close call for the entire field of seed. During this extremely dry period it is almost courting disaster to run an old rary threshing engine into a dry stubble field or near farm buildings. The smallest spark may cause a costly conflagration.

Marshal Dare, who has been laid up with an abscess in his leg for several weeks, is able to be around again and will soon be well enough to attend to the duties of his office.

While Dan Roan, our nightwatchman, was going to the hose house the night of the fire, he fell over an old wagon that was lying in the street and lacerated his ear in a horrible manner. His arms and body were also very badly bruised

James R. Anderson, of Newburg, W. Va., was in the city several days last week, the guest of Engineer Sembower and family. "Jim" was a resident of this place about 12 years ago, having worked for G. W. Lackey in the dry goods store.

Manager Wagner has secured the Labadie Rowell company to give an entertainment in his opera house Sept. 2 This company is too well known for us to say anything about them. They will produce "Faust and Marguerite" and all lovers of this kind of entertainment should attend.

Messrs. Webster & Co., S Townsend & Co., Wilson Swihart and Clark & Feeters are putting down cement walks in front of their business places. We think the property holders on Franklin, Cowan and Ijams streets should also look after their sidewalks and see that they are repaired. There is nothing that does more for the good of a town than good walks.

Fifteen of Mrs. Em. Gilbert's friends took tea with her Saturday evening, from St. Johns and Auburn.

Will Zeigler and wife and Charlie Wyatt and wife, of Auburn were the guests of D. W. Wyatt and wife

Owing to some little sickness and so many threshing, the attendance at the picnic was not so large as heretofore, but as to sociability, it was up to high average. Rev. W. L Meese delivered one of his S. S. speeches, advancing a great many leading thoughts. All will be benefitted that were fortunate to be in hearing distance. Also our township Pres. rattled off one of his lively speeches.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

You will remember the condition I was in five years ago, when I was afflicted with a combination of diseases, and thought there was NO HELP FOR ME I tried all kinds of medicines, and scores of eminent physicians. My nerves were prostrated, producing dizziness, heart trouble and all the ills that make life miserable. I commenced to take DR. MILES' NERVINE and in three months I WAS PERFECTLY CURED. In my travels each year, when I see the thousands of physical wrecks, suffering from nervous prostration, taking prescriptions from local physicians who have no knowledge of their case, and whose death is certain, I feel like going to them and saying, "GET DR. MILES' NERVINE AND BE CURED." In my profession, where there are so many sufferers from overwork, mental prostration and nervous exhaustion, brought on by the character of the business engaged in, I would recommend "MILES' NERVINE" as a sure cure for all suffering from these causes.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of Its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1872—Continued.

Isaac Roth this season came upon the street with a sprinkling wagon and brought grateful relief to resident and business men, from the clouds of foul dust usually raised by sudden winds or passing vehicles. Later B. Williams essayed to run a sprinkler to be paid by voluntary weekly contributions but failed of proper support and, finally, two persons who deserve especial credit for needful, cheap and faithful performance of this public duty, placed two wagons on the streets and made sprinkling a business Those persons were Perry Blodgett and James his son whose teams continually passing along main street, during the long and heated summer days, laid bacteric dust, cooled the sultry atmosphere and permitted open doors and windows without injury to house furniture or store goods. The firm to whom the Blodgett's sold their wagons &c, and which have done the work of sprinkling during the season of 1893, deserve much credit for their thorough work.

A well known and familiar character of Auburn, in 1872 was John W. Britton who placed upon the street a fine new transfer wagon and made a fairly good investment. Britton went west, but lately returned a different man, no longer athletic and active but broken by sickness and crippled by rheumatism.

The season was remarkable from a singular disease known as "the epizootic" which swept over the country and everywhere affected horses many dying, of it, thousands were made worthless and other thousands materially injured. In its violence and general prevalence it brought about almost a cessation of business, and in cities compelling novel substitutes for horse power, aptly illustrated American fertility of resources in emergency. The stable of the farmer was no more exempt than that of the livery keeper. Many fine horses were ruined in DeKalb county, and in Auburn the entire stable of Frank Ryan suffered more or less from the strange disorder.

A beetle migrating eastward from far away Colorado fed upon and ruined the potato vines in gardens and in fields and but for paris green and other poisons would have made efforts at culture of the nutrient tuber nugatory. Added to this pest, the Auburn gardener saw his currant and gooseberry bushes so stripped of foilage and destroyed that their healthy fruits have become a rarity and a luxury.

During the spring of 1872, a small pox scare spread through the town, closing the schools, quarantining the place to other localities village and country and temporarily causing a paralysis of business. It proved for the most part causeless and in this knowledge, a notice was signed by all the doctors in Auburn and published, to the effect that one or two cases of existing sickness were but a mild form of varioloid.

The family of Samuel Lauferty, with whom the supposed pest had obtained lodgment were the heaviest sufferers and merited general public sympathy and consideration.

On a subsequent occasion, a panic of less extent occasioned by grossly exaggerated rumors of infectious disease was experienced but quickly died away when the prompt confident measures for suppression of the malady if any where found to exist, were made known.

Like a run upon a bank or slander of a good man's name by a thoughtless or malicious utterance, so the false rumors of cholera or some such scourge not infrequently creates a striking semblance to the dread reality and this knowledge should stand as a warning against indiscreet expression.

Auburn since 1836, has many times honored this nation's natal day but on July 4, 1872, the Ninety-sixth anniversary of Independence, there was held in the town, a celebration to which was gathered the largest assemblage of people on any occasion since the founding of the county. A noticeable feature connected with the program of exercise following prayer by Rev. J. B. Fowler and reading of the Declaration by Herman P. Colegrove, was an oration by Prof. William L. Penfield, of Adrian College, Michigan.

It was in this public manner that Mr. Penfield was introduced to a people with whom it was his destiny and good fortune to cast his lot for upwards of a score of years. In recognition of the worth and eloquence of the oration, it was accorded publication in full in the columns of the AUBURN COURIER.

Influenced by favorable reception and attractive possibilities, Mr. Penfield began here the practice of the law, formed successive partnerships with D. D. Moody, C. Emanuel and H. J. Shafer, and extended reputation with widening practice till he stands a prominent figure in the ranks of his high profession.

In early days, the farming interest had found expression in holiday assemblage near Auburn to exhibit their best stock and produce and enjoy as well as profit by the two or three days meeting, but with the expiration of lease of grounds and lack of effort, the old association had become dissolved. For some years no fair had been held in the county and the community felt that agriculture should have its days of representation, mechanicism its display and lovers of the race course, their opportunity to back their favorites in tests of speed.

The feeling in favor of founding a permanent County Fair found practical expression among leading citizens residents of Waterloo, and vicinity and was heartily endorsed by the best farmers of the county.

The apathy of Auburn people otherwise engaged, lost to them an opportunity that Waterloo citizens improved to great subsequent advantage. An organization still known as "Northeastern Indiana Agricultural Association" was formed in May with a capital stock of $10,000. A committee designated to purchase grounds and upon them to erect suitable buildings, soon selected and bought a part of what was known as the Holmes farm, lying near to and northeast of Waterloo. The tract, comprising thirty-one acres, cost the association $3,100. The grounds were surveyed, essential improvements completed, and a half-mile track laid.

The first fair was held Oct. 16 to 19, and proved in all respects a great success. Entries were many in all classes and widely varied. The displays of mechanical and other work were fine and extensive. The racing was spirited, the attendance large, and receipts aggregating $2,500, were substantial evidence of financial prosperity.

The first officers of this fair were: Dr. Chamberlain, president; R. Wes McBride, secretary, and B B. Long, treasurer. Their management, seconded by an executive committee consisting of Messrs. McClellan, Bowman, Leas and Blair. was largely instrumental in gaining and retaining a popular confidence through which this fair for many successive seasons grew in favor and widened in reputation beyond state limits.

As, in the dull days before a railroad, loads of produce passed through Auburn to find sale at the commercial metropolis of the county, so in 1872 and years afterward, on the great days of this fair, an almost continuous stream of vehicles from the southwest townships passed along Main street going to and returning from "the fair at Waterloo," and the countyseat itself paid unwilling tribute to the enterprise of her neighbor by a general attendance.

FROM EVERY CORNER

OF THE WORLD THIS FRESH NEWS WAS GLEANED.

A Cyclone Sweeps Over Savannah, Ga., Crushing Buildings, Wrecking Boats and Deluging the Country—Better Times Coming—Carter Harrison to Wed.

STORM SWEPT.

Savannah, Ga., Almost Wrecked.

A special from Savannah, Ga., says: This city was visited by a fearful cyclone Tuesday night. A view of the city at daylight next morning revealed a scene of wreck and ruin that surpassed that of the great hurricane of 1881. The ruin at quarantine is immeasurable. Nothing is standing where one of the finest stations on the South Atlantic was twenty-four hours ago except the doctor's house, and in this weather the fearful gale is miraculous. The wharves are gone, the new fumigation plant, which has cost the city so much money, is at the bottom of the sea and nine vessels, which were waiting there for release to come to the city, are high and dry in the marsh and no doubt will be totally wrecked. The Cosnane was the only vessel which managed to keep afloat.

The tug, Paulson, arrived in the city at 5 o'clock. She brought sixty passengers from Tybee. Mr. Revers, one of them, stated that four negroes engaged in clearing the railroad track were drowned. A sailor and the cabin boy on the schooner Harsh, which is on her side on North Beach, are drowned. It is reported that eight of the crew of a terrapin sloop which went ashore on the south beach were drowned. The Hotel Tybee is considerably damaged in front. Her standards are gone. The K. of P. club house was washed away. All the bath houses are gone. The railroad pavilion is all right, so is Capt. Blun's house. The Noylor is damaged slightly. The Butler House is gone. Mr. Starr's house was washed into the woods. The Atlantic Club House is all right. The Ranch and Rambler club houses were wrecked. The railroad track is cleaned out. Henry Green's house was burned. Geo. Bossell's cottage was swept out to sea. The north end is practically cleaned out. The water swept this part of the island. Rocks were carried out 200 to 500 feet. The Chambers Club House is badly damaged. The pavilions on the beach are gone; so is the switchback. An empty train is in the woods.

Better Times Coming.

Indianapolis special: There has been a marked change in the industrial situation in the manufacturing suburbs of this city within the past week. Altogether a much better feeling prevails. Several of the larger establishments have increased their working forces and many of them have received orders which indicate a more healthy feeling among the buyers and an increasing confidence for the future. The car works, which discharged a number of its men when the financial panic first appeared, is running with nearly a full force, and the Cerealine Works has resumed with its full complement of men. Other industries are preparing to resume, and though the utmost care is experienced in accepting orders, it is believed that business will justify a general resumption between the first and middle of September.

A Priest's Generous Offer.

In a sermon to his congregation, the Rev. Victor A. Schnell of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church, Terre Haute, Ind., said: "There is great distress in this parish owing to the hard times. I have a deposit in the bank which comprises my savings for some years, added to the pension I get as a Union soldier, and this is at the disposal of the destitute so long as it holds out."

Carter Harrison Will Wed.

New Orleans special: Frank T. Howard, brother of Miss Annie Howard, has announced that the marriage of Miss Howard to Mayor Carter H. Harrison of Chicago, will take place in the latter part of September at the summer home of the Howards at Biloxi, the watering place of the gulf coast in the Southern part of Mississippi.

Wreck in Michigan.

The south-bound passenger train on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad was wrecked near Anberg, Mich. Engineer Ainsworth had one leg cut off, and the fireman, whose name cannot be learned, was fatally injured.

Will Coin Gold.

Secretary Carlisle has ordered that the United States mints at Philadelphia and San Francisco be manned to their full capacity. Both mints will be utilized for the coining of gold bullion.

Racing Results in Death.

At Huntington, Ind., while the drivers of teams attached to a water tank and a farm wagon were indulging in a race on the highway, the tank was overturned and fell upon George H. Buzzard, killing him.

The Sherman Act.

The House, by a vote of 239 yeas to 110 nays, passed the bill repealing the Sherman silver purchasing act. It now goes to the senate.

The Demon Threw Vitriol.

Because George Stiles, a ship carpenter of Philadelphia, did not pay Robert Rodway $10 that he borrowed, Rodway threw the contents of a viol of vitriol over the face and neck of his debtor, burning him fatally. Mrs. Lallie Stiles, the mother, received some of the acid, as did also a 5-year-old son, Edward, who may also die of his wounds. Stiles was about to leave the city for Newport News, where he had recently secured employment. He was on his way to the railroad station on Girard avenue when Rodway sneaked up behind and threw the stuff over him and his family. The injured people fell to the ground in great agony, and their screams brought a crowd. Rodway took to his heels, and the crowd followed with the intention of lynching him. A couple of policemen arrived, and it was with difficulty the fellow was saved. He was locked up and bail refused.

CLAMORING FOR WORK.

Half Starved Polish Laborers Precipitate a Riot at Detroit.

A crowd of Polish laborers clamoring for work filled the corridors of the City Hall at Detroit. The Board of Public Works had no work for them and the crowd repaired to Grand River avenue and attempted to force the laborers employed on a paving contract to quit work so they could go to work themselves. The mob made demonstrations with their shovels and many personal encounters took place between members of the two factions. One man was struck on the head with a shovel and seriously hurt. A squad of policemen at the point of revolvers finally managed to disperse the mob on Grand River avenue. Then the mob started for Montcalm street, where another gang of pavers were working. At Grand Circus Park the police and mob came together again. The policemen were largely outnumbered, but a liberal display of revolvers by the officers overawed the mob. Clubs were freely used and some of the mob were roughly handled before being dispersed. More trouble is feared.

A CONFESSION.

The Murderer of the Bordens Owns Up.

Otsego (Mich.) special: Considerable excitement has been caused by the finding of a letter in a bottle in the Kalamazoo River by H. J. Unmitch, at Pine Creek, two miles west of here. In substance it is as follows:

"KALAMAZOO, Mich., Aug. 22, 1893—A guilty conscience is what makes me write this letter. I am the man who killed Mr. and Mrs. Borden of New Bedford. Lizzie is innocent. I only intended to kill Mr. Borden for revenge, but being discovered by Mrs. Borden, was compelled to kill her.

[Signed.] "MAX O'REILLEY."

The letter, which is written in a bold hand on four sheets of tablet paper, gives an exact description of how the murder occurred and why it was done, words being erased and new ones substituted, giving a better meaning. It is extremely sensational and is believed by many here as genuine.

Chicago's Unemployed.

Chicago special: At a meeting of over a hundred delegates from all the large bodies of organized labor and a committee from the business men, a committee of relief and safety was organized, composed of twenty-five labor leaders and twenty-five business men. The business men include Lyman J. Gage, George M. Pullman, P. D. Armour, Marshall Field, Potter Palmer, Franklin MacVeagh, W. Penn Nixon, Joseph Medill, Victor Lawson, and J. W. Scott. This joint committee will work together in trying to find work and bread for unemployed residents of Chicago. It is expected that 25,000 men can be added to the drainage canal and public park work; also a large number of factories will be induced to start up at once.

The Painters' Union voted to withdraw $25,000 it has locked up in a safety vault and deposit the same in five banks. The Carpenters' Unions took the same action on $42,000.

Seventeen Buildings Destroyed by Fire.

Seventeen buildings were destroyed by fire at Galeton, Pa. Among the buildings burned were: John Eagle's Hotel, Asa Kick's pool and billiard saloon, Flinn Phœnix meat market, E. E. Hyer's new block occupied in the basement by two families, on the first floor by E. E. Biles as a grocery, and E. E. Hyer's drug store and Galeton Lodge I. O. O. F., the building owned by F. E. Ebcomb, and occupied by H Salowitz as clothing store and living rooms; H. Zeletz, grocery and fruits; M. S. Swatzenbach, drugs and fancy goods; A. D. Roy's building occupied by Miss Seamens as a millinery store and by two families; Baldwin & Co., general merchandise, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, also the two tenements of J. E. Ebcomb, the Galeton Opera House, owned by Thomas Harmon, and N. G. Kohler's tenement house, besides barns and outhouses that were on the places.

Head-End Collision.

A terrible accident occurred on the Harlem Railroad, near Dykeman's Station, just north of Brewster's, N. Y., which cost four lives and possibly more. It was the result of a head-end collision between the north-bound express train and the Pawling accommodation train. For some reason that will probably never be known, the accommodation did not await the coming of the express on a side track near Dykeman Station, the Harlem Railroad having but one track above White Plains. The express dashed on at a speed of fifty miles an hour. When the accommodation train was sighted "down brakes" was whistled, but too late. The two locomotives came together with terrific force, completely wrecking them both, and also wrecking the first passenger car on the south-bound train. Four persons were killed outright and many injured.

Fighting Fire.

Aurora (Ill.) special: The whole country from Hinsdale west, on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, on the north side of the track is on fire. At Lisle at least 500 people are out fighting the fire and trying to save the town. Many miles of fence and many stacks of hay and grain were burned. The fire also extended west from Naperville. At Eola the new sidewalks are all on fire, and a large force is at work trying to save the new factories just located there. The fire also extends west along the Burlington, from Aurora to Sandwich. The fire department of Aurora is being called upon for assistance.

Drunken Trainmen Cause a Bad Collision.

A Pan Handle freight moving slowly on the "Q" tracks was run into by a Chicago, Burlington and Quincy stock train, at California aveuue, Chicago. Four cars of the freight were wrecked and the engine and five cars of the stock train were destroyed.. Engineer John Routh and Fireman Robert Hach were injured by jumping from the colliding engine. Brant Port, a brakeman on the same train, was taken in charge by the police, who say he was intoxicated. They also accuse the entire stock train crew of being in the same condition.

Murdered and Burned.

The burned body of the man found dead in the debris of a burning straw stack seven miles below Columbus, Ohio, is that of Frank R. Shepherd, aged 24, a graduate last June at Ohio State University and a theological student for the Presbyterian ministry. His skull being broken above the right ear, the judgment is that he was struck by tramps or robbers for money and killed, and then carried to the stack and burned. The stack has been infested by tramps.

Woman Fatally Burned.

At Granville, Ohio, Mrs. David Armstrong attempted to start a fire with coal oil. There was fire in the stove and an explosion followed. She ran screaming into the room where her son lay. All the clothing was burned from her body, and the flesh charred and blistered. She was so horribly burned that death is inevitable. The son was also burned badly.

Another Outrage.

Columbus (Ind.) special: Twelve miles back in the hills, near Waymansville, eight men, with faces blackened, went to the residence of Andy Schrader and covered him with revolvers. Then part held him and whipped him with hickory switches while others pulled his wife out doors and whipped her in a horrible manner, leaving her bleeding from head to foot. She claims to have recognized three of the parties as her neighbors, but she refused to name them. Schrader and his wife are respectable, but their domestic relations are not pleasant.

More Bad Luck.

Following closely in the track of the disastrous fire at South Chicago, comes the news that the Illinois Steel Company, which employed a great number of those who lost their all in the conflagration, will close down its South Chicago plant next month. A great number of South Chicago residents are dependent upon labor in the great rolling mills of the Illinois Steel Company.

Raided the Town.

Thieves made a wholesale raid upon the town of Albany, Ind. Four houses were entered and a lot of money and valuables taken. Postmaster Mercer's house was broken into and the burglars carried off his pants, with over $100 in the pockets. They used the windows to obtain entrances. No clue, but the work appears to have been that of professionals.

Eighty-Three Gamblers Indicted.

SOUTH CHICAGO AFTER THE RECENT FIRE.

ROUTED THE RIOTERS

CHICAGO POLICEMEN DISPERSE A MOB.

Parade of the Unemployed and Hungry Becomes a Lawless Rabble—Dispersed by Police—Several Officers Badly Injured—Rioters Clubbed and Arrested.

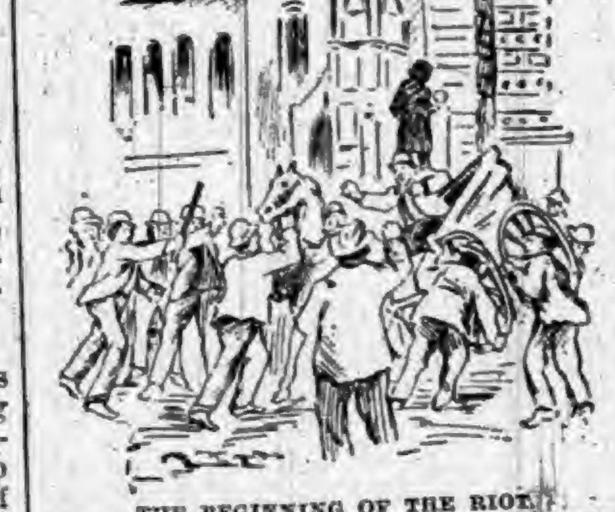
Clash with a Crowd.

Chicago's unemployed, led by shiftless agitators, again brought on the inevitable riot which has lately followed their daily street parades. For a brief time the elements were at work which create destruction, both of life and property, and the results might have been lamentable had not the police been prompt and vigorous in suppressing the outbreak. As it was, there were bruised heads and lacerated flesh, both of policemen and laymen. It was a very short but bloody battle between the officers and a riotous mob of at least 1,000 men. Five police officers were hurt, but by vigorous use of their clubs they put the rioters to flight.

DISCUSSING THE SITUATION.

Fortunately, says a dispatch, the battle was fought in the shadow of the city hall directly in front of police headquarters. Elsewhere it might have been more serious. Instantly there were enough of the officers of the law at hand to supress and disperse the crowds. But there were exciting movements afterward, for the police from the neighboring precincts had been summoned and they came by dozens in patrol wagons with horses at full gallop. For twenty minutes these re-enforcements poured in from every direction.

For a week unemployed men have been parading the streets in violation of the ordinances and to the obstruction of business traffic. Emboldened by the reluctance of the police to provoke trouble, the men became bolder day by day, until several persons had been assaulted for attempting to pass through the line. Saturday, after listening to several incendiary speeches from loud-mouthed agitators, the crowd started on its daily parade, headed by a band furnished by some one who, it appears, has money to buy bands but cannot buy bread. There were fully 1,000 men in line, and, a cabman going north on Clark street attempted to drive through the line.



THE BEGINNING OF THE RIOT.

In less time than it takes to tell it driver and horse were surrounded by 100 howling men, many of whom flourished ugly clubs in the air and threatened to brain the victim of their wrath. The terrified cabman applied the whip to his horse and succeeded in breaking away. In a few minutes a United States mail wagon attempted to pass through the line and again the mob surged around the vehicle, threatening to upset it, when some one cried: "Hold on, boys. That's Uncle Sam's wagon." "D——n Uncle Sam," cried a black-browed tough who had hold of a wheel. "Let's spill the mail." His less brutal comrades urged him to desist, and the parade was resumed, but it was evident that the men meant mischief. Numbers of them bore clubs. Others stooped as they walked and were observed to pick up paving stones and carry them in their hands. All this time there had been no interference on the part of the police.

Burst Forth Like a Volcano.

As the turbulent portion of the procession, which had just been cheated of a victim at the intersection of Clark street, reached the Washington street entrance of the City Hall the brooding storm broke loose. The object of the mob's wrath was H. H. Martindale, who was seated in a buggy and was driving east on Washington street. Martindale asked for passageway, and this was the signal for an outburst of a volcano. Two dozen fierce-looking men sprang from the line and surrounded Martindale. Two big fellows seized his horse by the bridle and others grasped the wheels of the vehicle, while they poured horrible curses upon the trembling occupant of the vehicle, who was too much frightened to utter a word. Those in front and those in the rear saw the crowd of excited men and ran toward the buggy. In a moment the street was jammed with hundreds of howling, cursing, frenzied men, who seemed wild with rage. With a howl of anger the mob made a united lurch at the buggy and threw it completely over, Martindale being thrown under the feet of the mob. It was then that the police interfered, taking vigorous and effective means of quelling the disturbance. A number of arrests were made. Mayor Harrison has issued orders that no more parades will be permitted under any pretext, and meetings of idle men will be closely watched for signs of disorder.

DEATH CLAIMS A DOZEN.

Terrible Accident Occurs on the Long Island Road.

Twelve persons are dead and others will die as the result of a terrible railway collision just outside of Long Island City. The accident happened near the bridge across Newton creek, on the Long Island railroad. A Rockaway train had just emptied its passengers at the Hunters' Point depot. It started to return to the bridge at the yards at Blissville. Just across the bridge it collided with a passenger train from Manhattan Beach. The Manhattan Beach train had been standing in the block to permit a train ahead getting at a safe distance. The Rockaway Beach train came dashing along behind, ran into the same block, and crashed into the rear end of the Manhattan Beach train. Both were crowded with excursionists, and both were the last trains from their respective resorts.

There were five cars in the Manhattan beach train, all of them open. The Rockaway train plunged in and plowed its way completely through the two rear cars and partly wrecked the third. Passengers in each of these three were maimed and mangled horribly and their shrieks of terror and pain were awful. Everybody in those cars was either killed or injured. The third car was completely thrown from track. The Rockaway engine was wrecked. Its smokestack was carried away and its huge boiler resembled a pincushion from the timbers of the wrecked cars sticking into it. Upon these timbers human beings were impaled, some dead and others gasping their last.

List of the Dead.

The list of those killed outright is as follows:

COL. E. A. BUCK, editor of the Spirit of the Times.

OSCAR DIETZEL; died at St. John's hospital.

MRS. MAGGIE DIETZEL, wife, 29 years; died at morgue.

MRS. BERTHA WEINSTEIN.

SIDNEY WEINSTEIN, her son.

THOMAS FINN, brakeman.

UNIDENTIFIED YOUNG WOMAN, blonde; two cards in pockets; upon one "Laura Duffy," on the other "Miss Young."

UNIDENTIFIED WOMAN, 40 years; two cards in pocket, upon one "Mrs. John Conrad," on the other "Mrs. Dyckoff."

UNIDENTIFIED MAN with letter in pocket addressed to Alexander Grillette, New York.

UNIDENTIFIED MAN with letter in pocked addressed to Mr. Ditman, New York, also check for $125, signed D. J. Needburg.

UNIDENTIFIED MAN with bunch of keys marked "J. J. Hyland, Westerly, R. I," and small prayer book with "J. J. Clancy" on fly leaf.

UNIDENTIFIED MAN, shirt marked "E. P.," card in pocket with George Fielding upon it, and a valise tag marked with the same name.

UNIDENTIFIED MAN, with letter addressed to Miss McKenna, Clifton Terrace, Rosebank, S. I., in pocket.

UNIDENTIFIED MAN, with letter in pocket addressed to Mr. Stein, New York.

The scene was indescribable. The dead and wounded were scattered through the wreckage both upon and beyond the tracks. Everything was spattered with the blood of the dead and wounded, and the cries of the latter rose above the hissing of steam and the calls of the frantic trainmen.

As fast as the injured could be taken from the wreck they were carried to the relief train and cared for. The doctors on board worked swiftly and well, while the other medical men were out in the wreck applying restoratives and making hurried dressings of wounds to sustain the sufferers until they could be put on the relief train for more careful treatment. The dead were taken by special train to Newtown, which is nearest the scene of the accident, and placed in a morgue by the order of the Coroner.

CROPS OF THE WORLD.

Careful Estimates Prepared by the Austrian Government Officials.

The estimates of the harvests of the world, which are prepared annually by Austrian Government officials have been made public. The estimated yield for North America is 382,000,000 bushels of wheat, 24,333,000 bushels of rye, and 1,809,000,000 bushels of corn. The Hungarian Minister of Agriculture estimates the world's production of wheat this year at 2,279,000,000 bushels, against the official average of 2,280,000,000 annually for the last ten years. He also gives the following figures: The deficits to be filled by the importing countries will require 379,000,000 bushels. The surplus available in exporting countries to satisfy this demand is 378,666,000 bushels. The production of wheat and the deficit (amount needed above the domestic supply) in each importing country is given.

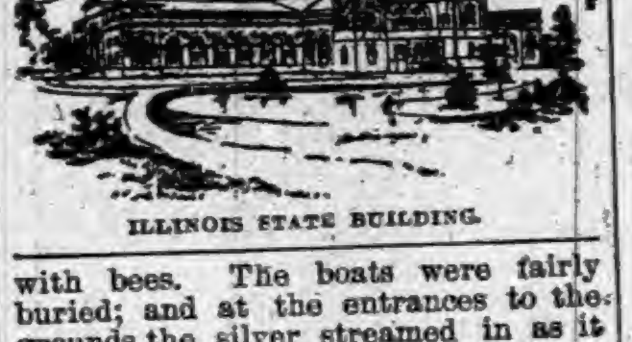
ILLINOIS' GREAT DAY.

MYRIADS OF HER CITIZENS AT THE FAIR.

Rushed by the Train Load from All Sections of the State—Formalities Are Dispensed With and a Whoop-La Time Is Enjoyed.

Jackson Park Was Crowded.

Illinois day, Thursday, at the World's Fair, was a revelation. While everyone expected that the attendance would surpass that of any day except the opening, no one ventured to predict the crowd that was present. The Prairie State did herself proud. All day Wednesday the regular incoming trains were crowded; and on Thursday, when the half-rate trains were running, both regular and excursion trains—the latter in three to five sections of ten to twelve cars each—were literally packed like sar—suckers. They came from from all sections of the State. There was the husky farmer, the prosperous business man, and the brawny artisan from the northern and central portions, and the man with whiskers like a goat from Egypt, and all brought their families. Lines of transportation to the grounds swarmed with human beings like an apple tree with bees. The boats were fairly buried; and at the entrances to the grounds the silver streamed in as it had never done before, and the turnstiles clicked and registered as if the crowd would never cease. Inside, the boasted elbow-room was at a premium, especially at points of interest. Everybody was out for a time; and if he didn't have it, he will at least never come so close to it again.



ILLINOIS STATE BUILDING.

There was no tiresome oratory, but there was lots of circus. Every few rods in any direction a brass band crashed and blared. Here and there, till everybody thought that the whole standing army was on the grounds, squads of the Illinois National Guard of 5,000 were marching to their rendezvous. The different parades of the day were forming, and people of every nation on earth scurried hither and thither until it must have seemed to some of the visitors that the millennium had dawned.

The formal program began with the march of the people from Midway Plaisance. The State militia led at 9 a. m., and as they passed the natives from each village filed in on their camels, donkeys and Arabian horses. But there was no parading by these through the grounds. So far as the Plaisance crowd was concerned, it simply marched to the Illinois Building and back. The concessionaires would not lose two or three hours of business in the middle of the day. Promptly at 11 o'clock there was a grand parade of the "Congress of Rough Riders," from Buffalo Bill's. This was headed by the Cowboy band. The parade of the Illinois troops returned to the State building at 12, headed by Gov. Altgeld in his capacity as Commander-in-chief. Here the Governor paused to review the troops. The festivities with the military department continued until late in the afternoon, and included an exhibition drill by Company C of the Third and the Springfield Cadets. At 2 o'clock an informal reception was held by the Governor. But the evening furnished the greatest sight. There was a fine display of fireworks from the lake east of Manufactures Building, the electric fountains were running, the search lights going, Wooded Island was illuminated, and gayly lighted craft floated about the waters of the lagoons. In the fireworks display in addition to the numerous novel effects furnished there were two special set pieces, one showing the facade of the Illinois State Building, 60 by 40 feet in size, containing 12,000 separate burning pieces, and the Lincoln Monument at Springfield, 40 by 40 feet, with 10,000 burning lances. "Old Glory" and the American eagle burned in the eastern sky. It was a fitting culmination to a grand day—one long to be remembered by the hosts of proud Illinoisans present.

CYCLONE AT GOTHAM.

Destructive Storm Sweeps Over the Atlantic Coast.

A hurricane struck the Atlantic coast the other night doing incalculable damage. It swept the coasts of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York and New Jersey. The wind came from the northeast and attained a velocity of over seventy miles an hour at times and was accompanied by torrents of rain. Reports from towns and cities in the storm-swept districts tell of vessels and pleasure yachts being swept from their moorings and wrecked. No loss of life is reported. The streets in upper New York were flooded, while trees were torn up by the roots and hurled into the streets. Some of the streets of Brooklyn were impassable because of fallen trees and debris. At Bayonne, N. J., all but one of the vessels of the yacht club were driven ashore and destroyed. Many washouts are reported on the railroads. A washout at Mount Vernon, N. Y., caused the wreck of a New Haven and Hartford freight train. Telegraph and telephone wires are down. The storm left its mark over the whole region around New York within a sweep of fully one thousand miles. The rainfall, measuring 3.82 inches during twelve hours, is the heaviest that has ever been recorded by the New York signal man. Through the dragging of anchors in the North River, more than fifty cables of the Western Union Telegraph Company were torn, and are now lying useless on the bottom of the river.

AN IDYL OF HONOLULU.

A Bold Stroke for a Husband. Written for This Paper.

BY LEON LEWIS.

CHAPTER II—Continued.

He glanced swiftly around, adding:

"Yes, here are the traces of half a dozen men. You are suffering from a blow, sir, that has nearly cost you your life!"

"Do you think so?" queried Ralph.

"There's no doubt about it. But what's the use of talking to you on the subject? Don't you remember who waylaid you? Don't you remember anything about the fight?"

"Fight? fight? Has there been a fight?"

"Pshaw! Haven't you some papers about you that will tell who you are?"

"Papers?"

"Here, let me search your pockets!" proposed the Kanaka impatiently.

No opposition being made to this proposal, the Kanaka at once carried it into execution. The result of the search was a considerable number of letters, receipts, bills of exchange, and other documents in which the identity of our hero was perfectly manifest.

"Here, read there!" cried the Kanaka, in a fever of impatience. "These will tell who and what you are. Read them. Unfortunately, I never learned to read—few of our people did until after the arrival of the missionaries. Read them!"

He opened one of the letters and held it under Ralph's gaze, continuing to repeat his injunction, but our hero merely looked puzzled again, and stared blankly at the bold chirography before him.

"I—I am just like you," he declared. "I—I never learned to read, either."

For a moment the Kanaka looked dumfounded—annihilated—but he then slapped himself violently on the breast with an air of reviving hopes and spirits.

"I have it," he cried. "I'll take you to Mr. Bullet."

He gathered the various papers of our hero into a package, thrust them into one of his own pockets, and passed his arm through Ralph's, leading him away into the interior of the island, taking the general direction of Krowwow, at the head of the Pearl Locks.

"Mr. Bullet is the man I work for," explained the Kanaka, as he walked onward. "I don't know as you will ever understand what that means, but it can do you no harm for me to mention the fact. Mr. Bullet has quite a good farm up here, in a pleasant although rather retired valley. He has had great experience in all sorts of business, and he will tell us in a minute what all these papers have to say about you."

At the end of a weary walk of about three miles the couple reached the crest of a hill, from which they could look down into a beautiful and fertile valley of small extent immediately in front of them. It was well tilled and well shaded, and a little stream of water flowed through it on its way from one of the high plateaus of the Konahuanui range of the sea.

"Mr. Bullet lives in the house you see yonder," announced the Kanaha, pointing out a small four-roomed cottage of a story and a half that occupied a prominence at one side of the valley. "As you see, it is built in the American style. Mr. Bullet is an American by birth, and was for many years a sailor."

Our hero did not respond to these observations any more than he had responded to the various other observations of his companion since setting out for the residence of Mr. Bullet. The cause of this silence was, evidently, that his eyes were entirely occupied, as were his sensations, with the various new and striking scenes constantly presenting themselves to his notice.

"Here we are," muttered the Kanaka, a few moments later, as he turned off from the rude road to a still ruder path that led across or through the garden of the Bullet estate; "and here is Mr. Bullet himself."

He waved his hand toward a personage who stood under the edge of a little shed at one end of the house, engaged in the modest occupation of splitting a stick of wood into small pieces to boil some water for his tea.

This man was indeed Mr. Bullet.

He was a thin and withered little old man, but yet the possessor of a great deal of strength and vigor. He was at least 60 years of age, and had not the least vestige of a tooth in his head, but this circumstance did not prevent him from chewing tobacco with such energy that its juice ran continually from each corner of his mouth like cider from a press.

Hearing his name pronounced by the Kanaka, he accepted the fact as a sort of introduction to our hero, to whom he bowed with sufficient affability. Ralph responded in kind mechanically, and then resumed his staring and wondering survey of things around him in a way that at once fixed the old sailor's attention.

"Who is he, Kulu?" he asked in a low tone as the Kanaka, withdrawing his arm from Ralph's, advanced to his employer's side.

"I don't know who he is," replied Kulu. "He has been in a fight, or somebody has waylaid him. There is an awful wound on his head——"

"Where did you find him?" demanded Bullet, keenly interested.

"In a lonely spot at Kaliki Bay—not far from the water. He is a very nice young man, as you can see, but he don't know who he is, nor where he came from, nor how he got into this awful fix——"

At this point of Kulu's exciting statements Bullet caught him by the arm.

"Hush!" he enjoined, stepping about excitedly, as if the ground were burning the soles of his feet. "I comprehend! An appalling mystery! At the least, a case of assault with intent to kill. Caution!" And he raised his hand warningly. "You don't know who the young man is, then?"

"No, but these papers I found in his pockets will probably tell you."

He handed out the bundle of documents he had secured, adding:

"He's not able to read them himself. His memory is gone entirely, like that of the man in Honolulu——"

A start and a cry from Bullet interrupted the history of "the man in Honolulu."

The old man had turned pale as a corpse, and the papers to which he had directed his attention was shaken violently in his hand.

"What is it?" asked Kulu.

The question recalled Mr. Bullet to himself. He controlled his excitement, folded up the document which had so visibly startled him, and unfolded another. The whole batch was soon passed in review, and during this time the old man had gradually recovered from his first emotions. He had even forced himself to be outwardly as cool as an iceberg.

"These papers don't amount to anything," he said, as he put them all together and put them into his own pocket. "They don't tell me who the young man is, nor anything about him. Part of them are in a language unknown to me. Have you met anybody since you saw the young man?"

"No, sir."

"Then of course you have said nothing to any one about him, nor has he been seen by anyone whatever?"

"No, sir."

"That is well, Kulu. Don't mention the affair to any one. Don't let any one know that there is such a person in existence. I will take charge of the poor young man myself, and try to bring the offenders to justice. But you must not say a word to any human being about meeting him. If you do it will not only defeat the ends of justice but you will lose your place in my service."

"Oh, I understand," returned Kulu, who knew enough not to offend his employer, whatever else he knew or suspected. "The matter ends here so far as I am concerned. My meeting with the young man is as though it had not been. You can depend upon my silence."

"Then all will be well with him and with us. You can leave me now, Kulu, but come and see me in the morning and I'll tell you what light I am able to get upon the subject. It is to be hoped that I may get track of the would-be assassins. But it all depends upon your silence. They must be left to think the young man is dead, you see."

Kulu again promised secrecy and took his way toward his own little cabin, a quarter of a mile further in the interior of the island.

"Please walk in—walk in, my young friend," said Bullet to our hero, as soon as Kulu was gone.

Ralph complied mechanically and was soon seated in the little sitting-room of his host.

"A terrible misfortune, sir," muttered Bullet, as he set about dressing the young man's wounds, "but I dare say you'll soon be all right again."

He spent nearly half an hour in dressing the sufferer's wounds—which were many and serious, in addition to the bump upon his head—and during this time he gave his patient several swallows of stimulant, and plied him with a great many questions.

"You must drink this, sir," he said, when his task was done, offering a final potion.

The patient drank it without hesitation or remark.

"You must now let me get you to bed," said Bullet.

Ralph not making the least objection, he was soon undressed and placed in a comfortable bed—Bullet's own—in a little apartment adjoining the sitting-room.

"And you must go to sleep now, sir," finished the old sailor, as he sat down beside the bed and passed his hand over the patient's eyes. "I will watch here, so that no harm will reach you."

Ralph shut his eyes as willingly as obediently, and in less than a minute thereafter his breathing announced that he was asleep.

And then Bullet arose with a strange look of jubilance upon his countenance. His eyes gleamed cunningly.

"Could anything be better?" he ejaculated in a whisper. "The presence of this young man here in such a fix is a great thing for me and Alma. He's lost to his friends, to himself, to everybody, but his papers tell me just who he is. Glorious! glorious! He is to me and Alma a sure pledge of fortune!"

Crossing the floor on tiptoe, he opened a door giving upon a narrow stairway, and called in a whisper:

"Are you there, Alma?"

"Yes, father," replied a feminine voice. "What do you want?"

"Come down here immediately. But be still about it!"

CHAPTER III.

THE OLD SAILOR'S PLOT.

Hardly a minute had passed when Miss Alma Bullet descended the stairs.

She was rather stout of person, and her complexion was as gay and vivid as an Indian blanket, but she was nevertheless endowed with a fair share of attractions for a country where good-looking women are scarce. She had coarse, irregular features and vivacious eyes, and possessed an average intelligence and capacity. She could have further been commended as healthy and a good cook.

"Is anything wrong?" she asked.

"No; everything is right," replied Bullet, with suppressed jubilance. "Hush! don't speak too loud, or you'll disturb him."

"Disturb whom?"

"That model of manly beauty in my bed! I've called you to share my joy, joy, Alma. In short, I've summoned you as—as a vulture to the feast!"

He waved both hands over and around the helpless sleeper.

Advancing on tiptoe, Alma Bullet peered into the little bedroom, surveying the unconscious young Chicagoan with an interest and curiosity she did not attempt to conceal.

"Who is he?" she asked.

"I'll soon tell you," replied Bullet. "Sit down here—no, not beside me but exactly in front. I wish to take a good square look at you."

Alma took the position indicated.

Wiping his spectacles nervously, yet deliberately, Bullet proceeded to saddle his nose with them, and then brought a long and critical stare to bear upon his offspring.

"Yes, you'll do," he muttered, after closing the door leading into the bedroom. "A little fat and red, to be sure; but there is no man wants a pale and die-away ghost for a wife. A little burned with summer suns, but all the more healthy. Yes, you'll fill the bill nicely."

"What does this mean?" demanded Alma.

"It means that we are on the threshold of a gigantic destiny," replied the old sailor impressively; "that the hour of fate has sounded; that our ship is about to enter port; in short, that we have hooked on to the world and are about to tow it away to our cave to digest it at our leisure!"

"Yes, I see," said Alma, perfectly bewildered, with a mental inquiry as to what was the matter with her parent, "but do please explain your meaning more fully."

"You shall be enlightened. Let's see, dear; how old are you? Is it 14, or are you 15?"

"Do hear the man!" returned Alma. "You know very well that I was 18 the 20th of last March."

Bullet opened his eyes to their widest extent, in unfeigned astonishment.

"Is it possible?" he cried. "How time does fly, to be sure! At this gait, I am being robbed of half my existence! Eighteen, are you? This accounts for the presence of that worthless beef-destroyer who has been hanging around you lately!"

"You refer to Mr. Keeri, I suppose?"

"Yes, I do. Keeri? Heavens, what a name for a son-in-law! He's not more than half or three-quarters white, and what white blood there is in him is utterly wasted. Get rid of him, girl—get rid of him. Send him about his business. Turn him adrift——"

"Well, well, I've turned him adrift already," interrupted Alma.

"Is this so, really?"

"Yes, three or four weeks since. If you choose to recall the fact, you haven't seen Mr. Keeri about the premises lately."

"That's so, sure enough, cried Bullet, after an instant's reflection. "Some good angel must have directed you. You've got rid of that fellow just in time. You concluded he wasn't good enough for you, I presume? You don't want a scarecrow husband, or a cheap imitation, when you can get the real thing. I always thought you both sensible and ambitious."

"But what has all this to do with this young stranger?"

"I'm coming to that directly. Do you remember your mother?"

"Perfectly, of course."

"She was ambitious, too. She was a literary lady—the daughter of a missionary who could read many written languages. But the said missionary was a wandering sort of prophet, and in his restless attempts to convert all creation he fell into the hands of a Fiji chief who made a square meal of him. Your mother was thus left fatherless, and her mother was left penniless, and this is how it happens that you have received nothing but your good looks and your education from your maternal ancestry."

Alma expressed by a look her keen realization of this lack of pecuniary inheritance.

"And as to my side of the house, the less said the better," continued Bullet. "I'm nothing but a runaway sailor from a whaler. Was nearly a blockhead to begin with. Never had any schooling beyond two or three cracks on the head with a ruler. Have learned all I know since I was forty. Hadn't a dollar when I took it into my noddle, one fine morning about twenty years ago, to give the old whaler the slip, but your mother managed to get me a chance to pull a hand-press for the missionaries, and I pulled it to some advantage. Advancing step by step, I have paid for this little homestead, besides securing a good living. But you will see by this exhibit that neither your birth nor your fortune will satisfy your reasonable ambition. You must look to another to give you the place in the world of which you are worthy—namely, your husband. And this precious husband is found!"

"You refer to this young stranger?"

"Yes, Alma. In him you see your future husband, unless I slip up cussedly in my calculations!"

Alma advanced again on tiptoe to the door of communication, which she placed ajar, and again contemplated the features of the sleeper long and earnestly. A flush of curious interest appeared on her cheeks as she again closed the door and resumed her seat.

A New Cure for Appendicitis.

Of late years a fearful dread has gone abroad that every one who eats fruits with small seeds in them is pretty sure to run the risk of dying a fearful death by appendicitis, or be forced to undergo a dangerous operation. So strong has this dread taken hold of the public mind that thousands refuse to eat small fruits when seeds have to be eaten with them. Grapes are always pitted by them, and blackberries, and even raspberries, with their small insidious seeds, are taken entirely from their bill of fare. The fact is that appendicitis occurs very rarely, and the percentage of people who eat fruit with seeds in them that are caught is insignificantly small. When the complaint does seize one it is not necessary to resort to an operation except in severe cases, nor is it absolutely necessary to die. The latest and most successful cure is to administer internally one to two ounces of sweet oil every three hours until the pain and fever are relieved. The seed which causes the trouble irritates the muscular tissue so that congestion follows, and this may soon cause inflammation of a very serious character. Sweet oil, administered in time and faithfully, allays the inflammatory condition, reduces temperature, and relaxes the tension of the muscular coating of the intestines and appendix. Besides this it takes seed or all foreign substances with it, and effects a complete cure. The patient should be kept in bed and poultices should be applied very hot over the seat of pain.

Down Mount Hamilton at Night.

It was late when we left the building and began the downward trip, says a writer in the Californian. It was so dark that I determined to ride down as far as Smith's, making the start from there afresh in the morning. The coach I happened to catch contained a party of excursionists. The road down from the summit is in all probability the finest cut road in the world, but it is steep, abounds in short turns and terrific precipices, and is not a road one would select to go down at full speed. Yet when the four-in-hand turned down into the road, the driver mashed his hat firmly on his head, and brought a crack from his whip like the report of a revolver, at which the horses sprang forward in a mad gallop. Crack came the whip again, and with a terrific sway the heavy coach swung round the curve and went tearing down the road, while fitful shrieks began to come from the "insides." Trees, spectral trunks, great oaks and sycamores flew by, clouds of dust rose and hid the landscape so that the horses seemed rushing into a fog bank. Over bridges we went, the thunder of hoofs rising in the night with a weird and forbidding sound. The pace kept increasing; the horses were at a dead run, sweeping round curves with a frightful swing, now coming up under the brake with a terrific crash, then tearing madly on in the wild race for the lights of Smith's away below in the gloom. Great trees with long branching arms reached out, seeming to intercept the road. Gulfs of gloom opened up suddenly, as the coach dashed around the curves. Spectral sycamores stood white and distinct, where on every side masses of verdure made the night more impenetrable—a black gulf all about, down which they seemed scurrying. On plunged the coach—horses and driver seemingly gone mad—until finally, after pivoting around in a remarkable manner, we rushed away in a cloud of dust over the little bridge into the blending and welcome light of Smith's inn.

CALAMITY HOWLING.

DETESTABLE TACTICS OF THE REPUBLICAN PRESS.

Resorts to Bald-Headed Lying that the Party of McKinleyism May Reap a Little Temporary Advantage—Half the Stories Told Are Untrue.

Vulgar Calamity Lying.

A certain element of the Republican press, in its efforts to create a more serious scare than is at all necessary, that the Republican party may reap a little temporary advantage, is making itself ridiculous. According to the Des Moines Leader, half the stories of mills closed down and men out of employment are the sheerest lies. The Republican party left the nation in bad shape. The effect of evil legislation was felt and is being felt. But the beneficent influence of the confidence of the business world in the Democracy has prevented much of the injury to business which would otherwise have been felt. If the partisan papers had been fair in their comments on the situation half the actual failures would not have occurred. These papers destroy confidence through vulgar and inexcusable lying. Some of them are overstepping themselves. At this time of the year it is customary for many mills to shut down for short periods, sometimes for the purpose of making repairs and renovations, and sometimes because the fall trade has not assumed definite proportions. Ordinarily these temporary shut downs are not noticed. This year they are all heralded and the magnitude of each enterprise exaggerated. Correspondents are anxious to earn money, and knowing that partisan newspapers are looking for calamity news, they furnish it to order.

The Chicago Inter Ocean was recently compelled to publish a retraction of its slanderous statements concerning the New Albany (Ind.) woolen mills. The mills placed a mortgage, for temporary relief only, on some finished goods. The Inter Ocean correspondent magnified it into a failure. The manager wrote to the Inter Ocean as follows:

> We have run every day and night this year up to last week, and run every day last week and expect at present to run every day this year. Our business is prosperous and we are making money, and expect to soon be able to cancel the mortgage that was placed, and will cancel it not later than November. Your paper simply frightened some of our creditors, who have no reason to be frightened, and in order to set the matter right, we believe you should publish this letter in full in large size type, properly headed, in order to set right the wrong which you have done us. The mills are wide open, running full blast every day, and we are billing goods as though nothing had happened.

But this sort of injurious calamity lying is not peculiar to Chicago papers. A favorite theme with the Republican journals of the West is that the grain buyers cannot handle the new crop for lack of money. An Iowa Falls grain dealer writes to the Leader: "I have noticed of late the Republican papers throughout the State have been howling about no money to buy grain with. To show you that this is absolutely false, I inclose a circular from the largest commission house in Chicago, soliciting business and offering to pay all drafts on grain. Never in the history of the grain trade has so liberal a grain circular been issued. The men who cannot get drafts paid must have very poor credit and standing in Chicago."

The circular inclosed is from a firm whose standing is first class, and reads:

> Notwithstanding the prevailing stringency in the money market, we are prepared at all times to pay drafts, with bills lading attached, to a reasonable amount against all shipments of grain or seeds. Shippers may rest assured that their property consigned to us will have the same careful attention that has characterized the management of our business during its existence, now nearly a quarter of a century.

McKinley Will Not Be Forgotten.

The Fifty-third Congress was elected for the purpose of repealing the odious and burdensome tariff laws of the country. There were other issues joined between the parties, and in the East there was a notable effort before the election, as there now is after it, to belittle the question of the tariff. But it failed. Mr. Cleveland was an experiment as President up to the date of his famous reform message to Congress. Before that he was regarded as an untried leader of the Democratic party; after that he became a force in the economic battle being waged by the Morrisons, the Carlisles and the Millses against plutocracy and class legislation. The warfare was a long and memorable one and the people finally triumphed. They learned what they wanted and they asked for it at the ballot-box. It was not a victory of the outs against the ins. It was not a contest for the spoils of office. It was a triumph of the oppressed over their oppressors. It was a contest of the people against the subsidists. The average voter is not going to forget tariffs on account of a money stringency. He has been so long familiar with a case of chronic stringency in his own case that the word does not frighten him. He expects a cheaper breakfast table and a cheaper coat under the new regime, and if he do not get it he will know the reason why. Congress will be expected to do all in its power to relieve the financial situation, but its chief duty is a revision of the tariff laws, and its work must begin immediately after the extra session convenes. Nobody understands this better than the Democratic members themselves. The unwise financial laws to which the President's proclamation alludes include the McKinley law.—St. Louis Republic.

The Campaign Is Over.

There is evidently a misapprehension of the political and economic situation in this country in the minds of Republican politicians. From the retired Harrison to the aspiring McKinley, from the amiable Depew to the arrogant Reed, they are talking as though the reform of the tariff were still an open question. You mistake, gentlemen. The tariff campaign is over for three years at least. Try and get that fact into your heads. We met you upon the issue of McKinleyism in 1890, and you received the worst beating that any party in power ever experienced. We met you again, upon an appeal from judgment, last year. You were again overwhelmed. A President and Congress pledged to a reform of your worse-than-war tariff were elected. The Democratic party will execute its commission from the people as soon as the more immediately imperative duty, which likewise grew out of your legislation, is performed. Do not imagine that you can now work the "tariff scare" to defeat the will of the people. That fight is over.—New York World.

Concerning Annexation.

On the subject of annexation the Louisville Courier-Journal (Dem.) has this to say: "We are not here to show the world how big a fabric of government may be built up, but how sound. Of great empires the world has had enough. It is ours to perpetuate a great nation founded on no paltry territorial ambitions, but instinct throughout with the anfixating principle of the greatest good to the greatest number without violence to the rights of any. Advocates of Hawaiian and Canadian annexation would spare themselves much wear and tear of spirit by bearing this in mind.

How Labor Is Protected.

An interesting revelation of the way the protected manufacturers of Pennsylvania try to benefit the condition of the American workingman is made by so unimpeachable an authority as the Philadelphia Press. This journal prints an interview with Mr. John J. Quinlan, the chief contract-labor inspector at Ellis Island in New York harbor, who says that during July his force examined at least 2,000 people who were suspected of being contract laborers, and barred out some 300, of whom 200 have already been returned to the countries from which they came. "We have found in a great many cases," he said, "that the contract men were coming here to work in the iron industries, principally in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana," at wages as low as 90 cents a day, against $1.50 and $1.75 paid the American workman. Mr. Quinlan proceeded as follows:

> Here is an instance that I can show you from my papers of a skilled Hungarian going to the Carnegie Works at Homestead—if he had not been prevented—at $1.25 a day, when the regular wages are $1.75. The usual procedure in such instances is, if the imported man gets through all right, they ask him at the works, having found that he is a skilled man, "You have quite a number of friends working on the other side in the village you came from, haven't you?" "Oh, yes," is the reply. "How much do they get per day?" "Well, 40 or 50 cents." "We'll give them $1.25. Write to them and ask them to come out." And that is the way it goes, said Mr. Quinlan.

The theory on which the owners of the Carnegie Works are granted the protection of high-tariff duties is that they may pay high wages to American workingmen, and thus in turn protect these workingmen from the competition of the "pauper labor" of Europe.—American Industries.

The Unemployed.

Nothing can be more dishonestly partisan than the attempt of the protection organs to make it appear that fear of the tariff reform which the people have twice decreed is responsible for the large number of workingmen out of employment. It is obviously a false claim for these reasons:

1. By far the greater number of the unemployed have not been engaged in the protected industries. The decrease of activity is caused, as all candid business men agree, by a monetary distrust, due to fear of the lapsing of the currency to a silver standard. It affects the railroads, the building trades, domestic service, silver mining, and a hundred other industries and occupations having no connection with the tariff.

2. The reforms proposed in the tariff will stimulate rather than depress industries. Can anybody but an idiot, or a protection editor, conceive that a proposition to untax their raw materials or machinery will stop cotton or woolen mills, iron manufacturers and the consumers of tin-plate?

3. The American people are not fools or children to be frightened at the prospect of having their own twice-repeated demand fulfilled a year hence.

5. Every organized body of business men that has spoken on the subject has attributed the present trouble to another cause.

Gov. McKinley's Prayers and Breeches.

It is very touching to hear Gov. McKinley "pray God that the free traders will for once live up to their promises." If Gov. McKinley's breeches are as full of shoddy as those of many of his fellow-citizens who have been put under the McKinley law he will have to moderate his praying or get the knees patched.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

THE effort to utilize the financial depression as a life-preserver for the McKinley law is doomed to failure.

Artificial Ice.

The Massachusetts State Board of Health having been directed by the Legislature to examine the system by which artificial ice is made in that State, reports as follows: "1. Artificial processes of freezing concentrate the impurities of the water in the inner core, or the portion last frozen. 2. The impurities are reduced to their lowest terms by distilled water (condensed steam) for the manufacture of ice. 3. The number of bacteria in artificial ice is insignificant under the prevailing methods of manufacture. 4. The amount of zinc found in the samples of melted artificial ice under the observation is insufficient to injure the health of persons using such ice." Three companies in the State make artificial ice by the ammonia system of freezing. Galvanized iron tanks, holding from 200 to 250 pounds of distilled water, are immersed in lime, which is cooled below the freezing point of water by pipes which convey the gaseous ammonia. The freezing goes on slowly from the sides of the tanks, and it generally requires about two days to form a solid cake of ice. The distilled water is generally condensed steam from the engine, which is filtered through various media, such as sand, coke, and charcoal, to free it from oil, grease, and other suspended matters, and is subsequently boiled to expel air. The water in all three plants is obtained from wells sunk on the premises, and all contain considerable mineral matter in solution; but when the water is converted into steam and only the condensed water is used for ice-making, the original composition of the water is of comparatively little consequence.

Queer Verdict of Scotchmen.

The literary forgery case which recently occupied the attention of a judge and jury in Edinburgh is interesting, not only for the nature of the crime, but for the peculiar recommendation of the jury. Alexander Howland Smith was convicted of fabricating munuscripts and letters and disposing of them as genuine. There were letters purporting to be those of Robert Burns, Sir Walter Scott and other famous men, which the defendant said he obtained among the waste paper of a lawyer's office. High authorities in literary affairs declared the documents to be spurious. The jury found the defendant guilty, accompanying the verdict with the statement that they, by a a majority vote, "recommend the prisoner to mercy on the ground that his was an unusual crime and because of the easy facility of disposing of the spurious documents afforded him." Apparently if he had committed any ordinary crime and had been successful only by great efforts in obtaining money for the letters, he might have received a much longer term of imprisonment than one year, which he will be compelled to undergo.

SOME persons of weak understanding are so sensible of that weakness as to be able to make good use of it.—Rochefoucauld.

The Effect of "Phantom" Money.

There are some facts not generally known about the money question, and the following which by the kindness of L. J. Miller we take from a recent copy of the Toledo Market Report, will be read with interest.

The past three months should have convinced every one that law-made money is sure soon or late to end in ruin. In 1879 this country had in round numbers $500,000,000 of paper and silver in circulation, resting for its gold value on a treasury gold reserve of $120,000,000. To-day it has in paper and silver, $1,233,000,000 resting on $103,000,000 of gold. In a nutshell this is the whole difficulty. This lack of support to an expanded currency, has bred distrust, distress led to a contraction of loans, the contraction of loans led to the withdrawal of deposits in coin and currency, this withdrawal led to hoarding, hoarding led to a premium on currency, and this premium has brought business to a stand still—Philadelphia Press.

Wisconsin Letter.

St. Croix Falls, Wis , Aug. 24,1893.

Mr. Editor:—

If you will allow me a little space in the Courier this week, I will give you a little sketch of the crops and the country through which I have traveled in the past week. I left Butler, Ind., Aug. 20, 1893. The corn and potato crop looks very well all the way from Butler to South Bend, but from there to Chicago it looks very poor. From Chicago to St. Paul, Minn., corn and potatoes are very good. The meadows all look nice and green, but one scarcely can see any wheat stacks, threshed or unthreshed. The oats crop looks slim also, but it seems like they had plenty of rain in the past three or four weeks, but from St. Paul to St Croix Falls the corn is all burned up by the drouth. The potato crop is not more than half a crop in this great potato country. Clover or timothy hay you can not find anywhere. All the hay I saw in my travels was marsh hay, and most farmers are just putting up their hay. But of all the sights and scenery that I saw was the St. Croix River, of all the stone and rocks and hills I ever saw before. You can climb on rocks here 200 feet above the town, but still you can not get much of a view of the surrounding country on account of those large hills. I saw men cutting oats on top of one of these hills. How they got up there with their machinery, I can't account for, as I only got that sketch from the train on which I was traveling Times are very dull up here. So you see the people up here are really worse off than we are in DeKalb. We are away ahead in crops of all kinds, and we thought that we were suffering. We should be content with what God gives us. I think that less fault finding and a little more pushing at the wheel would be the best thing to do.

Yours as ever,
John H. Benninghoff.

Birthday Party.

There was a nice birthday party at the home of Emanuel Neidig last Thursday, Aug. 24, it being Mrs. Neidig's 65th birthday. A number of the relatives and friends gathered there with well filled baskets and many presents and had a most enjoyable meeting. Among those present were: Harrison Jones and wife from Sedan; Adam Rowe and wife, Ft. Wayne; Mrs. Jacob Henny and daughters, Alma and Susie, of Helmer; Wm. Stahl and G. W. Rowe and families, of Fairfield; Mrs. Maurice Deatrick and Miss Emma Coyle, of Auburn; Miss Nora Rowe, Miss Alice Stahl and several others.

At His Old Tricks.

Hank Little of the Garrett Clipper is at his old tricks again, in other words, getting drunk. He took a protracted spree last week to make up, we presume, for the more than a year of soberness he has maintained since Cal. Husselman thrashed him. His admirers should be around to take care of him. They may need him to "snap his fingers" to Congressman McNagny again. It was only on June 15 that he had this "pointer" in the Clipper for their benefit: "Mike Boland knows us, Willis Brown is in the same boat, Dr. Nusbaum never deserted us and Congressman McNagny is not likely to shake our democracy."

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY........AUGUST 31, 1893.

Gen. Lew Wallace's new book, "The Prince of India," is now published.

California will have a midwinter international exposition at San Francisco.

We agree with the populists on one point and that is about the only one. The ratio of gold and silver coins should remain 16 to 1

Atlantic coast had a terrible hurricane last week. Much shipping was injured, and about 300 of the famous elms in New Haven were destroyed.

Repeal of the Sherman act will save the expense of buying 40 millions of silver bullion a year, and will save the loss on the bullion when it goes down on our hands.

Free coinage of silver is hardly possible under present conditions. Let us go back to something like the law of 1878, under which we coined over two millions of silver each month.

Duke of Edinburg, second son of Queen Victoria, has become duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha in Germany, taking the place of his uncle who died a few days ago. He may take up his residence there.

Gov. Boies was last week renominated by the Iowa democrats for governor. He is already serving his second term. It is a flattering compliment, but it is doubtful whether he can be elected a third term in a republican state.

South Chicago had a bad fire last Thursday. The dry weather and a high wind made it hard to stop, and several hundred buildings valued at half a million, were destroyed. Caught from a fire where little boys were roasting potatoes to eat.

C. R. Wiley, auditor of Noble county died on Sunday evening at Columbus, Ohio, where he had gone for treatment. His disease was cancer of the tongue. He was exactly 59, that being his birthday. The commissioners met Monday and after appointing Nelson Prent as temporary auditor, elected Sol. Baum of Avilla to fill out the unexpired term.

Congress should not change the ratio of coins. Silver dollars should remain 16 to 1. A change to 20 to 1 would cost the government 113 millions, because we have now 820 millions of silver dollars coined since 1878 and 77 millions of halves, quarters and other "subsidiary" silver. This would have to be called in and recoined, more silver put with it and then sent out again. All this costs money.

The "News" vs the "Journal"

The Kendallville News recently had an article to the effect that Perry Randall, of Ft. Wayne, had told the editor, Dr. Parker, that McNagny would not probably seek a renomination. The Ft. Wayne Journal comes back at the News and denies that Randall ever said it. So far this is all natural, for McNagny refused the one a favor he needed and gave to the other a favor he didn't need. But the Journal clouds its denial by a preposterous and at least a suspicious statement—one made by the ubiquitous "prominent democrat, one who is likely to sit in congress himself some day," but one whose name the Journal very carelessly fails to give. This "prominent democrat" fiercely assails every other democrat who does not "bend the pliant hinges of the knee, that thrift may follow fawning." He even calls those "cowards" who dare to complain of supposed or real injustice done them by men they have helped into honorable places. But this denouncer of cowards singularly enough, is himself careful not to speak over his own name. There be cowards, and cowards, but the most abject of the numerous class, is he who hides his responsibility behind a "Fiat justitia," "Observer," "Prominent Democrat," etc., and from such a safe place, attacks men who stand in the open light of day and make a manly fight for a defensible cause. We do not believe this "prominent democrat" contains much of the timber that is likely to be worked up into congressmen; for, this district having had its finger burned once, so to speak, will likely be more careful hereafter. If this "prominent," etc., will give his name, we will take pains to show him the utter falsity of the statement he is credited with, that "McNagny did his best to please the people, and so far I have not heard of an appointment that does not reflect credit on the party."

Since writing the above, we have the News of August 24, in which Dr. Parker still carries the idea that he was justified in making the statement he did. We, of course, cannot say as to the conversation between him and M. Randall. But in regard to the chief subject of the controversy, the News would do well, when it goes to fire at so small an object at so great a distance, to put its telescope sights on.

Repeal of the Sherman Act.

It is now certain that the silver purchasing clause of the Sherman law will be repealed promptly. In the House on Monday, it was voted on and there was a majority of 129, where only 60 had been expected. They also voted on retaining the present ratio of 16 to 1 for silver and gold money. This was defeated by about the same vote as above. Then they tried 17 to 1, then 18 to 1, then 19 to 1, and finally on a ratio of 20 to 1, and all were defeated by about the same vote as the 16 to 1. But it looks as if they will eventually settle down on the old ratio, 16 to 1. That is what they ought to do. The repeal bill was sent to the Senate, but it is likely a different bill will pass that body, the bill of Senator Voorhees, and that the House will agree to it. The Indiana members divided on the question of a ratio, Bretz, Brookshire, Conn, Holman and Taylor voting for 16 to 1, and the other eight against. Why any one should wish to change the ratio from what it is now, 16 to 1, we cannot see. We have often showed that any ratio less than 28 to 1 will not make silver equal to gold, and even at 28 to 1, it may not remain equal a week Besides, to change to any other ratio than the one we have will cost a vast sum of money. We believe the reason the Indiana vote divided on the ratio was because this vote was also for or against free silver.

Obituary.

Marshal Owens was born in East Union township, Wayne county, Ohio, Jan. 1, 1825, and departed this life Aug. 26, 1893, aged 68 years, 7 months and 25 days. He was raised by a widowed mother and so was early obliged to learn the lesson of independence. He remained in his native county till of age, 1846, when in the fall he came to Indiana, and in 1848 he bought a farm, his present homestead, in DeKalb county just east of Auburn. On October 24, 1854 he was united in marriage to Nancy McDowell, of Wells county, Ind. In January, 1855 this happy couple settled on the farm, where they passed 32 years of their successful and useful lives. Here six children were born to them; one boy who died in infancy and five girls, two of whom are dead, while three, Julia, Dessie and Della are left to sorrow because father's voice is no longer heard to speak the accustomed words of cheer and council. In the spring of 1887 they moved to Auburn, since which time they have lived under this roof, happy and contented, till a year and a half ago when the dear mother bid a long but hopeful adieu to us who yet remain. To father it was only brief, for now they both linger on the shore to wait our coming. Besides the three daughters, two sons-in-law and three grandchildren, Mr. Owens leaves three brothers and one sister to mourn his departure. Sometime in early manhood he became a member of the Baptist church, but later on, after marriage, he joined the Dunkard church. Perhaps others gave more attention to the outward ceremonies of society than did Mr. Owens: but truth, honesty and righteousness were more than mere names with him, for these virtues were a part of his very being. Moral worth and christian spirit were always found in him. Though he may not have studied the various theories of conventionalities of society, yet in practice he lived above them all. Allways kind and attentive to family and friends and to any worthy ones, who sought his sympathy: Such devotion always springs from a responsive heart touched by the sorrow of others; such virtues are best developed by practice and such they were in Mr. Owens' life. How often do we forget to appreciate these noble virtues in the individual who lives a quiet and peaceful life till after he has gone from among us. Then, and too often not till then, do we learn to know full well the worth of the qualities of those dear to us.

Good Father Owens, sleep on, in that sweet rest of soul, which ever belongs to the one who has toiled and wearied to make self and family happy and respected; but who has taught the world that right living does not always consist in pomp and ceremony. May we, your friends and relatives, learn from your life, and remember that right doing is best done by him who loves to do it, and that the greatest deeds are those prompted by love and kindness.

Funeral services were at the residence on Monday, Aug. 28, at 10 a. m., Rev. J. D. Brosy conducting the services. The interment was in Woodlawn.

Gone to Her Rest.

Mrs. Elizabeth Griffith Coder, wife of John Coder, died at her home in St. Joe, Ind., Aug. 20, 1893, at the age of 74 years 2 months and 3 days. Mrs. Coder was born at Mt. Pleasant, Pa., June 17, 1819, and was united in marriage to John Coder, at Greensburg in the same state, Oct. 20, 1842, so that they had reached their golden anniversary last October. They moved to Ohio in 1864, and in 1867 to DeKalb county and purchased the farm close to Spencerville, on which they resided till about about four years ago, when they located in St. Joe. Here it was their good fortune to celebrate their golden wedding, October 20, of last year, ten months to a day before her death. On that brighter occasion their children were all present. As they were also at her funeral, except one, Joseph Coder, at Ursina, Pa., who was not able to attend. The funeral was at the Lutheran church in St. Joe, Aug. 22, by Rev. J. W. Thomas, of that church, and she was laid to rest in the new cemetery, just south of the village.

Their children were all present at the funeral except the one named. They are, Joseph Coder, of Ursina, Pa.; E. J. Coder, of Cleveland, with his daughter Isa and her husband, F. W. McBroom of the same place; Frank P. Coder, of Norval, Mich.; Mrs. E. Zimmerman, of Auburn and Mrs. M. E. Olds, of St. Joe. These, with the venerable companion of her youth and mature years, are left to mourn for her.

Chicago and the Fair.

Interesting pointers for those Who visit it and Information for those Who Don't.

The state of Maine, like Indiana, has simply provided a temporary home for her people, but as in the case of Vermont, we did not find many of her people there.

Massachusetts has a fine building, patterned exactly after the colonial residence of John Hancock. It contains many interesting relics and documents in faded penmanship and print. There is a desk that belonged to Washington and much old furniture and pictures, rare coins, old newspapers and old lottery tickets, for there was a day when the staid people of the old Bay State permitted and even patronized lotteries. There were specimens of engraving done by Paul Revere. Massive seal rings belonging to the famous Cabot family, fine old needlework, and bonnets and garments worn in Revolutionary days. As interesting a thing as we saw was a copy of the militia drill ordered by the King, to be used by the militia. It began, "Sieze your firelock by the right hand and turn the lock outwards, etc," the whole manual sounding very funny in these days of breech loaders and magazine guns. There were old paintings of Washington, making him look quite different from the pictures we are accustomed to see.

We forgot last week to say that in the New York building there was a small cannon that the VanRensselaers of New York used to fire on the birthdays of each member of their family. There were old inkstands and pens and a spirit lamp and curling tongs to go with it, showing that even the early Yankees or their neighbors were not above curling their bangs.

Pennsylvania has a number of relics, chief of all being the old "Liberty Bell," the one used to ring out to the people from its place in the old "Independence Hall" the glad news that the Declaration of Independence had passed. Crowds stand around it all day with an appearance of reverence such as is not given to anything else in this vast show of relics. To Americans the old "Liberty Bell" is a grand thing. There are old papers and documents and models of the familiar buildings of the great centennial at Philadelphia. There was the original and real deed by which the King Charles Second gave to Penn the great state that bears his name. It even shows the seal which the King made by stamping on wax. The paper is large, about the size of a full sheet of our "Royal," and perhaps we get our name from this size of paper used by the old kings.

THE INSTITUTE.

As noted last week the institute was in every way a grand success, even financially for though the expenses were high the receipts were satisfactory. The lectures were of unusual ability and interest, as was all the other work. The attendance was even better than usual and everything passed off pleasantly. We should not forget to speak of the music, Mrs. Garwood and Stella Merica gave a piano duet on Wednesday evening, and Thursday evening, a duet with the piano and violin, and Ernie Williams gave a fine cornet solo. It was all splendid. The attendance reached a total of 170, with an average of 147. At the close, the teachers adopted the following:

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas. All assemblies have aims, sentiments and purposes to impress upon the outside world, therefore, we the teachers of DeKalb county in institute assembled adopt the following resolutions.

Resolved: That we extend our sincere thanks to the people of Auburn for their generous hospitality and kindness in opening their homes for the entertainment of the teachers.

Resolved: That we tender our thanks to the trustees of the M. E. church, who have so kindly allowed us the use of their beautiful and comfortable house which has greatly added to the comfort and enjoyment of this session of their institute.

Resolved: That we extend our thanks to Prof. Warfell and Prof. Wood for their earnest, interesting and instructive work during the past week, and express our pleasure in meeting other prominent educational workers.

Resolved: That our hearty thanks are due to the press of the city and county for the aid rendered and interest manifested in advertising and otherwise assisting in making this institute a grand success.

Resolved: As we realize the great responsibility of the work of the teacher, and the pride we take in the moral tone of the teachers of this county. To this end the highest grade of manhood and womanhood must be maintained, a high standard of moral, temperate and christian character should therefore be our aim, and we deprecate the departure from the principles by any member of our body.

Resolved: That we express our hearty appreciation, and tender a vote of thands to our Supt. C. M. Merica for his labors not only in the advancement and progress of the schools, but also in the broad culture of the teachers by maintaining a high order of lectures in connection with institute work. That we pledge our hearty support and co-operation in all of his efforts for the welfare of the schools.

Kendallville News—The editor of the News landed in this city thirty six years ago to day. The walk from the depot to the Burnham hotel was through a forest, where now stands the Flint & Walling Company's shops. The Air Line railroad had been running about a month, and the first man we talked to was Judge Burnham, who kept a hotel on the ground now occupied by the fine Christian church building. The old judge was playing checkers, and he arose from the board slowly as though he hated to be disturbed, and took our grip and handed us a pen to record our name as one of the arrivals. He directed us to the wash basin and told us to be comfortable and returned to his game.

The Cost of an Ex-President's Manuscript

As an illustration of the money paid to writers as soon as they acquire a reputation, the September Cosmopolitan contains less than eight thousand words, for which the sum of sixteen hundred and sixty six dollars was paid. Ex-President Harrison, Mark Twain and William Dean Howells are the three whose work commands such a price,

The September number has more than one hundred illustrations, giving the chief points of interest in the Columbian exposition, and the fair is treated by more than a dozen authors, including the famous English novelist, Walter Besant; Midway Plaisance, by Julian Hawthorne; Electricity, by Murat Halstead; the Liberal Art Building, by Kunz, the famous gem expert of Tiffany & Company; the Department of Mines, by the chief of that department, etc.

A feature of this number is a story by Mark Twain, entitled, "Is He Living or Is He Dead?"

The success of Mrs. Annie M. Beem of McKeesport, Penn., in the treatment of diarrhœa in her children, will undoubtedly be of interest to many mothers. She says; "I spent several weeks in Johnstown, Pa., after the great flood, on account of my husband being employed there. We had several children with us, two of whom took the diarrhœa very badly. I got some of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy from Rev. Mr. Chapman. It cured both of them. I knew of several cases where it was equally successful. I think it cannot be excelled and cheerfully recommend it." 25 and 50c bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Mr. Thomas Batte, editor of the Graphic, Texarkana, Arkansas, has found what he believes to be the best remedy in existence for the flux. His experience is well worth remembering. He says: "Last summer I had a very severe attack of flux. I tried almost every known remedy, none giving relief. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy was recommended to me. I purchased a bottle and received almost immediate relief. I continued to use the medicine and was entirely cured. I take pleasure in recommending this remedy to any person suffering with such a disease, as in my opinion it is the best medicine in existence." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

We had a complimentary notice last week for Miss Hoffman's excellent little entertainment. But somehow it missed getting into the paper. We regret this, as the performance of the little folks of her classes was excellent, and should have been noticed and complimented. The "little dudes" were immense, and the little misses with their doll babies in the doll drill were a sweet vision. Nellie Franks sang sweetly and showed fine ability. There were piano pieces by the pupils including Harry Lewis, Mary Baxter, May Bishop, Ethel McKay, Lena Zimmerman, Allie Grube, Nora Saxton, Nellie Franks. All these showed the good work of Miss Hoffman, their teacher, for they did well for pupils at that age. Miss Hoffman has proved herself not only an accomplished teacher, but one interested in the success of those under her charge.

Fourteen cars loaded with English soldiers passed through Hudson one day last week, says the "Times" of that place. Now, there must be another train right soon, that will stop off at Ashley with a regiment of red coats or there will be war and possibly a call for blue coats. The two towns are too close together for one to be neglected without resenting it.

The populists had a picnic at the fair grounds Saturday. We would have given them free notices that would have been read in every school district in the county, if they hadn't been so "unbeknownst" about it. However we are told that those who did find out about it, had a good time. We hope so, for many of them are good people, though on many points of faith they are greatly mistaken.

Robinson's show last Friday being the first good show we have had for many years, was well patronized And all in all it was up to its old standard of excellence. There were some of the same old things of course, but there were also many new features. The animals, though not numerous, were good, and generally in good condition. Altogether we hear little fault found with the show. The day, as far as the weather was concerned, was all that could be asked. The rain of the evening before had laid the dust and the day itself was fair and pleasant. Everyone seemed to enjoy it.

Another DeKalb Man Gets There.

Last week we had a letter from J. J. Higgins, late of Butler, but now a resident of Monmouth, Oregon. Since locating where he is, he has been elected town recorder, an office similar to town clerk here, only that in Oregon he is ex-officio president of the town Board in the absence of the regular presiding officer, as well as being judge of all misdemeanors within the corporate limits of the town. He has also been elected clerk of the school board and its treasurer. Recently he was made postmaster and we expect when the people there come to realize fully that he is from DeKalb county, Indiana, they will send word, "come up higher." Truly John's lines have fallen in pleasant places, especially so, as his boy has been making rapid strides in his school work, and will graduate next year at the age of 15. The State Normal school is located at Monmouth, so it will be seen they have a live town. Wheat harvest was just going on Aug. 12, and that with hops is their chief crop, both promising well this year.

THE nineteenth century will not end until midnight, Monday, Dec. 31, 1900, although the old quarrel will probably again be renewed as to what constitutes a century when it winds up, and thousands will insist on a premature burial of the old century at midnight on Dec. 31, 1899.

GEORGE B. McCLELLAN, son of the famous general, says he has heard of enough buttons that came of the coat his father wore at Antietam to dam the North river. The last was said to be a contribution to the casting of the Columbian liberty bell. Mr. McClellan says the coat has never lost a button and that it is now in his possession. It has attached to it a card in General McClellan's handwriting bearing the words: "This is the coat I wore at Antietam."

THE maid servant problem ashore takes the form aboard the ships of the United States navy of the man servant problem. The conditions there are simple enough. Once a good set of ward room servants is obtained they may be kept during a cruise by not giving them liberty in port. They desert when this severity is relaxed, and a ship often gets home from a long cruise with a polyglot outfit of servants picked up at different ports. The problem is how to obtain men to do menial service at sea for wages no better than may be had in more agreeable employments ashore.

THE object of England's annual naval maneuvers is to give practice in handling vessels should there be a naval contest between fleets in the open sea, but such a contest is not so likely to occur, as that in case of war the fleets would be called upon to protect long lines of coast and commerce. Just how this may best be done by naval vessels is an unsolved problem. England's danger in the event of war would be more from the commerce destroyers of the enemy than from heavy battleships, and the annual naval maneuvers go but a little way in teaching how to protect commerce.

GEORGE PARROTT, of Lynn, Mass., has been pegging away at shoemaking and cobbling for eighty-one years, and his hand has by no means lost its cunning, as the pair of shoes he recently sent to the World's Fair will prove. He is 90 years old, and went into a shoe store as apprentice at the age of 9. He still works at a solid old colonial bench which was known to be one hundred years old when it came into his possession, eighty years ago. An unmarried sister of 87 keeps house for him, as his wife did twenty years ago. As the oldest shoemaker in Massachusetts Mr. Parrott is a local celebrity.

EPIDEMICS travel westward. Epidemics nearly always arise in the East, where defective sanitary arrangements, over-crowding, and heat greatly favor the development of the germs. There is more trade between the East and the West than there is between the East and places still further East. Hence the chances are that the infection will be carried westward. If we mark on a map of Europe the principal high roads of commerce and the direction in which some notable epidemics have traveled, it will be seen that the coincidence between the routes is more than accidental. This also explains how an epidemic can travel against the prevailing wind.

A BREAK-DOWN, some time ago, of one set of engines of one of the fast transatlantic liners afforded a startling illustration of the enormous cost of high ocean speeds. Part of the trip during which the mishap occurred was finished with the starboard engines alone. Comparing the three days' run with the single set of engines with a corresponding period on the previous voyage with both engines running, the average ratio of the speeds in the two cases was found to be as 0.82 is to 1. The loss of one-half the propelling power had the effect of reducing the speed by only 18 per cent. This ought to give the promoters of 28-knot steamship lines something to think about.

AN example should be made of some of the sharks who are conducting swindling "employment agencies" and other bunko games designed to fleece the unemployed in cities. During the present depression of business more than the average number of persons are out of work, and they are correspondingly anxious to secure employment. It is upon this class that the bogus employment agent, the bogus portrait enlarger, and the individual who wishes to hire a clerk "who has some capital" exercise their wiles. Of all swindlers, these people are the basest. They take from the idle mechanic, the unemployed clerk and the impoverished typewriter their last dollar, without the intention or the ability to render any return. The sandbagger or the highwayman is a prince compared with these creatures, who prey upon those least able to sustain the loss. The police should take summary action in regard to these swindlers, and the men who conduct them should be started on the road to prison without any delay.

THE resignation of Theodore Thomas as musical director of the Columbian Exposition and its prompt acceptance by the Exposition officials is a confession that the World's Fair Department of Music is a failure from a financial point of view. The artistic excellence of Director Thomas' work is beyond question. Boston, of course, sent up a lusty wail over the decadence of art in this wild and woolly, materialistic town. But Chicago with a large white elephant on her hands in a time of financial depression finds herself confronted by a condition, not a theory. The condition, too, has been costing about $1,800 a day without any appreciable return. Eighteen hundred dollars' worth of the "Gotterdammerung" is too much to crowd into an hour, no matter how artistically it is done, according to a Chicago paper. "Yankee Doodle," "After the Ball," "God Save the Queen," and "Comrades" at $14 a day come nearer the mark. Economy suggests the Bungtown Brass Band and "Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-ay," instead of Theodore Thomas' great orchestra discouraging Wagnerian discords at $1,800 a soulful. Chicago does not like Thomas and Wagner less but the Exposition and its box office more.

Telepathy.

For evening entertainments experiments in telepathy are just now in favor. An interesting one, that may include a number of persons, consists in blindfolding one of them and forming a circle in which all stand with hands joined. A card is selected from a pack, and placed where it may be plainly seen by all but the person blindfolded. He is expected to maintain a perfectly passive state, while the attention of the others is fixed exclusively on the card. After a time the image of the object on the card is "suggested to the mind" and named. In one instance where this experiment was tried, the ten of diamonds was on the card selected, and the blindfolded person, being ignorant of the object decided upon, described ten real diamonds that he saw arranged as they would be upon the card.

ACRES ARE IN ASHES.

RUIN WROUGHT BY THE SOUTH CHICAGO FIRE.

Many Families Destitute of Shelter, Food and Clothing—Thieves Pillage the Terror-Stricken People—Money Loss Not So Great as Reported.

A Blackened Waste.

Late reports say that the loss from the terrible fire which nearly swept the village of South Chicago off the earth will be at least one-fourth less than was estimated during the progress of the conflagration. The official report of the police is that 131 houses were burned in place of 200 or 250 as reported first. One who is familiar with the character and cost of the structures said that the average cost of the burned dwellings was $1,500, and that they were mostly insured. A conservative estimate of the losses on buildings, exclusive of the larger ones, churches and the like, is $196,500. It seems impossible, however, to get anything like an accurate statement as to the amount and value of property destroyed. By the time the cooler estimates of the fire were complete the total losses were figured like the sums given below:

LOWEST ESTIMATE.
131 buildings at Louis Frey's estimate of average cost of $1,500	$196,500
German Lutheran Church, 91st street and Superior avenue	14,000
Zion's Lutheran School, 91st street and Superior avenue	3,500
First M. E. Church, Superior avenue, between 90th and 91st streets	5,000
Sunday Creek Coal Company, George K. Edwards' estimate	50,000
A. T. Thatcher estate, coal plant, Harbor avenue and river	25,000
Total	$291,000

HIGHEST ESTIMATE.
131 buildings at George K. Edwards' estimate of average cost of $2,200	$286,000
German Lutheran Church at 91st street and Superior avenue	11,000
Zion's Lutheran School at 91st street and Superior avenue	3,500
First M. E. Church, on Superior avenue, between 90th and 91st streets	5,000
Sunday Creek Coal Company, Superintendent L. H. Bullock's estimate	175,000
A. T. Thatcher estate, coal plant, Harbor avenue and river	25,000
Total	$505,500

Various rumors were current as to the origin of the fire, which those best informed declared was caused by a small bonfire built by the children of Conrad Papp, who lived at 142 Ninety-first street. In some manner a spark from this bonfire fell upon some hay which was stored in a barn in the rear of Papp's house. A hot breeze from the northwest had blown steadily all day, and everything was like tinder. When the flames were seen bursting through the roof of the barn, the combustible material with which the Papp residence was surrounded proved to be ready fuel for their progress, and it was evident from the start that a serious blaze was inevitable. The flames were spread rapidly by the flying sparks in every direction, and seeing that the surrounding property was in imminent danger, Captain Wilson at once turned in a 4-11 alarm.

Another theory is that 9-year-old Birdie May, daughter of John May, who lived at 9048 Superior avenue, started the conflagration while at play in the yard of Patrick Tulley's house in the rear of William Giles' residence at 159 Ninety-first street. It is said that the child threw away a burning piece of paper she had lighted and it lodged under the porch of the Tulley house, setting the rubbish on fire, the flames from which caught the house. Mrs. Tulley barely escaped from the house with her two children. From there the fire spread to the Giles' house and soon through the entire burned district.

Nearly one hundred and forty buildings went down before the flames like straw in a furnace, and an immense district, twenty acres in extent, is all that remains in blackened and distorted ugliness of what was the site of a multitude of happy and contented homes. Immense lumber yards and huge coal sheds vanished before the fierce onslaught of the fire, and hundreds of South Chicago's population stood panic stricken and appalled around the charred fragments of their former homes. Utter desolation prevailed among the homeless. Women and children roamed the streets until 3 o'clock in the morning. Some of them were given shelter by kind neighbors. Others slept on the bare ground in back yards and vacant lots. Children were crying for food and their parents had none to give them. The community seemed paralyzed by the misfortune that had overtaken it.

If the stories of the homeless ones around those ruins are to be believed the excitement attending the fire was made the occasion of wholesale robbery. Men with wagons drove up to the houses nearest the fire, coolly loaded on their vehicles everything portable in the places and drove away in spite of the protests of the rightful owners.

SINGLE TAX CONGRESS.

Advocates of That Doctrine Meet at the Art Palace, Chicago.

A congress in which much interest is centered met at the Art Palace in Chicago. It was the single tax congress. Advocates of the doctrine of equal tax on all land and that nothing should be taxed but land were there and listened to speeches by the most noted advocates of that belief. Henry George, the Rev. Edward McGlynn, Jerry Simpson, and others nearly as well known were in attendance. Henry George spoke on "The Single Tax." The Rev. Mr. McGlynn followed him. His subject was "The Single Tax and the Church." The relation of single tax to the temperance question, the commercial crisis, education, the press, sanitary reform, and many other measures were discussed. The women advocates of single tax met in hall 3 and several female speakers were heard.

Otto was the bear and was going from his cousin on his hands and knees, when the latter pulled the trigger of a shotgun, which he had aimed at the "bear," not knowing the gun was loaded. The children were alone in the house, the older people being absent at a funeral.

THE papers have been signed for the location of the Raub Locomotive Works in Elwood. The deal includes all the platted additions in and around the city and consists of 10,000 lots. The buildings will cover sixty acres and employment will be furnished for 2,500 or more workmen. A free college, with $500,000 endowment, for the benefit of the citizens of Elwood, is in the contract. Work on the factory will begin in ten days.

A. R., and the time being so near that of our annual meeting, which was appointed for Portland, to be held on the 5th and 6th days of October next, it has been deemed best by a large number of members of the society, who have given expression to their opinion, to hold but one meeting this year, and that to be at Indianapolis, and held in the Criminal Court room, on September 6, where and when the usual program will be carried out so far as it may be possible so to do. We earnestly hope to meet you and your family there."

A GAS explosion that occurred at Morristown, probably fatally injured one and seriously burned four or five others. A gas engine and force pump on Main street furnish water to the principal part of the town. Jesse Denlinger had descended into the well to make some repairs to the engine, and while at work remarked that he couldn't see to fix it on account of the darkness. Some one above lighted a match, and this ignited the escaping gas. A fearful explosion followed, and a column of flame shot twelve feet into the air, with a loud report. Denlinger received the full force of the shock and the flames, and was frightfully burned from his waist up. It is thought he also inhaled the flames. Large pieces of flesh and skin fell from his hands and arms, and his face, neck, and breast are almost cooked. His recovery is thought to be doubtful. T. C. Wrenich, who was leaning over the well, was badly burned about the hands and face, but not dangerously. John Nelson, who stood near, was seriously burned and is in a bad way. All are suffering intensely from their injuries. Three or four others, who stood near, were slightly burned.

THE remains of an unknown man were found strewn along the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railway, ten miles east of Lebanon. It is thought he was a tramp.

MRS. DAVID DALMAN, wife of a prominent farmer, residing near Fort Wayne, committed suicide by taking arsenic. After taking the dose she walked to the field where her husband and hands were threshing and told what she had done and that she did not want to die alone, that she loved him, but her troubles were more than she could bear. She could not be saved and expired in great agony.

FRANKLIN was shaken up by a fearful explosion of a boiler in the Franklin Water, Light and Power Company's power house. The middle boiler of the three in the battery was the one which exploded. The brick building, including the dynamo room, was blown to pieces, and bricks, stones, pieces of machinery and debris were hurled in all directions for 250 yards or more. John Dennis, the fireman, was injured so badly that he will probably die. He was cut, bruised, scalded, and literally roasted, being caught in the hot bricks from the furnace. Martin Dennis, a brother, was also cut and burned about the face and shoulders, but not so badly.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

House committees were announced Monday by Speaker Crisp. Wilson is at the head of ways and means, Springer of banking and currency and Sayers of appropriations. The silver debate was continued. A large audience assembled to listen to Mr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky. Mr. Powers spoke for the Wilson bill, Hooker against it. Cooper thought it inexpedient to adopt free coinage at this time, and Mr. Sperry took the opposite view. Mr. Cox advocated free coinage and Mr. Little spoke in opposition. Other speeches were made at the evening session. Senator Morrill addressed the Senate at length in advocacy of the repeal of the purchase clause of the Sherman silver bill.

The House met at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning and the silver debate was opened at once by C. W. Stone (Rep.) of Pennsylvania, who spoke for repeal. Mr. Dalzell (Rep.) of Pennsylvania and Mr. Covert (Dem.) of New York pleaded for unconditional repeal. Mr. Fitch (Dem.) of New York followed in the same line. Mr. Hatch (Dem.) of Missouri, in speaking in favor of free coinage, advocated a caucus of the Democrats of the House and Senate to interpret the Chicago platform—every man of whom would pledge "his life, fortune, and his sacred honor" to abide by the decision. Among the bills introduced in the Senate was one by Mr. Pasco (Dem.) of Florida as a substitute for the minority bill of the Finance Committee (proposing silver coinage at 20 to 1). The substitute proposes a commission of three citizens of the United States to ascertain and report before January, 1894, the intrinsic relative value of gold and silver, and that on such report the Secretary of the Treasury shall fix and determine the ratio. The President sent to the Senate the following nominations: Joshua E. Dodge, of Wisconsin, to be Assistant Attorney General, vice W. M. Maury, resigned; G. M. Brumby, of Louisiana, to be Register of the Land Office at New Orleans; C. P. Johnston, of Louisiana, to be Receiver of Public Moneys, New Orleans; William D. O'Toole, of Washington, to be Register of the Land Office at Seattle, Washington; I. J. Wooten, of Delaware, to be Agent for the Indians of the Nevada Agency in Nevada. Also a number of recess appointments, including the Collector of Customs at New Orleans and a half-dozen Postmasters.

The Vice President announced in the Senate Thursday the appointment of the Committee on the Commemoration of the One Hundredth Anniversary of the laying of the Corner-stone of the Capitol as follows: Senators Voorhees, Sherman Ransom, Chandler, White, Squire and Martin. The House joint resolution, making the act of May 14, 1890, as to town sites, applicable to the Cherokee Outlet, was reported back to the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment requiring the trustees who are to be appointed to be residents of the territory of Oklahoma at the time of their appointment, and an effort was made by Mr. Berry (Dem) of Arkansas to have it passed, but objection was made by Mr. Manderson (Rep) of Nebraska and the bill was placed on the calendar. The silver debate was then resumed in the Senate, as also in the House.

Saturday, in the House, ex-Speaker Reed and Bourke Cochran spoke in favor of the repeal of the Sherman law. Mr. Bland followed Mr. Cochran, advocating free silver, and was followed by Mr. McMillin, of Tennessee; Mr. Gear, of Iowa; and Mr. Wilson, author of the Wilson repeal bill, who all oppose the Sherman law. The debate in the House was ended. The Senate will probably go right along talking silver, as it has been doing for several days. It will do this for two weeks, and probably longer, before the final vote will be taken.

FIENDISHNESS UNPARALLELED.

Crippled Beggars Manufactured to Order in Austria.

The most fiendish cruelty which has ever come to the notice of the Austrian authorities has been disclosed by the arrest of a gang of men whose profession was crippling young children to become beggars. The gang, which had followed this horrible practice for years, was discovered in Biskupitz, Croatia, Austria, and there was found the house which the fiends used for the purpose. The business to them has been a lucrative one. Young children were stolen from their parents and taken to the operating house, located on the outskirts of the town. Then they were bound and subjected to the most inhuman tortures. When the police forced their way into the house last week a horrible sight met their eyes. On cots were two girls, between 12 and 14 years of age, suffering frightful agonies. Each of them had both legs broken, which had been done purposely to make them cripples for life so that the profession of begging which they were to be compelled to follow would be the more profitable. Bound on a bed near by was another girl of about the same age. Her right arm was broken, and both eyes had been gouged out. Two other children hardly less horribly mutilated were found on cots in the cellar. Many instruments, which had been used in producing physical deformities, were uncovered in the cellar and were seized for evidence. The discoveries have caused the most intense excitement.

Military Ballooning in France.

Some experiments in military ballooning were made in Paris recently. Five balloons were sent up from the Esplanade des Invalides. The aeronauts in charge of them were instructed to descend within an hour as close as possible to Combs la Ville, after passing over a radius of twenty miles supposed to be occupied by an enemy. At half-past 4 o'clock a number of cyclists were sent off with instructions to pursue and capture any of the five balloons that failed to cross the zone of investment. M. Jacques Courty, in the balloon Patriote, carried off the palm. He alighted within a mile of the church of Combs la Ville. The ballon directed by M. Picq touched the ground only a couple of hundred yards further from the town, while M. Compiegne alighted from a third balloon at Reaux. The other two balloons fell within the radius, and were captured by the cyclists.—London St. James Gazette.

Wanted to Die Correctly.

"I wouldn't have minded it so much," said the prisoner, as he smiled a sad, sweet smile at the lady who had brought him the bouquet; "if the court had been a man of any culture——"

"Isn't it terrible to think of the dreadful, coarse, horrible fellows who are elected to honorable positions here in the West?" she murmured, sympathetically.

"Yes," he answered with a sigh, "to be tried and condemned by a man of his stamp was awful, and then when he said that I was to be 'hung' by the neck until dead it grated on my nerves more than I can tell you."—Detroit Tribune.

Cost of Rolling Stock.

"Few persons," says a railroad man, "have any idea of the enormous cost of rolling stock. The price of a single car ranges from $15,000 down to $380. The former is the price of a first-class Pullman car, while the latter is that of what is known as a flat car, such as are used to haul gravel and dirt. A common flat-bottomed coal car costs $500, while a car with a double hopper-bottom is quoted at a hundred more. A refrigerator car costs $550. A combined baggage and mail car costs $3,500, and a first-class coach is valued at $5,500."

Scientists May Differ

As to the causes of rheumatism, but there is no difference of opinion among them as to the danger which attends it, the symptoms by which it manifests itself, and the difficulty of dislodging it in its chronic stage. Several mineral and vegetable poisons are prescribed for it, but none of these has been shown by experience to possess the same efficacy as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This benign specific depurates the blood by promoting vigorous action of the kidneys, which strain from the blood as it passes through them the rheumatic virus when it exists in the system. Physicians of eminence testify to the value of the Bitters in rheumatism, and the professional opinions regarding it are borne out and corroborated by ample popular evidence. The Bitters remedy chills and fever, liver complaint, dyspepsia, and constipation.

The Useful Hot-Water Bag.

Every woman who knows the comfort of a hot-water bag wonders how she ever lived without one, for they have not been on the market many years. For cold feet, neuralgia, and various other ills they are an immediate and sovereign remedy. Cases are made for the universal comforters, having a flap like that of an envelope to button down. These cases may be of dainty embroidery or of simple flannel or linen. They should have a lining of oiled skin to retain the heat and a strap across one corner and made of ribbon or of the material of the case, by which to carry it.

Lightning Rods.

A good and effective system of lightning rods can easily be made of common one-inch steam pipe, provided with galvanized points at the upper ends. There is no advantage to be gained by supporting the pipes or rods on glass insulators, but it is of great importance to have plenty of points on exposed parts of the buildings, and a good connection with the ground, which is easily obtained by means of a well or water pipe.

HIS HARD LUCK.

A Valuable Ice Mine that Had a Hoodoo in It Somewhere.

The man with the negligee shirt was talking of hard luck, says the Buffalo Express.

"It's just this way," he said; "when things get to going against you there's no stopping them. Luck and hard luck run in streaks with every man, and when things get to coming your way there's no stopping them any more than there is when they get to going against you.

"As an illustration, let me tell you of an experience I had. About three years ago I began to have hard luck. I lost everything I had one way or another, and got into all sorts of trouble. Finally I landed in Richmond, Va., stone broke, without a friend to whom I could apply for aid and nothing ahead of me but a turn on the roads as a tramp. I could get nothing to do in Richmond, and I started out to tramp up North.

"It was as hot as Tophet. I tramped along day after day, sleeping on the ground and stealing what I had to eat, which was not much, let me assure you. One day I struck Stony Creek, which is in a wild part of the State. I followed up along the creek until I reached Stone mountain, and there I made a discovery. I found an ice mine. It was fully an acre in extent, and the ice was as clear as crystal. I realized what the find meant, and after taking my bearings carefully I made my way back to Richmond.

"It didn't take me long to get some capitalist interested in it, and we formed a stock company, with me as President, to work the ice the next summer. It looked as if I had a fortune in my grasp.

"Early the next summer we started to work it, but my hard luck came toddling along and did me up. There wasn't a month that summer when we didn't have frost, and there was absolutely no demand for ice. That left me stranded again in worse shape than before."

"I don't see why," put in the doubting Thomas, who wore a broad-brimmed straw hat. "Why didn't you wait and work it the next summer?"

"I told you I was in hard luck, didn't I?" asked the man with the negligee shirt, severely. "Well, I was. Although the summer was cold the winter was so warm that it melted every blamed bit of the ice and left nothing but a pool of water there, which was of no earthly use to anybody."

THE ATTRACTION OF THE ABYSS.

Why People Long to Throw Themselves from High Places.

Chevreul's well-known experiments with the exploratory pendulum and the divining rod show that if we represent to ourselves a motion in any direction the hand will unconsciously realize it and communicate it to the pendulum. The tipping tables realize a movement we are anticipating through the intervention of a real movement of the hands, of which we are not conscious. Mind reading by those who divine by taking your hand where you have hidden anything, is a reading of imperceptible motions by which your thoughts are translated without your being conscious of them. In cases of fascination and vertigo, which are more visible among children than among adults, a movement is begun the suspension of which is prevented by a paralysis of the will, and it carries us to suffering and death. When a child I was navigating a plank on the river without a thought that I might fall. All at once the idea came like a diverging force projecting itself across the rectillinear thought, which had alone previously directed my action. It was as if an invisible arm seized me and drew me down. I cried out and continued staggering over the whirling waters till help came to me. The mere thought of vertigo provoked it. The board lying on the ground suggests no thought of fall when you walk over it, but when it is over a precipice and the eye takes the measure of the distance to the bottom the representation of a falling motion becomes intense, and the impulse to fall correspondingly so. Even if you are safe there may still be what is called the attraction of the abyss. The vision of the gulf as a fixed idea, having produced an "inhibition" on all your ideas or forces, nothing is left but the figure of the great hole, with the intoxication of the rapid movement that begins in your brain and tends to turn the scales of the mental balance. Temptation, which is continual in children because everything is new to them, is nothing else than the force of an idea and the motive impulse that accompanies it.

The Eider-Duck.

In a country so poor as Iceland the down of the eider-duck is an appreciable source of wealth, and the bird has been practically domesticated. Close to every little handel-stad, or trading station, if there is a convenient island, there is sure to be a colony of eider-ducks, and the birds are to be seen by hundreds swimming and fluttering about their island home, or squatted upon its shores in conscious security from the foxes which infest the mainland. From the largest of these "duckeries" as much as three hundred pounds is cleared annually, the down being worth about a sovereign per pound on an average. The ducks make their nests among the rough hummocks characteristic of all grassland in Iceland, laying their large olivegreen eggs upon neat little beds of down, "so soft and brown." They are perfectly tame, allowing themselves to be lifted off their eggs and replaced with only a few querulous notes of remonstrance. When the nest has been repeatedly robbed of the down, and the poor duck finds difficulty in replacing it, the drake comes to the rescue and recognizes his paternal responsibility by furnishing a supply of down from his own breast.

The "Teeth" on a Razor's Edge.

The edge of a razor consists of innumerable points or "teeth," which, if the razor is of good material, follow each other throughout its whole length with great order and clearness. The unbroken regularity of these minute "teeth" go to make up the blade's excessive keenness. The edge acts upon the beard not so much by direct application of weight or force as it does by a slight "seesaw" movement, which causes the successive "teeth" to act rapidly on one certain part of the hairy growth. The best razors, according to the microscopists, have the teeth of their edges set as regularly as those of a perfectly set saw. This explains the magic effect of hot water on the razor's blade—the act of dipping it thoroughly cleansing the teeth of any greasy or dirty substance with which they may have been clogged. Barbers often claim that razors "get tired" of shaving, and that they will be all right after awhile if permitted to take a rest. When in this "tired" condition a microscopic examination of the edge shows that constant stropping by the same person has caused the teeth or fibers to arrange themselves in one direction. A month of disuse causes these fine particles to rearrange themselves so that they again present the heterogenous, saw-toothed edge. After this little recreation each particle of the fine edge is up and ready to support his fellow, and it again takes some time to spoil the grain of the blade.—St. Louis Republic.

Big Bank Notes.

It is said that two notes for one hundred thousand pounds each and one for fifty thousand pounds each were once engraved and issued. A butcher who had amassed an immense fortune as an army contractor in war-time went with one of the fifty thousand pound notes to a private banker, asking for a loan of five thousand pounds, and wished to deposit the large note as security with the bank, stating that it had been in his possession for several years. The sum asked for was of course handed over at once; but the financier took occasion to hint to the holder the folly of which he was guilty in hoarding such a sum and so sacrificing the interest.

"That is all very true and sound sense, sir," replied the man; "but I likes the look o' the critter so very well that I have got t'other one of the same at home."

A wealthy but eccentric gentleman in London once framed a bank post-bill for thirty thousand pounds and exhibited it in his study. At his death, which occurred five years later, the extraordinary picture was promptly taken down from the wall and cashed by his heirs.

It is said that several years ago, at a nobleman's house in the neighborhood of the Marble Arch, a dispute arose about a certain passage which was declared to be scriptural. A learned dean who was presen denying that there was any such text in the sacred volume, a Bible was called for. After quite a search a dusty old Bible which had lain upon a shelf since the death of the peer's mother was produced. When the volume was opened, a book-marker was found in it which upon examination proved to be a bank post-bill for forty thousand pounds. Why it had been placed there was never discovered. Perhaps the lady had thought it a good means of inducing her son to search the Scriptures.

Color of the Hair.

Between men's pursuits and the color of their hair there is a direct relation, we are told. An unusual proportion of men with dark, straight hair enter the ministry; red-whiskered men are apt to be given to sporting and horseflesh, while the tall, vigorous blonde men, lineal descendants of the vikings, still contribute a large contingent to our travelers and emigrants. Birds and insects have the best of us here; their outside covering may be changed by diet; but man remains what nature made him to the last. Suppose for a moment that a protective color, like that which obtains in the fields, woods and hedgerows, ruled in the world of men, what an amazing change would ensue in the outward appearance of affairs! If a rogue could but at will assume the perfect guise of an honest man, and the gilded wasps of society appear as mason or honey bees, or were saints and sinners alike compelled to wear their own unmistakable livery, what a changed world would this of ours be! But no such world is possible. We have to be content with a medley of sober realities, where, though "white spiders" generally come to grief, the confidence trick still flourishes, and "men are mostly fools."

The Tower of Silence.

When a Parsee dies the body is wrapped in white, and the mourners, as they go to the burial place, are clothed in white. Two by two they walk behind the white-robed corpse as it is carried to the "tower of silence," which is its final resting place. This is a large stone tower, on which the body is placed and left to be eaten by the vultures. There are five such towers in Bombay, and the big birds constantly hover about them in large numbers. They are treated as if they were sacred birds. "Is this form of burial a good one from a sanitary standpoint?" was asked of a Parsee. "We believe it is. Cremation is doubtless the best from this standpoint, but in India the people are so poor and fuel is so scarce that the Hindus are not able to practice cremation universally. Moreover, the Parsee believes it is better to be eaten by birds than by worms. Burial in a grave is repulsive to us."

The Feet.

Doctors very strongly recommend foot baths for those whose feet trouble them. Walking heats the feet, standing causes them to swell, and both are tiresome and exhaustive when prolonged. There are various kinds of foot baths, and authorities differ as to their value. Hot water enlarges the feet by drawing the blood to them; when used they should be rubbed or exercised before attempting to put on a tight boot. Mustard and hot water in a foot bath will side-track a fever if taken in time, cure a nervous headache, and induce sleep. Bunions, corns, and callousness are Nature's protection against bad shoe leather. Two hot foot baths a week and a little pedicuring will remove the cause of much discomfort.

THE VENICE OF THE EAST.

Bangkok, the City of Smells, Where the Death Rate Is Appalling.

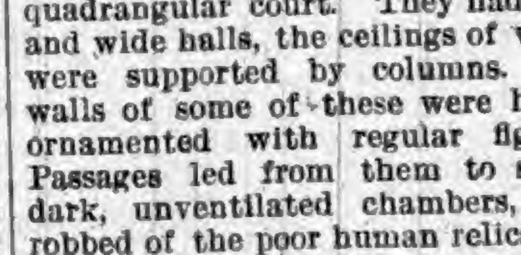
Bangkok, the capital of Siam, has been termed very unhappily the Venice of the East. The New York Tribune thinks that perhaps as regards smells (in which alone there is any comparison between them) it would have been juster to call Venice the Bangkok of the West. But even then an outrageous affront would have been offered to Venice. It is useless even to attempt a description of the smells of Bangkok. To do so would require a quarto volume, to catalogue them would require the services of an analytical chemist, and to read the account of them would rather leave the reader in blissful ignorance of his subject. The streets are the repository of every form of refuse and are never swept or cleaned by the hand of man. It is appalling to contemplate what must be the death rate in a city inhabited by 350,000 to 600,000 persons, especially in periods of great cholera epidemics, such as attend a failure in the wet seasons. Eastern droughts are frightful calamities. A weak monsoon means insufficient rainfall for the rice crop. The cool season, November to January, is followed by the terrible hot season, during which never a drop of rain can be looked for. The River Menam—"Mother of Water"—polluted by every conceivable and inconceivable abomination of animal and vegetable matter, the rotten corpses of men and carcasses of beasts, is very low; it is, moreover, tidal at Bangkok, and its pestilential waters, with their hideous flotsam, are driven back every high tide by the waters of the sea and rendered dangerously brackish. The stream is the color of pea soup. Fill the jar and stir the water with a piece of alum, and in ten minutes it will be as clear as the purest spring water; all its suspended matter will have sunk to the bottom into a thick gray stratum. But woe to the stranger mad enough to taste the glassy poison! Let him first say his prayers and then "good-by." If it be considered that the natives drink this fetid liquid without any such precautions as even the clearing alum it may be imagined what a cholera outbreak means. They die by hundreds daily. The vultures and pariahs cannot devour the bodies fast enough; the river cannot carry them down against the tide. A truly terrifying picture is that of an Eastern city in a cholera epidemic. As a matter of fact, cholera is always an epidemic, and so loses its terrors for the apathetic native until it be upon him.

ANCIENT MONUMENTS.

Sepulchral Ruins of the Zapotec Indians in Mexico.

Among the sepulchral monuments of Mexico the most remarkable perhaps are those of Mitla, in the state of Oajaca. They are in a secluded and gloomy valley called the "place of sorrow." Here, it is said, was the burial place of the Zapotec kings, and this was the Westminster Abbey of the ancient inhabitants. Here the living came to mourn with ostentatious sorrow, aided by a body of priests whose lives were dedicated to expiatory sacrifices for the dead.

The ruins are extensive and in many respects architecturally peculiar. They indicate the existence of edifices, the walls of which were of adobes, or sun-dried bricks, or indurated clay faced with cut stones, so arranged as to form ornamental figures in relief, strikingly like those of the ancient Etruscans. The buildings were all raised on terraces and arranged around the four sides of a quadrangular court. They had long and wide halls, the ceilings of which were supported by columns. The walls of some of these were highly ornamented with regular figures. Passages led from them to small, dark, unventilated chambers, now robbed of the poor human relics they were intended to preserve. These tombs were opened by the Spaniards, who even sought in graves the gold that was the aim of many of their expeditions.



RUINS OF MITLA.

IF THE OCEANS WERE DRY.

They Couldn't Be Filled Up Again Because the Rivers Would Disappear.

"Suppose the ocean bed were empty, how long would the rivers of the world have to pour themselves into it before it was filled again, presuming there was no loss by evaporation?"

Answer by the Brooklyn Eagle: This question, or one very like it, has "gone the rounds" for a good while. Its terms seem to infer that some things have been forgotten in formulating it, as will be seen. The oceans and seas on the surface of the globe, representing 145,000,000 square miles, with an average depth of 2,000 fathoms, are calculated to contain 3,276,600 billion tons of water. If this were all evaporated and the basins left dry, it has been computed that, at the rate of thirty-six cubic miles per day (the estimated flow of all the rives in the world), it would occupy 35,000 years to replace and create a complete circuit of the whole of the seas as they at present stand. But this requires a further assumption, namely, that the rivers would continue to flow at their present capacity, which would, in fact, be impossible if the ocean bed were empty and dried up. If such a thing happened the river beds would soon follow suit and be also empty, as the sea is their great source of water supply. It is estimated that every year a layer of the entire ocean fourteen feet thick is taken up into the clouds and returns to the earth in the shape of rain, keeping its springs and rivers supplied with water. Stop this supply and the rivers of the world would shortly and quickly disappear, rendering it impossible for them ever again to fill the sea to its present extent.

Postal Cards of the World.

It seems almost incredible that there should be 8,000 varieties of postal cards, but that is the extent claimed for the Watson collection. These, however, include various issues of the same nation and denomination and also cards issued for special occasions.

Postal cards have been in circulation a little less than twenty-four years, declares the Collector. The idea originated with Dr. Emanuel Hermann, a professor of national economy at the Imperial Academy of Wiener, in Neustadt, Lower Austria.

His ideas, under the head of "New Means of Correspondence by Post," were published and attracted the attention of the government officials. The Director General of posts took up the idea and succeeded in having an issue of postal cards put in circulation in 1869. The original name given to them was the "correspondenz karte," and this has been retained ever since. This new move on the part of Austria quickly excited other countries to adopt a similar method of correspondence, and before the close of 1870 nearly all the European countries were using cards.

Germany was really the second country to use them, and a special series was issued to the soldiers engaged in the Franco-German war. These were called the field-post correspondence cards and were sold unstamped to the soldiers at the rate of about five for a cent. The soldiers had the privilege of using them without paying postage. Another series was issued for civilians. These had a place left for a stamp and the writer had to affix a German postage stamp to the card before posting. The field post cards are now rare, the used ones being scarcer than the unused ones.

Another card of equal rarity, and also a reminder of the same war, is the balloon postal card, issued by France during the siege of Paris. The cards were sent up from Paris in balloons, and the mail bags were thrown off into the surrounding country, when there was the least possible opportunity of their capture by the enemy. They were smaller than the postal card now in use, and were covered with war-like expressions, as "Paris defies the enemy!" "Glory and conquest signify crimes, defeat signifies hate and a desire for vengeance." "Only one war is just and right—that for independence."

The United States was rather backward in adopting the postal-card system, and did not use them until 1873. The first issue printed was of reddish color, with the head of Liberty in the right-hand corner. As a rule, Uncle Sam's cards have been inferior to those of other countries in excellence of engraving. The designs also have not been very artistic. The blue card bearing the portrait of Gen. Grant is the finest specimen of art work issued by the United States Government.

Wealthy Chinaman.

Wah Chong, a wealthy Chinese merchant of Seattle, Wash., made his fortune in building up American trade with China and in importing Chinese laborers in past years. He is said to be worth over a million dollars. He had several wives, both here and in China, one of them an Indian woman, the mother of a son 16 years old, of whom he is very fond. Wishing to leave his property to his son, his Chinese children born in this country having no claim to citizenship, he appealed to the courts on the ground of the mother being a native, and judgment was rendered in favor of the boy. Wah Chong's large interests in realty were acquired years ago, when a Chinaman could hold property. Under the existing law this right is denied them, nor will a bequest of property to them hold good.—New York Tribune.

Patti's Fondness for Candy.

The great Strakosch, who taught all the famous songbirds from Patti to Nikita, was continually at war with cooks and candymakers. "Child," he used to say to Patti, "do you want to make jelly of your vocal cords? For heaven's sake pitch that candy out of the window and go and drink a little water."

But Patti went on eating cream dates and gumdrops, and stopped only when the toothache came. Mrs. Roger Pryor said to the diva the last time Patti was in New York: "I remember meeting you in Virginia the time of your debut, and I thought you could eat more candy in less time than any human being I had ever seen." Although the sweet stuff had not hurt her marvelous voice, Mme. Patti paid for it with her teeth.

Days of Varying Length.

At Stockholm, Sweden, the longest day is 18½ hours in length; at Spitzbergen it is 3½ months. At London, England, and Bremen, Prussia, the longest day has 16½ hours. At Hamburg, Germany, and Dantzig, Prussia, the longest day has 17 hours. At Wardbury, Norway, the longest day lasts from May 21 to July 22, without interruption. At St. Petersburg, Russia, and Tobolsk, Siberia, the longest day is 19 hours and the shortest 5 hours. At Tornea, Finland, June 21 brings a day nearly 22 hours long, and Christmas one less than 3 hours in length. At New York the longest day is about 15 hours; at Montreal, Canada, it is 16 hours.

Beggars.

During the reign of Henry VIII 71,400 persons were legally executed in England, the larger portion of whom were guilty of no offence worse than misdemeanor. In one year 300 starving beggars were hanged for asking alms.

A Book in a Tree Trunk.

There have been numerous stories told of the finding of live frogs in the heart of a tree which was sound in its outward appearance, but perhaps the best tree story of the series comes from Ware County.

A negro there, as the story goes, was cutting down a pine tree, when the blade of his ax disclosed numerous thin particles of printed paper.

He was naturally amazed at this, but kept chopping away until he discovered the remains of a leather-bound book, which subsequently proved to be a testament or small bible.

There was a considerable hollow in the heart of the tree, but it was not visible from the outside.

The leaves of the book were old and faded, and the question is, how did it get there?

This is the second occurrence of the strange finding of strange articles in Georgia trees within the last month or two.—Atlanta Constitution.

An Overstocked Intellectual Market.

The number of employed graduates of German universities has become so great that some of the most eminent professors in Germany, including Poof. Von Gneist, Von Esmarch, Klam-Roth, and Osthoff, have felt compelled to come to their rescue. These professors have prepared a circular which is to be addressed to Germans in all parts of the world asking the recipients to reply whether there are possibilities of employment in their particular dwelling places for educated German teachers, physicians, druggists, lawyers, ministers, and engineers. The professors hope in time to form a sort of central employment bureau, so that graduates may start to seek their fortunes in foreign lands with some hopes of success. They expect at the same time to relieve the overstocked intellectual market at home.

A Handy Egg Tester.

To make an egg-tester to use with a common lamp, follow these directions as given in the Fanciers' Review: Take a pasteboard box about seven inches long, six inches wide, and six inches deep. Cut a hole in the bottom big enough to fit the large part of a lamp chimney, and a hole opposite in the top just large enough to let the top of the chimney through. Next cut a hole about the shape of an egg, but rather smaller, in one end, so that it will be opposite to the lamp flame when the tester is slipped over the chimney. Now cover the box outside with any dull, black cloth, so that no light can get through, and you are ready for business. Light the lamp, place the tester in position, and the egg to be tested over the oval opening in the side. Turn it gently as you look, and its condition will be clearly exposed to view.

What are the Dog Days?

We owe the notion of the Dog Days to the old Romans. These days embrace the period between the 3rd of July and the 11th of August. Falling thus in the height of summer, it need not have surprised the Romans that July must naturally be a very hot month. But this explanation was too simple. So they made out that the heat and the diseases that it gave rise to were due to the fact that the star Canicula (the Little Dog) rose and set at the same time as the sun. This was an absurd superstition, for the Little Dog does not rise with the sun now till the end of August, and yet July remains as hot as ever it was. But popular delusions die hard, and the "Dog Days" will be a favorite phrase for ages to come.

Nothing Like It.

"I have traveled about a bit in my time," remarked a tall, triangular, gentleman last evening, as he cast aside a magazine he had been reading, "and of wonders I've seen a few; I've been in Indiana; I've been in Connecticut; I've been in New Jersey; I've talked with all sorts and conditions of men; but I've never heard a man talk as these dialect poets write, and I hope I never will. Do you know where I can find a water cooler?"—Washington Evening News.

The Telephone.

A writer in Electricity has succeeded in establishing telephonic communication between houses in the same city several hundred feet apart by using the gas and water pipes, with a two or three cell battery, instead of wire. The gas and water pipes, he found, are usually insulated from each other, and his experiment was entirely successful.

POOR HEALTH FOR YEARS.

Mr. Willcox is a practical farmer and Postmaster in the village where he resides, and is well known for miles around. He writes—"I had been in poor health for a long time. Four years ago the crisis came, and a number of our best physicians said I would not live a year. I began using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, Kidney, Liver and Bladder Cure; then my doctor said it might help me for a time, but I would not be here a year hence. My difficulties, aggravated by Rheumatism, were so bad I could not get either hand to my face. I continued the medicine nearly a year, and now I am as well as any man of my age—sixty-eight years.

Swamp-Root Saved My Life and the good health I now enjoy is due to its use."

Mistakes in Schoolbooks.

Errors in School Books is the name of a small book sent out by the Columbia Bicycle Co. They give a bicycle to persons who send a statement containing the greatest number of errors found. As an example, one sends this; Page 15. Harper's Introductory Geography, has this; "The earth has two different motions. It turns around on itself so to speak; that is one motion; and it moves in a circle around the sun—this is the other motion." Another error to which attention is called, is this; "In the Picturesque Readers, second Book, in speaking of codfish, the author says, When very fat, a cod does not bite very readily.

Here is a chance, on even these two errors, for our teachers to use their knowledge. We will publish a correction for either of them, if sent in, in a reasonable time.

Butterine or Oleomargarine.

Many of our readers do not know just what this new product is, or how it is made. We speak of it in general terms as "oleomargarine", and look on it with very little favor. Yet it is probable that we eat many things that are much worse. As seen in the agricultural hall at the world's fair it looks neat enough and this is how it is made.

Butterine is composed of butter, butter oil, neutral lard and oleo oil.

Elgin creamery butter and butter made at the factory daily are the milk products used in butterine.

Butter oil is made by pressing the oil from American cotton seed. It is a pure, nutritious vegetable oil, which is used in small quantities to soften the texture of butterine.

Neutral lard, is pure, chiled leaf lard, cooked at a low temperature, and is then put into a bath of pure cold water for about 48 hours, which removes all flavor leaving a perfectly neutral material.

Oleo oil is made from the choicest fat of beef cattle, chilled in ice water, then melted at a temperature of 140 degrees Fahr. From this is pressed a perfectly soluble oil known as oleo oil, which is the only beef product used in butterine.

The above named ingredients, when properly combined, salted and worked the same as butter, form what is known as butterine, which is one of the purest and most wholesome articles of food in general use.

Rev. Davies has sent in his resignation to the trustees of the Baptist church of this city and will leave in the near future for other fields of labor. Mr. Davies has been an earnest worker and in leaving Garrett the entire community wish him abundant success wherever he may go.

A few weeks ago, A. Kindler, of the firm of Kindler & Co., Royal Mustard, Oil and Drug Works, 589 and 591 Mission street, San Francisco, Cal., accompanied by a friend, started to pay a visit to their native country—Germany. They stopped at Chicago, and saw the fair and then took No. 8, the eastbound fast passenger on the B. & O., for New York. Almost immediately after leaving Chicago, Mr. Kindler went into the toilet room. He stayed in the room long enough to arouse the suspicions of the train crew and Brakeman Hilgartner went to see what the trouble was. He saw the man bending over the basin and saw the blood running, but thinking he had the nose bleed, almost forgot the matter In a short time again, however, he had occasion to go to the toilet room, and when he opened the door a horrible sight met his eyes The man had slashed his throat in a horrible manner and was there trying to cut the arteries in his arm. He was taken to the baggage car and his hands tied so that he could not get at his throat. When the train reached this city, he was taken off and Dr Thompson called. The doctor sewed up the wounds he had made. Five stitches were required. He will live. Insanity is said to be the cause of the deed.

A couple of B & O. detectives have been in the city for several months past and while no one knew their mission here, their presence created not a little comment. Saturday morning the news flew over town that the "spotters" had arrested two men for stealing silks from a freight car and that these men were George Arnold and M E. Phelps. As far as we can learn, these men took the goods from the car last fall and had sold them. The affair has created a great deal of excitement, as both men connected were heretofore prominent citizens. George Arnold was quite a political worker and at one time was city marshal. He was nominated on the democratic ticket at the spring election for the same position and was defeated. He has always been believed to be an honest and upright man and walked in good society. The other man, M. E Phelps, is proprietor and manager of the Sargent house on the corner of Quincy and Peter streets. As far as his business connections with the hotel is concerned, his reputation for honesty has been unquestionable. The men were given a preliminary hearing before Justice Walborn at Auburn Monday. Phelps plead guilty and Arnold not guilty of the charge. They were bound over to await the action of the circuit court. It is thought that other arrests will follow later.

The man that is taking pumpkins from Will Smurr's field should look a little out as Will's blue eyes have spotted him.

After several months of suffering, Mrs Samuel Plotner was relieved by death Saturday evening. The funeral services were conducted at their farm residence Monday at 2 p. m. and the remains interred in the Kinderhook cemetery. Thus another pioneer's work is done.

The bicycle people seemed, to have changed their foreman—a Mr. Myers from Indianapolis we understand has taken the position of foreman.

C. M. Lewis, who removed to California about one year ago, is expected back this week. His return is caused by the serious illness of his daughter, whose health has been seriously impaired by the climate of California.

Quite a sensation was created on our streets one morning last week, by parties claiming they had caught a well known citizen stealing flour from a feed store. An arrest and trial followed, resulting in his acquittal. We are unable to express an opinion on the merits of the case.

The yearly meeting of the Christian church was held in Benesse woods, 1½ miles south of Butler last Sabbath. The day was most lovely, the recent rain effectualy laid the dust, and the large numbers assembled seemed to enjoy themselves very much. A Bit of History.

Republican protection has a short and instructive history. Here it is in a few words, and the facts and dates here given may be verified by any man who has access to documents. Republicans themselves will not deny these facts and dates, though they will hardly agree to the conclusions that must be drawn from them by fair minded men.

When the so called Morrill tariff was passed in 1861 the tariff then in force was extremely low; in fact, the lowest since 1816, and the country had not had a really high protective tariff for many years. Speculation in no way connected with the tariff has paralyzed business in 1857, and the Morrill tariff was adopted avowedly to increase a dwindling revenue. It increased duties, but Mr. Morrill himself has declared that it was not asked for and was coldly welcomed by the manufacturers. Senator John Sherman declares that the manufacturers wished to be let alone.

That was the first advance of duties after 1857, but it did not mark a return to protective feeling, and Mr. Morrill declared that it was the intention of the act to restore the duties of 1846. Now, the tariff of 1846 was in the main a revenue tariff.

When the country got well into the civil war large revenues became necessary, and in July, 1862, an internal revenue bill, taxing domestic manufacturers, was passed. In the same month a new tariff bill was passed. Its authors declared that it increased duties only in order that highly taxed domestic products might not have to compete with low taxed or duty free imported products. Thus the first dose of Republican protection was merely to make up to domestic manufacturers for the taxes exacted by the internal revenue. In some instances, however, duties were high enough to do a great deal more than this.

Other tariff acts were passed in 1863 and 1864, in each case, it was declared, for the purpose of offsetting the effects of the internal revenue taxes. But the framers of the bill were genuine Republican protectionists, and in many instances they permitted the manufacturers who were to profit by the measure to say just what certain duties should be. The bill was passed in haste, especially by the senate.

This practically closes the series of war tariffs, and the tariff as it was after the act of 1864 has been the basis of all subsequent tariffs with a few conspicuous exceptions and many trifling variations. The average rate of duties on dutiable goods in 1865 was rather more than 47⅛ per cent.

When the war was over congress began to take off the internal revenue taxes, and by 1872 all domestic products save spirituous and malt liquors, tobacco, matches, patent medicines and a few minor articles were made tax free. It must be remembered that the excuse for Republican protection to domestic manufactures was the fact that they were taxed for the purpose of raising internal revenue. When the latter taxes were removed, of course the high protective duties should logically have been removed. But they were not. Manufacturers, fattened by Republican protection, demanded that it be continued, and continued it was. In fact, duties in special cases were increased from time to time.

The cry of protection to infant industries was raised and the workingman was likewise put forward as an excuse for continued Republican protection. In spite of a growing sentiment against the evil system the interested manufacturers have been able to maintain duties on most articles, and now we have the McKinley tariff avowedly passed as a radical measure of Republican protection, with revenue as a mere incident.

Every Man His Own Protection.

There lives in New York an Irishman who sometimes goes over to his native isle, and who learns a thing or two at each visit. Upon one of these visits he found that one workingman in the region where the visitor found himself was paid considerable more per week than his fellows got. "Why do they pay you more than these other men get?" he asked the laborer. "Because I'm worth more," was the answer. "I've been to America and learned how to work."

Any one who knows American working men and workingmen abroad can understand this. We are the nerviest, cleverest, hardiest people on earth. It is not boasting to say this; it is simple truth. Not only is this true, but it is also true that intelligent foreigners coming to America soon catch our ways and learn how to do almost the work of two days in one. A man who has studied the Italians says that when these men first come to America they are slow and awkward, but they presently learn how to work and develop into excellent workmen. This is as true of skilled as of unskilled workmen. The Italian mechanic is accustomed to lighter tools than we use in America, and he finds himself at a disadvantage until he learns the ways of our people, but if he has the stuff in him he gets to doing an American instead of an Italian day's work.

A contractor who had built railroads all over the world said that the cost per mile was no more in Illinois at $1.35 per day for labor than in British India at nine cents a day for labor. The talk about foreign pauper labor and the danger of its competition is a humbug. We need not fear it, because it is pauper labor. The laborer to be feared is the fellow who can do a bigger day's work than the American laborer, and he has yet to be born.

In British India a man who is not more than fairly well off will have a dozen servants in his house, each at ridiculously low wages, but they will not do the work of two wide awake women with American training, and their wages, taken altogether, amount to more than you'd pay to three such women.

Where American workmen are paid more than foreign workingmen it is because they are worth more and not because of protection. If you hire ten skilled workingmen of American birth or training to do a piece of work and pay them $3.50 per day, the cost of doing that work will be thirty-five dollars a day. If you hire three times as many unskilled, untrained, inefficient men at one-third the wages, you'll pay the same amount in the aggregate and get no more work done.

But are there no foreign workingmen as skillful and efficient as American workingmen? In a few trades there are foreigners who can do things that our people cannot do, or can do but poorly, and those men are often as well paid as American workingmen. In other trades there are skilled foreigners whose hours are shorter than those of workingmen in America, or who use less labor saving machinery, and therefore get less work done. As a rule, however, the day's labor of an American is worth more than the day's labor of a foreigner who has not learned our ways, and for that reason the wages of the American are higher. The best protection of American labor lies in the energy, skill, intelligence and persistency of the American laborer. "Every man his own protection" is a good cry.

Trials of Sudden Wealth.

Mrs. Gaswell—It just makes me mad. Here I go out shopping in my $5,000 Worth dress, and just loaded with diamonds, yet folks think I'm poor.

Mr. Gaswell—They does?

Mrs. Gaswell—Yes, they do. I went into Antique, Design & Co.'s grand store today to get some furniture for the new house, and at first they didn't show me anything but a lot of old second-hand stuff that looked as if it had come over in the ark.—New York Weekly.

GENTLEMEN: I feel it my duty, as well as a pleasure, to publish, unsolicited, to the world the benefit received from DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE REMEDIES. The arteries in my neck would throb violently, the throbbing of my heart could be heard across a large room and would shake my whole body. She was cured by Dr. Miles' remedies I have taken three bottles of your New Heart Cure and two bottles Nervine. My pulse is normal, I have no more violent throbbing of the heart, I AM A WELL MAN. AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1872—Continued.

The courts convened as term time came around; the bell rang its notice to all interested; but then as now, it was subject of remark that so few were the numbers present, so little the stir made that unless attention was called to the fact, the proceedings would hardly have been observed by the public.

But there was much work to do and done. The dockets were long and the cases were numbered by the hundred.

Again grand jurors making their required report "found the jail unhealthy, and not worth repairing." They suggested action at an early day with the view to the erection of a jail suitable to the wants of the county and "the enlightenment of the age." This language implied that the condemned building was a reflection upon the spirit of the public and not in keeping with the progress of improvement in the county seat. The financial condition of DeKalb had materially improved. County orders were at par and treasurer Ryan in July, called for redemption all warrants on the treasury issued prior to June, 1872. This favorable showing gave an impetus to the demand for a new jail, but several years were destined to elapse before action was taken on the subject.

The fall election was spiritedly contested by the two great parties with the not unusual result in DeKalb county of a partial victory to each. W. L. Meese was elected sheriff, Nicholas Ensley, treasurer and C. R. Wanamaker, a commissioner on the republican ticket, while a democratic majority was found for D. Z. Hoffman for a second term as recorder, N. Griffith, commissioner and C. C. Clark for surveyor.

Rev. W. L. Meese prior to and since his official service has been known as a man of generous impulses, social, cheerful and agreeable, a Christian constant and loyal to his church in response to whose needs he knew no stint; and a citizen unobtrusive and exemplary. When his term of office had expired, he engaged in insurance and finally assuming ministerial functions as an exhorter in the M. E. church, has held camp and other meetings with gratifying success and popular good will and appreciation.

Mr. Ensley brought to the conduct of financial matters relating to the county treasury, an experience ability and a practical recognition of "public trust" that has never been excelled by any incumbent of that responsible position. Following a term as state senator, he was in 1888 appointed state pension agent necessitating his removal to Indianapolis where his business tact in an extended field has been exerted in so simplying and systemizing the work of his important office, that millions of dollars have been disbursed far and wide in thousands of homes with a promptitude that invited comparison with any other agency, merits the hearty thanks of the invalid pensioner and approves his appointment by the government.

Mr. Hoffman continued in the office of county recorder, added to previous qualifications a pains-taking experience which combined, so marked his ability and fitness for this kind of work that successive recorders have found it to their interest and that of the public to retain him in a position where system, accuracy, and penmanship conduce so greatly to facile and ready reference to public records.

Poor Clark had taken great pains to educate himself under trying circumstances only to be cut off in the flower of his age ere he had completed the first year of his term as county surveyor. He died Oct. 4, 1873 in his twenty-third year, had the respect and confidence of the public and gave much promise of future usefulness.

From brief biography, we turn to the story of temperance reform whose field of action was the commissioners' court in the court house at Auburn. Never have the possibilities of local option been made so apparent as at this time when the saloon element reinforced by railway employes, wielded strong social and political power.

We have called attention to the formation in DeKalb county of a society whose object was local suppression of intemperance. This association had met in Dec. 1871 in convention at Auburn and elected officers for 1872. The Rev. Sanford Basset was chosen president, Jas. Griswold vice-president, John Hogue treasurer and Daniel D. Moody secretary.

The society for the time arranged to secure lecturers and to form auxiliary associations, to enlist popular support and strengthen the organization.

The movement grew in favor and in November, 1872, a spirited and enthusiastic meeting was held at the M. E. church at Auburn, which found expression in the radical resolution, "That we as an organization are opposed to the granting of license to any applicant to sell spirituous liquors."

Messrs. Ward, Moody and Lockhart were appointed a committee to petition the state legislature to enact a liquor law and local aggressive work began when at the December session of the county board of commissioners, Edward Eldridge, William Tess and William Miller having made application for license to retail spirituous liquors, were successively attacked and defeated. In this contest Messrs. Moody and Peterson acted for the prosecution and Messrs. Plum and Rickel for the defense. Opinion was divided on the rejection of the Eldridge application, but no sympathy was shown for the others. The excitement attending the discussion was unusual and the victory breathed new vigor to hopes of temperance people whilst it gave the cause a firmer foothold for future contests.

Looking backward to 1872, the prospect shone bright as compared with the dark and disheartening present whose fitful and futile efforts have given the saloon element confidence in applications and immunity from prosecution, till the brief examinations as to "fitness" are treated farcically, and license money is begrudgingly paid as an imposition.

IT DID NOT COME OFF.

THE PRIZE FIGHT AT ROBY, IND., STOPPED BY MILITIA.

The Columbian Athletic Club in the Hands of a Receiver—Farmer Robbed by Highwaymen—Trouble Expected at Galveston, Texas—Carnegie's Steel Mills Start Up.

NO FIGHT AT ROBY.

Governor Matthews' Soldiers Awe the Fighters.

Seven hundred officers and men of the Indiana National Guard, fortified with swords, bayonets, rifles, a Gatling gun and twenty-seven thousand pounds of ammunition, bivouacked at Roby, Ind., Monday night, outside the arena of the Columbian Athletic Club. The finished fights which had been announced to take place between young Griffo, champion feather weight of Australia, and "Kid" Lavigne of Bay City, Mich., for a purse of $6,500, and Jimmy Barry of Chicago, and Johnny Conners of Springfield, Ill., for a $1,500 purse, were called off before the military demonstration was made at the club house. Benjamin Hayes of Crown Point, Ind., who was appointed receiver for the club early in the day, served an order on Charles Fredericks, Sheriff of Lake County, that he should allow no more prize fights at the club house. The Sheriff went to the club house at 6 o'clock and gave notice to the men in charge, leaving a dozen deputies to see that the order was respected. Dominic O'Malley, president of the club, and the men who intended to fight threw up the sponge after 4 o'clock in the afternoon. No special trains were run from Chicago. Except for the militia the Roby sporting resort was as dull and fully as dark as a cemetery. Less than a hundred sports came out on the electric road half doubting and half hoping that there would be a fight, or at least some fun with the soldiers. "Kid" Lavigne was the only fighter who remained at the club house all night. He was not half as disgusted as Griffo over the action of Governor Matthews in sending the national guard to see that the fight did not come off. Much is expected by the sports from the test case which is to be tried next week in the Lake County court.

No such military demonstration to prevent a prize fight has been seen in this part of the country, and it awed the small crowd of spectators. The militiamen arrived on the scene at 9 o'clock by special trains on the Lake Shore and Fort Wayne roads, both of which run close to the club house.

All was dark and still, but the commanding officers suspected a ruse to swerve them. Picket lins were thrown out and a company of boys in blue were detailed for sentry duty around the big enclosed arena. The young citizen soldiers expected to see some resisting force and their surprise was tempored with a feeling of satisfaction that they would not be ordered to fire on fellow citizens. Some officers went into the arena and found a small party of men taking care of the place, but no signs of a fight.

Only twenty-four hours rations were brought on each train and no camp equipments so that the officers and men fared alike. A plank sidewalk with a blanket covering served as a couch for those not on duty but no one grumbled. The stopping of the fight will cost the State of Indiana some money as well as the Columbian Athletic Club.

Beaten by Thugs.

James Cobb, a wealthy farmer, was returning home from Valparaiso, Ind. When about three miles from home he was set upon by two men, who jumped into his wagon and attacked him with a club, knocking him senseless, and robbed him of $150. He is badly cut about the head and there is a liability that he will lose his eyesight. Officers have been searching for the thieves, but have not found any clew. When Mr. Cobb's team reached home, the senseless and bleeding body of the farmer was found lying in the bottom of his wagon.

A Genuine Day for Labor.

Pittsburgh special: Every department of the Carnegie Steel plant at Homestead was started Monday morning giving employment to about 2,000 men. About 500 are yet idle. They will also be provided with work within a few days. About 700 men were given employment in the Braddock Wire Works, which resumed operations. No wage reduction was offered as has been anticipated.

Coinage Comparisons.

The issue of standard silver dollars from the mints and treasury offices for the week ended September 2, 1893, was $554,441; for the corresponding period of 1892, $660,155. The shipment of fractional silver coin for the month of August was $1,038,046; for the corresponding period of 1892, $1,437,622.

Bank Reopens.

After being closed two months the First National Bank of Grundy Center, Iowa, opened its doors with new officer and a strong list of stockholders.

Business Houses Burned.

A fire at Conway, Iowa, started in B. F. Thompson's grocery store, and in a short time had consumed the grocery, a drug store and a dry goods store, several business offices, the postoffice and three stables, sixteen buildings in all.

Mysterious Death.

Mrs. Matt Thomas of Kelso, Ind., died very suddenly while preparing to take a trip. The case is shrouded in mystery.

Indiana Soldiers' Monument.

There was an enormous amount of rejoicing among the Grand Army people at Indianapolis when it was announced that the soldiers' monument commission had decided to remove the Mexican war dates from the top of the monument and leave only the date of the civil war. This is the most imposing soldiers' monument in the country, and the Grand Army contributed about $35,000 toward its cost, with the understanding that it was to commemorate the late war. When the commission in charge of it put the dates of the Mexican war on the upper astragal, posts all over the country protested; the Encampment objected, and the National Encampment took up the fight by declining to assist in dedicating it. The Commission has voted to remove the dates and now all is serene.

BUSINESS BAROMETER.

R. G. Dunn & Co. Review the Situation.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

The House has passed the silver bill by a majority astonishing to its friends and a favorable result in the Senate is now believed not to be far distant. Instant improvement in the stock market followed, the average prices rising over $2 per share, and there was also a rise in wheat, cotton, and pork. Money markets throughout the country are more healthy, failures diminishing in number and resumption by a number of banks and other establishments illustrates the general tendency toward revival of confidence. Manufacturers do not yet feel the upward impulse and exhibit on the whole rather less signs of improvement than a week ago. After some days of encouragement, too, stocks began to drag again, and in speculative circles somewhat less confidence was seen. But in these and in the money markets the record of the week has been mainly one of satisfactory progress toward recovery.

Wheat was affected to some extent by the Vienna report.

Corn yielded a little with more satisfactory crop reports, but in spite of better advances from the more important cotton producing States the price of that staple was advanced an eighth. The stock carried over from the crop last year just closed, without any allowance for such a decline in consumption as has been witnessed during the past half-year, apparently renders it certain that there will be no cotton famine for a year to come. The stock of American cotton at home and abroad is about 1,800,000 bales.

BROTHER SNEED

Led in Prayer Just Before the Lynching.

Will Ackison, colored, aged 20, who assaulted the little Upthegrove girl, was hanged by a mob at South Fork, Ky. The crowd numbered probably 150 men, and, with few exceptions, was quiet and orderly. Ackison was brought before the girl and acknowledged his crime. He said he did not know why he did the deed, but supposed the devil was in him. When asked if he desired the services of a spiritual adviser he said: "I would like for some one to help me pray, but it will do no good. I go into eternity an awful sinner. Tell mother I got into serious trouble and must die an awful death, and through you I bid her and my sisters a long farewell. Send my body home to Mrs. Millie Ackison, Harriman, Tenn. She is my mother. I am guilty and have nothing more to say."

After a brief prayer by M. W. Sneed the mob led him a short distance away and hanged him to the stringers on the south end of the trestle spanning South Fork River. Sam Upthegrove, the girl's father, gave Ackison a good supper, told the mob to not fire a shot into his body, but to be sure that no breath was left in it when the rope was severed.

MOB RULE.

A Lot of Hoodlums Make a Raid Upon Chinamen.

Some time ago the citizens of Selma, Cal., gave the Chinese laundrymen notice to leave by the 1st of September. No force was to be used and the Chinamen were preparing to leave peaceably. The other night a mob of vineyard hands and tramps, led by T. B. Vinzent, manager of the Stroud vineyards, came to town and made a raid on the Chinamen. All houses in Chinatown were broken into, the money tills and trunks of the Chinamen were forced open and rifled, and clothing, cigars, and other goods were stolen. The mob marched through town taking seven Chinamen with them, when Constable Spencer ordered them to stop and no heed being paid to his order, he opened fire with Winchesters. Six shots were fired. The mob broke and ran, but the officers secured help and overtook them. There are eleven men under arrest and warrants are out for several others.

TROOPS CALLED OUT

To Prevent Mob Violence to Three Prisoners.

Louisville special: The State troops have been called out at Pineville to save from mob violence John and James Marlin and George Wagner, who were arrested as being members of the gang who fired into a passenger train on the Middleborough belt line the other day. The prisoners were removed to the Pineville jail for safe keeping. A mob of 150 men is searching for other members of the Rice-Green gang, and a lynching is threatened.

Mrs. Mary Bowling, who was fatally shot has died, and this has created much excitement in the neighborhood where she lived. It is now said the object of the attack on the train was not robbery, but an attempted assassination of Henry Wilkins, a mine foreman who was aboard. A mob from the coal mines has been increased by others since the death of Mrs. Bowling and trouble is expected.

RAVING MANIAC.

Samuel Deeters Shoots Three Persons and Two Will Die.

A horrible shooting scrape occurred near Butler, Ind., which will cause the death of two and probably three prominent residents. Samuel Deeter, a wealthy and respected farmer residing two miles west of this city, became demented and procuring a revolver shot and fatally wounded Amos Bachetel, Mrs. John Lowe and William Yates. Bachetel was shot in the groin, Mrs. Lowe in the side and arm and Yates in the back and arm. After the shooting occurred Deeter then set fire to his mother's barn, burning up all this year's crops, the loss amounting to several thousand dollars. The maniac was finally captured by the officers and is now in safe keeping.

Death in Flames.

Berlin special: The hotel in Salmbach, a hamlet in the Wurtemburg Black Forest, was burned recently. Sixty young women from cities of Baden, who were passing their holidays in Salmbach, were in the house when the fire broke out. Most of them were aroused by the town watchmen in time to escape down the stairs. A few saved themselves by jumping from the second story windows. Four were suffocated in their rooms, and their dead bodies were taken from the ruins. There is no fire department in Salmbach, and no systematic effort to save the hotel or its occupants could be made.

Terrific Explosion on Board a Steamer.

Pacific mail steamer Barracouta has arrived at San Francisco in a badly shattered condition. The deck house, hatch, and saloon were wrecked and match wood made of the vessel's fittings. The captain reports that on the 27th, shortly after noon, when twelve hours out of Comax, B. C., sixty miles off shore, when the steamer's course had just been shaped for Acapulco, a terrific explosion occurred doing the damage stated. The explosion seemed to have occurred in the hole among the coal and the captain thinks it was dynamite, but has no reason to suspect any one.

Terrible Crime of a Love-Sick Youth.

A terrible tragedy has occurred in a village near Buda-Pesth. A young man at a ball, exasperated because his attentions to a young lady had been slighted, imagined that if he inherited his father's large estates he would be an acceptable suitor. Accordingly he returned to his father's house and killed his parents, who were in bed asleep. With a hatchet he then murdered his six young brothers and sisters. Then he returned to the ball and danced the remainder of the night. The next day he was arrested on suspicion. He confessed the crime.

Gladstone Congratulated.

A cablegram has been sent by the officers of the National Federation of America to Gladstone, congratulating him and the liberal party on the passage of the home rule bill. Following is the closing paragraph: "We earnestly hope that God, who has bestowed upon you such wonderful mental and physical powers, will prolong your life and enable you to complete the great work of ending internecine strife, bringing peace and strength to the empire, and peace and prosperity to Ireland."

Thought it Unloaded.

"Do not shot me," playfully exclaimed the bride of Leo Stafford, while the latter was carelessly handling the revolver and talking of shooting himself at their home on Trenton street, East Liverpool, Ohio. Stafford pointed the weapon at his wife and pulled the trigger, little thinking that it was loaded. It was discharged, the ball striking the woman in the left jaw and ranging downward lodged in the neck below the ear, inflicting fatal injuries. They have been married but six weeks.

Home Rule Wins.

London special: Gladstone's long home rule fight in the House of Commons is ended. The bill was passed by a vote of 301 to 267. There was unusual animation along the route from Gladstone's residence to the House of Commons. The streets were crowded with people who wished to catch a glimpse of the great champion of Irish home rule and although there was no organized demonstration, the prime minister was cheered throughout the route.

Cholera at Leerdam.

Amsterdam special: Nine fresh cases of cholera and five deaths were reported in Leerdam recently. The Dutch-American Steamship Company has notified its agents that all emigrants before embarking must remain five days under the observation of an American physician in the company's hospital. The emigrants will not be allowed to come or go at pleasure, but will be obliged to sleep and eat in the hospital.

"Depletion of Canada."

London special: The Pall Mall Gazette has an article on the "Depletion of Canada." The writer advises an entire stoppage of assisted emigration to Canada, and endeavors to discredit the Dominion in the eyes of the people of Great Britain. It is believed the article is due to United States influence, and the fact that William Waldorf Astor is now proprietor of the paper gives color to the suspicion.

Strike for Wages.

Peoria special: The freight business of the Jacksonville Southern Line, running between here and St. Louis, is tied up by a strike, the trainmen refusing to work on the ground that their wages had not been paid since June. The railroad officials have notified all connecting lines that freight will not be received until the matter is settled.

The Pesky Grasshoppers.

The counties of Clark, Jefferson, Floyd, Harrison, and Washington, Indiana, are afflicted with a grasshopper plague, and farmers are at a loss to know how to exterminate them. On many farms in the territory named the pests have stripped the corn and trees of their verdure, thereby causing heavy loss of cereal and fruit.

Defeated the Rebels.

Buenos Ayres special: Advices have been received from Corrientes that the troops, in disregard to the order of the National Government's Arbitrator, attacked the rebels at Santo Toma and seized and sacked the town.

An Editor Hurt.

Carl Huber, editor of the Correspondent of Portsmouth, Ohio, was thrown from his buggy and quite seriously injured. His blooded mare ran into a hitching-post in its fright and it will have to be shot.

A Cholera Message.

Secretary Probst, of the Ohio State Board of Health, has received a telegram from the authorities of Jersey City, N. J., announcing that cholera has broken out there.

Proctor Don't Want It.

Ex-Governor Proctor Knott of Kentucky, has been offered the Hawaiian Ministry and declined it.

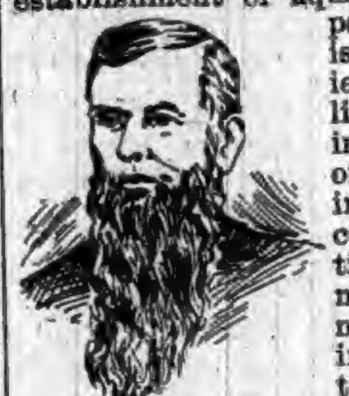
FISHES AT THE FAIR.

MOST COMPLETE COLLECTION EVER SHOWN.

Salt and Fresh Water Species from All Climes—Appliances Used in Their Capture and Preparation for Market—Admirable Arrangements for Display.

In the Swim.

World's Fair correspondence:

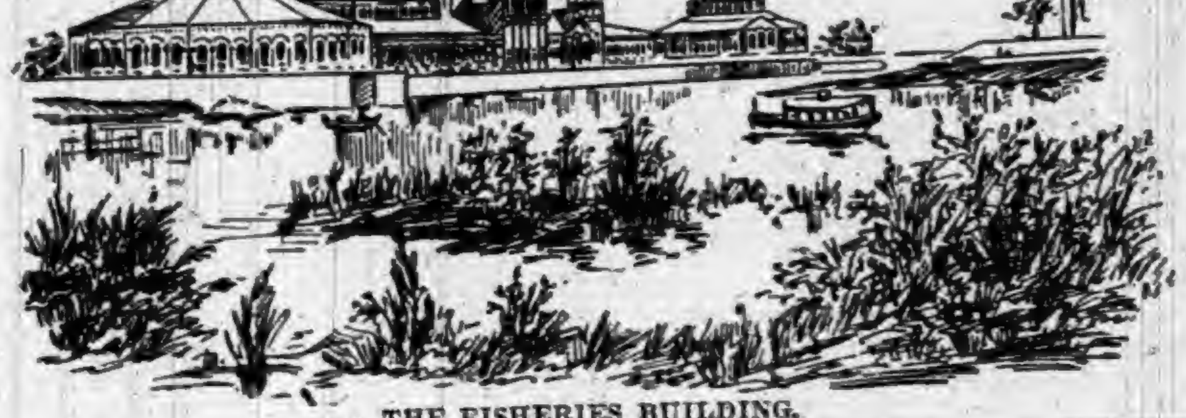


CHIEF COLLINS.

A department of the World's Fair that in all probability will lead to the establishment of aquaria in different parts of America is that of fisheries. Besides the live fish, which include specimens of those that live in salt water, are complete collections of the implements used by all nations in catching and curing them. Fishing has not received much attention at international exhibitions. London had an exposition devoted entirely to fisheries nearly ten years ago that, of course, was finer than the present display, but in Chicago a very great deal has been done to illustrate the industry, and that, too, without any American precedents.

Of all the foreign countries Canada sent the biggest display. There are models of fish, stuffed fish, and fish-eating birds. A seventy-pound salmon from Queen Charlotte Sound, British Columbia, suggests a lot of possibilities to the teller of fish stories. Bark and dugout canoes from the west coast of Canada tell the story of the Indian angler, and a little model of his home and its surroundings shows where he is when not on the water. A right whale and a shark, well mounted, show other productions of the Dominion.

New South Wales has a group of Australian seals climbing over some rocks, and many pictures of her fish and fish markets. The activity with which the Norwegians search the ocean is illustrated by their exhibit. Real fishing boats that savor of the hardy viking are there, bearing such names as Aafjord, Avendale, Rahen, and Tromsoe. As far north almost as Spitzbergen these sharp-prowed crafts part the waves, their masters on the hunt for cod and seal. A model of a viking ship is here to show the little change of model that has been made in a thousand years. Norwegian stock fish and cod liver oil are here in large quantities. They give a sea flavor to the atmosphere, and you can almost see the fish jumping in the nets and hear the boat's keel rubbing on the beach and the swash of the surf if you close your eyes for a moment. All sorts of canned fish from old Norway are piled up, and there is a fisherman's hut from Lofoden showing how two or three boats' crews bunk in a roughly built pine board box. Gloucester, Mass., which is not too proud to own up that its greatness is due to its fisheries, has staked out a lot of space in which it glories in the fact. It tells of the past and present condition of its industries. A model of the town as it was one hundred years ago, with cob wharves and cheap little fish sheds, is shown, and then the town proudly points to a model of a section of the town as it is to-day. How the wharves and the warehouses have grown! The very men who pace the piers in miniature seem to have a sense of their increased worth.

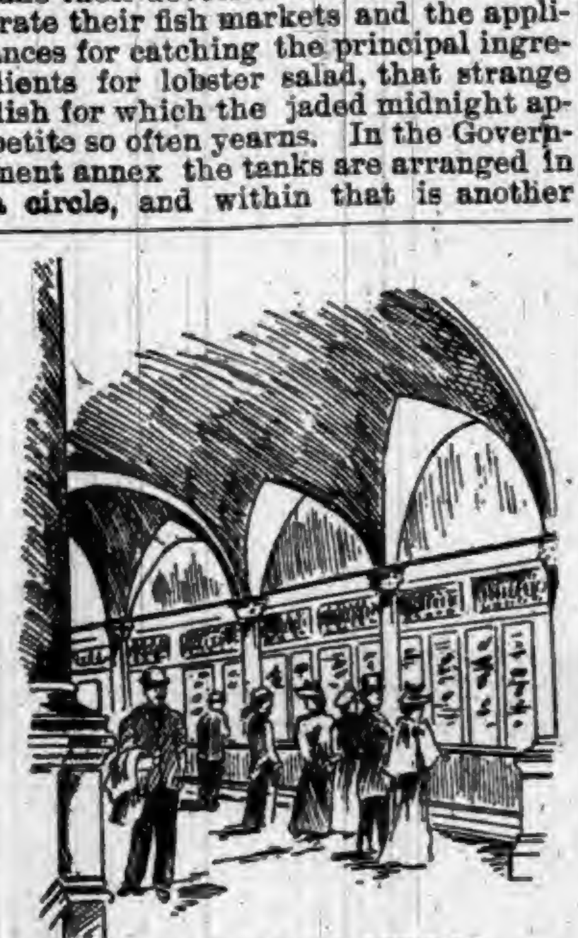


THE FISHERIES BUILDING.

Bound to Sight Mackerel.

A ship's topmast thirty feet high is shown and on the crosstree is a Gloucester fisherman eagerly looking out for a school of mackerel. Another model is that of a man at a wheel ready to point the ship's cutwater in the direction of those mackerel, in whichever point of the compass they are sighted.

A fine model of a boat, with the men in it hauling in their herring nets, is in the pavilion of the Netherlands, and there are barrels of herring and photographs on screens of the fishery work. Minnesota sends not only fish but fish-eating birds. The only machinery in motion in the whole building is an apparatus shown by a Chicago man for cleaning fish. Bostonians forsake their devotion to beans and illustrate their fish markets and the appliances for catching the principal ingredients for lobster salad, that strange dish for which the jaded midnight appetite so often yearns. In the Government annex the tanks are arranged in a circle, and within that is another circle, a very effective plan as it turns out. The design of the fishing schooner Grampus, belonging to the Fish Commission, was the work of Capt. Joseph W. Collins, and in command of that vessel he made many very interesting cruises.



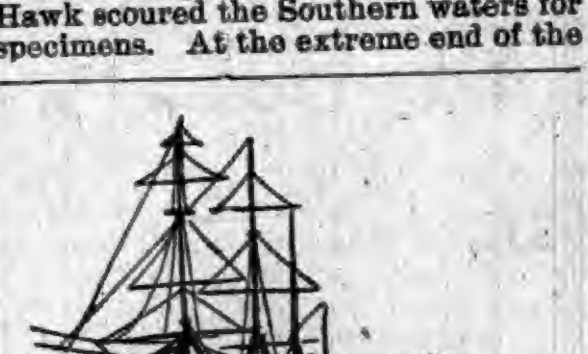
IN THE FISHERIES BUILDING.

The exhibition of salt-water fish and anemones is an experiment which a good many people who knew shook their heads about. At first the sea water was brought to Chicago in car boys, such as are used for the shipment of acids, but this was found to be too expensive and tank cars were substituted.

What Sea Water Costs.

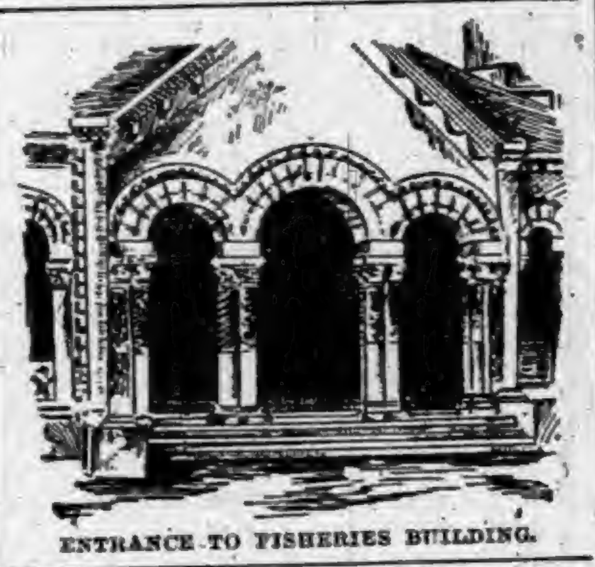
Sea water in Chicago is almost as expensive as beer. The greatest care is taken to keep it from being wasted. About 70,000 gallons of it are kept on hand. After a quantity of it has been kept in a tank for a sufficient length of time it is drawn off and is run into a filter in the cellar made of stones, gravel and sand in strata, as in natural soil. This is to impart new life to it. Then it is pumped back into a tank reservoir over the tanks and used again. The water runs in such a way as to become aerated again. For the use of big Mississipi fish is an aquarium 72 feet long, 5 feet deep and 12 feet wide. It contains catfish, sturgeon and pickerel. The lake fish, which include sturgeon, whitefish and bass, were gathered at the Put In Bay station on Lake Erie. The Atlantic fish were collected at Wood's Holl, Mass. The government steamer Fish Hawk scoured the Southern waters for specimens. At the extreme end of the main Fisheries Building is the angling annex, devoted entirely to the consideration of fishing as a pastime. There the sporting clubs, the gentlemen fishing liars and the fly and rod cranks can flock by themselves and argue it out. A New York sportsman's paper has a pavilion in which it exhibits yacht models and photographs having reference to the art of fishing. Outside of the annex is a reproduction, by the way, of Izaak Walton's fishing house, in which there is an oil portrait of the old gentleman.

An interesting exhibit is that of the American Anglers. It includes fishing boats, tents and furniture. There is a display also of the flies, rods, reels and tackle and some young women engaged in tying flies on the hooks and making fishing lines. Pennsylvania makes an aquarium exhibit. It has built a small hillside down which trickles a stream. This runs through a fishway and into a pond on the floor. Around the pavilion are tanks, the iron work of which is skillfully concealed, and the visitor has the effect produced on him that he is at the bottom of a lake, the waters of which are kept away from him in the same way as those of the Red Sea were divided. Wisconsin also contributes some live fish, and both that State and Pennsylvania show small hatcheries in operation. Primitive boats and tackle used by the Indians of the Amazon and the more modern appliances are in the exhibit from Brazil. They contrast strangely with the steel rods and the graceful flies of North America.



VIEW OF LAGOON, SHOWING WHALER PROGRESS.

I have sketched in a general way the most entertaining features of the Fisheries Building. Outside of these there are all sorts of exhibits with Latin names that are of absorbing interest to the specialist. He can flock by himself and devour the literary works of aquatic zoologists and botanists. He can wrap himself up in maps telling all about geographical distributions of fish. Fishermen, if they want to know all about what there is in this building, must study algæ (very sticky looking things with arms that wave in the water), sponges, corals, polyps and jelly fish. Some of these forms of life so nearly border on the vegetable that it is a little difficult for a non-expert to tell to what kingdom they should be assigned. But they have such a quiet, easy, Philadelphia way of taking life that they are a standing reproach to the superexcited Chicagoan.



ENTRANCE TO FISHERIES BUILDING.

Then comes the grand array of worms that dwell under water, and that, spurned by the soaring fishes, get their revenge when they are put on the point of a hook and used as bait. All the bait worms are exhibited, and the leeches. Then are seen the reptiles, such as turtles, terrapin, lizards, serpents, frogs and newts. Some compromise ought to be effected with the United States Fish Commission by which turtle, terrapin and frogs' legs are not classified with the reptiles. It is decidedly unpleasant to a man of taste. The aquatic birds, mammalia, such as otter, seals, whales and such like live things, are there in minute detail.

Fishy Literature.

In the sea fishing and angling sections you can find, in addition to those more dramatic and readily discernible items that have been brought to your attention already, books on the history of fishing, its laws and its commerce, charters and seals of fishermen's guilds, fishery laws of different countries, including that of New Jersey prohibiting shad from containing bones, reports of and literature of fishes, in which is comprehended some of the most deliberate lies ever told about size and weight and yarns about the acclimitization of fish. Then there are fishhooks, jigs and drails and gear until you get tired of looking at it, nets and seines, weirs and pounds, knives and gaffs. The implements used in entrapping whales, seals, cod, mackerel, halibut, herring, haddock, menhaden, swordfish, bluefish and the snares for beguiling the wily oyster and the elusive sponge. The only things not shown are pictures of sea serpents, the real bait that no fishing man will leave home without a bottle of, and devices for catching "suckers." But these are caught everywhere most openly in Chicago, and would not be attractions at a place where an admission fee is charged.

CROOKED nails are always an indication of pride, even to haughtiness.

A PARTY of hunters made a ghastly find in a secluded part of the woods on the County Poor Farm near Newcastle. It consisted of the remains of an old man who had committed suicide by hanging. The unfortunate is thought to have been Israel Shinn, a demented old pensioner, who wandered away from his home in Dunreith some weeks ago.

A DETERMINED case of suicide took place in the County Jail at Lafayette. A man slated under the name of John Daily was put in for safe keeping. Shortly after he was locked up it was discovered that he had succeeded in cutting his throat, making a ghastly affair of it. The wound extended completely around his neck, and was a clean cut to the backbone. He had considerable difficulty in cutting his windpipe, but had sawed and hewed at it until the razor went through it.

AN IDYL OF HONOLULU.

A Bold Stroke for a Husband. Written for This Paper.

BY LEON LEWIS.

CHAPTER III—Continued.

"I will now tell you who the young man is," said Bullet, drawing his chair nearer to his daughter. "His name is Ralph Kemplin."

"Ralph Kemplin? Any relation to the Kemplins in whose ship you used to sail?"

"Yes, the only son of that Kemplin. I see that I have not talked to you in vain about my old employer and his family. This youth is now on his way around the world. Here is a great bundle of papers by which his identity is perfectly established. I do not know exactly how he got into his present fix, but I am going to town soon to make inquiries, and in the meantime I can guess about how it was——"

"In what kind of a fix is he?"

"He has been waylaid—probably with an eye to robbery, as his pocket-book is gone, his watch, and so on—and in the struggle he has received a blow on the head that has utterly destroyed his memory. You've heard of similar cases; at least the medical books are full of them. He don't know anything about himself and his history. It's all a blank to him—his past, who he is and where he is. He don't even know his own name!"

Alma looked shocked.

"He's an idiot, then?" she murmured.

"No, nothing of the kind. He has simply lost his memory, forgotten how to read, forgotten his friends—even his sweetheart, if he happens to have any. He has the same tastes and passions, however, as before his injury. He is, in fact, the same man as before, except in so far as regards memory and its various offices and connections."

"How odd!" ejaculated Alma. "He must be a sort of grown-up baby!"

"The very thing!" returned Bullet. "That expression describes him perfectly. Yet he still has the airs and manners of a cultivated gentleman, doing from habit and instinct what he has been accustomed to do by reason."

He narrated briefly how Kulu had fallen in with Ralph, and all the circumstances—so far as known—under which the sufferer had come into his keeping.

"And, now that he is here," concluded Bullet, "what a field of action is opened to you! In three or four days the poor fellow will be physically well, but in all probability his past will continue a blank to him. We will give him a new name, and you must teach him his letters, and get him to reading again, and study geography and history with him—in a word, make a man of him upon his new basis. And, while you are thus engaged, if you are as able as I think you are, you will at least win the young man's gratitude, and most likely his affection, and so become his wife. And once you are his wife, I will speedily make a pretense of discovering who and where his father is, and restore them to each other. As you and your husband will be the sole heirs of the merchant's vast wealth, you become a great lady at one jump. Now, what do you say to the project?"

"I think it can be carried out," answered Alma, as a look of eager resolution mantled her face. "At least, I will do all I can to make a success of it."

A few details established a full understanding and harmony between the father and daughter, and they awaited with impatience the moment of Ralph's awakening to enter upon their nefarious conspiracy.

At the end of two or three hours a stir in the little bedroom announced that the sufferer was awake, and in an instant Bullet was hovering over him,

"You feel better now, sir?"

"Oh, so much better."

"Do you feel well enough to see my daughter? She's to help me take care of you."

Ralph assented, and Alma at once entered. Bullet introduced her to the patient, who greeted her with mechanical politeness.

"You can't recall your name yet, can you?" asked Bullet.

The sufferer contracted his brows painfully a few moments, and shook his head sadly.

"We shall have to give you a new name, sir," pursued Bullet. "Suppose we call you Ashley Benning, after an old friend of mine?"

Ralph nodded a weary assent.

"Ashley Benning it is, then."

A few minutes the father and daughter conversed with their patient, and then they proceeded to their little kitchen, intent upon making him a nice broth and a gruel.

"You see that he is started upon his new life," muttered Bullet, rubbing his hands gleefully together. "All trace of Ralph Kemplin is lost until we choose to find it. This young man is simply Ashley Benning, and his life dates from the present. He is, in fact, an entirely new creation. All we have to do is to be secret and cautious, and keep all knowledge of him from everybody until you are his wife, and we shall then find ourselves on the very pinnacle of happiness and fortune! The first great step is taken!"

It was, indeed. It only remained to be seen what would come of it.

CHAPTER IV.

RALPH IN HIS NEW CHARACTER.

Beneath a cocoanut tree, upon the slope of a gentle declivity overlooking the little valley in which the Bullet premises were situated, reclined Ralph Kemplin in an attitude of dejected thoughtfulness, toward the close of one of those dreamy and beautiful days by which the neighborhood of Honolulu is distinguished.

"Strange, strange!" was the sighing ejaculation that at brief intervals broke from him.

The sound of light footsteps, accompanied by the rustling of a woman's dress, at last aroused him from his sad and profound musings, and he gathered himself up into a sitting posture in time to receive the daughter of the old ex-sailor, Miss Alma Bullet.

The girl was dressed coquettishly, and it could have been seen at a glance that she had acquired a great many new charms and graces since her acquaintance with Ralph, just as meaner things are polished by contact with better.

"Ah, here you are, Mr. Benning?" she said, with a forced smile and an equally forced assumption of lightheartedness. "I wondered what had become of you. I was afraid you might have wandered off into some danger."

"Oh, I know too much for that," returned Ralph, with a bitter curling of his lips. "I have been taking a long walk among the hills——"

"And yet you know that I do not want you to go so far upon these lonely rambles," interrupted Alma, with a look of keen anxiety.

"Well, why not?"

"Because — because there may be enemies looking for you in some of those lonely ravines," declared the girl, with the air of having been forced to say something she would have preferred to keep secret. "I dare say some of the—the native young men may be jealous of you."

"Jealous of me? Impossible! They know that I am only a poor waif upon whom your father and you have kindly taken pity. They know that I am only a pensioner upon your bounty and not a suitor for your hand, Miss Bullet."

The girl sighed, as she tore in pieces a bunch of wild flowers she had gathered.

"They may not know all this—those native young men who used to try to pay me attention," she murmured; "and some of them, I know, are very ugly and malicious, and that is why I have so often begged you not to wander away so far, and why I have asked you to be always on your guard. You have been ten or twelve miles, I suppose?"

"Yes—or more. How can I help moving? I am too worried and excited to remain motionless. Finding myself a little tired upon my return from this long ramble, I dropped into this pleasant place to rest."

"Shall we read a little more to-day?" asked Alma, after waiting a few moments for Ralph to continue his account of himself.

"No, no—thank you! I am tired of geography, tired of history, tired of even your ancient Greeks and Romans!"

"Then perhaps you don't wish me to remain here at all?" breathed the girl, sadly, while a tear welled up slowly into each eye.

"Yes, I do—of course, of course," returned Ralph, quickly, looking as if his conscience smote him for those tears. "Sit down here beside me. I am always glad to see you, as you ought to know by this time. Come when you will, your coming is always welcome. How could it be otherwise after all you have done for me?"

Sending a quick but comprehensive glance in every direction around, as if to assure herself that no intruders were near, the girl seated herself upon the velvety sward near Ralph, and promptly recovered her calmness and all the studied charms of her voice and manner.

"It's no wonder you are tired of reading and studying," she murmured. "How constantly we have been poring over books during the time you have been here! You were only a few hours in learning the letters of the alphabet, and since then we, have exhausted the whole stock of books upon the island. Even the missionaries have little more to lend us. But you must certainly feel that you are paid for all this trouble. You know almost everything—all that is usually taught in the schools, and all that is to be learned by an extended course of select reading."

"I am certainly improved from the ignorant creature I was when you took me in hand," returned Ralph, with a sad smile. "Then everything was so strange to me, as if I had just dropped down from the skies. I had no idea of the ocean, the continents, the islands, the stars, or the planets. London, Paris, Rome, New York, San Francisco, America, Europe, Asia—these are all names which were then only empty sounds to me. But now, Miss Bullet, thanks to your constant and generous assistance, I am like other men——"

"Only so much nobler and wiser than the majority of them!" breathed Alma, with an earnestness which rendered any doubt of her sincerity impossible.

Ralph smiled again, and rejoined:

"You flatter me, but I know how to excuse your flattery. The teacher is always partial to the scholar. But I am so far like other men, at least, that I am now prepared to bear my part in the great battle of life; that I can look out intelligently upon the scenes around us; that I can reason and act in all and any given circumstances; and that I am now capable of considering all and any problems—even the great mystery of myself."

"And it is of this 'great mystery' that you have been puzzling again, no doubt?" murmured Alma, with an uneasiness she could not entirely conceal.

"Yes; it is of this horrible secret that I have been puzzling again," affirmed Ralph, his rich voice freighted with unrest and desolation, "Who was I before your father gave me this name of Ashley Benning? Where did I come from? What was my former name, my race, my kindred?"

"Father surmises that you may have been a sailor upon some ship," said Alma, with averted face.

"A sailor? Impossible! The same idea occurred to me, and I have been and looked at a hundred sailors one after another. I am not like them. You need only look at my hands. Is that the hand of a sailor?"

The girl glanced at the hand extended toward her, so white, so soft-skinned, so small and delicate, and the utter absurdity of comparing such a member with the average hand of a sailor, with its thick, tar-begrimed skin and its horny callosities, was at once apparent.

"Another thing," added Ralph, "if you and your father had had the least belief of my having been a sailor, you would have taught me to be a sailor, and not have adopted the plan of making me a man of books—a scholar—a learned gentleman."

The fair conspirator turned pale at the force of this reasoning, and for a moment could not entirely hide her confusion.

"I was not a sailor, therefore, as you can see at a glance," resumed Ralph, with a promptness which showed how much he was preoccupied by the problem of his former existence. "But what was I?"

Alma hardly knew what to answer, but soon replied:

"Why do you ask? Is it not manifestly impossible that any of these harrowing questions should ever receive a solution? Father and I have passed in review a hundred times every possibly theory of your past history, but all are equally unsatisfactory and all are equally far from any definite conclusion."

"It occurred to me, of course, that I must have come in one of the ships which, about that time, entered the harbor," continued Ralph, thoughtfully, "and I have accordingly been making inquiries."

The pallor deepened on Alma's face.

"You have?" she gasped.

"Yes, I have been making inquiries. Yesterday and to-day I have made two long visits to Honolulu."

The start given by Alma at this declaration partook largely of affright. She stole several sly glances in quick succession at her companion.

"Well?" she finally faltered.

"Well, I have had my labor for my pains. I have learned all I can in regard to the ships which were in port at the date in question, and also made every possible inquiry in regard to the persons aboard of those ships, but I have not been able to find the least light in that quarter. It is impossible to say who I formerly was, or how I reached this island."

"Or even when," suggested Alma, still averting her face. "You may have been on the island months or years before we found you. You may have been afflicted with—with some terrible mental disease. In any case, whoever you may have been, and whatever your parentage, it is reasonable to think that you may have been deliberately abandoned by your friends, and that they have taken such good care to cover up their tracks that you never, never will be able to get the least trace of them."

This view of the case was not a new one. Ralph had often contemplated it before, but he had never been able to consider it calmly. It was, in fact, the most painful of all the theories he had ever formed concerning himself, and its horrors now kept him silent.

"And such being the common-sense view of the matter," resumed Alma, "why should you worry yourself to death with a mystery that can never be cleared up? Is it not better to let the dead past alone and turn your attention to the living present?"

"This is the very course I propose to take," declared Ralph with a long-drawn sigh. "It would be both foolish and wicked, of course, for me to spend my life in an endeavor to answer questions which are from their very nature unanswerable. But one of the most pressing duties of the present is for me to cease to be an object of charity—to avoid taxing your goodness and that of your father any further—in short, to adopt some work or profession that will insure me a support and render me independent of others."

"What! you are tired of us? You would leave us?" cried Alma, turning pale again and looking a world of tender reproaches.

"It is not that, Miss Bullet," said Ralph, with gentle gravity. "Among all the thousands of truths I have learned during the past few weeks, I have not failed to learn that the first principle of manhood is pecuniary independence; and the time has arrived for me to carry this truth into practice."

Alma mused painfully a few moments, and then turned her most effective glances upon her companion, her features brightening.

"Very well," she said, "I see no objections to your being independent, since such is your desire. Father will sell you some land, which you can pay for by your labor, or he will endeavor to procure for you a position of some kind in Honolulu. But whatever you do, bear in mind that father and I are your true friends, that we have your happiness at heart, and that we are anxious to do all we can for you."

"You have both been singularly kind to me," returned Ralph, as he leaned forward and took the girl's hand in his own, pressing it gratefully. "To you, especially, I owe more than my life. Rest assured that I shall always be grateful."

While he was uttering these declarations, with the hearty honesty characteristic of him, the dark face of an intruder, a Kanaka, was suddenly raised into view from behind a clump of bushes a few rods in the rear of the couple, and a clenched hand was shaken menacingly at them, while a pair of savage eyes looked at them with the raging fires of jealousy.

Neither of the couple detected this intrusion.

"But enough of all this for to-day," continued Ralph, relinquishing the hand of the girl and arising. "I see your father in the distance, returning from Honolulu, and you will doubtless wish to meet him, as he was to bring you some new fashions," and the young Chicagoan smiled. "Let's walk in that direction."

The sun was now setting in a flood of glory, and by the time the couple had finished a pleasant chat with Bullet the shadows of evening were falling densely around them. They had finally separated, the old sailor going to see his man Kulu, Ralph retiring to his room, and Alma seating herself in the doorway of the cottage, when the dark-faced Kanaka, of whom we have spoken, advanced toward the girl with a briskness that startled her.

She arose hastily.

Don't go," called the intruder, in a voice in which sullen anger was predominant. "It's me—Keeri. I must have a talk with you."

Beneficial Results.

Household economy is made a study in the Kansas State agricultural college. This is what is said: The homes of the land receive much better food than before the girls were given the study of household economy. It is not better in materials, perhaps, but the infinite variety of combinations and of preparations will incite a girl to experiments of various kinds after she learns the foundation truths about the combinations of foods. Then, too, she learns definitely some methods besides those her mother used, and any one is better for using the good ideas of the people than being limited to those evolved by but one brain. The students take pride in doing cooking at home after they have practiced in class, and their delight in their success often gives them cheer and comfort through the whole day.

Almost a King.

The Earl of Derby, who died recently, was seriously considered as a candidate for the throne of Greece after the retirement of King Otto, the Bavarian, in 1862. At the time he was Lord Stanley, a member of the House of Commons and one of the most intimate friends of Lord Beaconsfield, then still Benjamin Disraeli, This interesting historical event first became published two years ago, through Froude, the English historian, who found letters referring to it in the correspondence between Beaconsfield and Mrs. Brydges. Although Disraeli favored the candidacy of Stanley be expressed the belief in a letter, dated December 9, that the Stanleys would prefer Knousley to the Parthenon and Lancashire to the plains of Attica.—Philadelphia Times.

WOOD pulp is rapidly becoming one of the most universally used of manufactured articles. Not only is it found available for making many of the necessaries and conveniences of man's life, aside from newspapers, but it is also appearing in artistic coffins in which to bury him. It is interesting to note in this connection that there are very few areas of spruce lumber in the United States west of the Adirondacks.

THE light of the sun is equal to 5,563 wax candles held at the distance of one foot from the eye. It would require 600,000 full moons to produce a day as brilliant as one of cloudless sunshine.

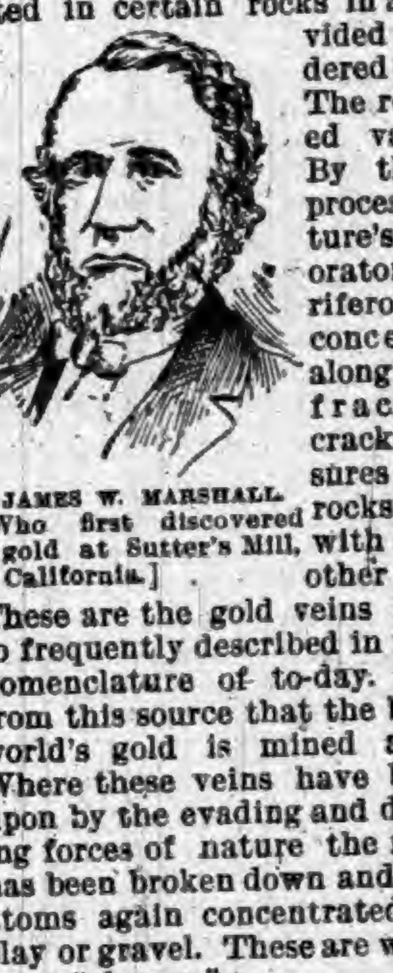
THE YELLOW METAL.

FACTS ABOUT BRIGHT AND SHINING GOLD.

Where It Is Found and How It Is Gotten Out of the Ground—Different Methods of Mining Employed—Historic Sutter's Mill, California.

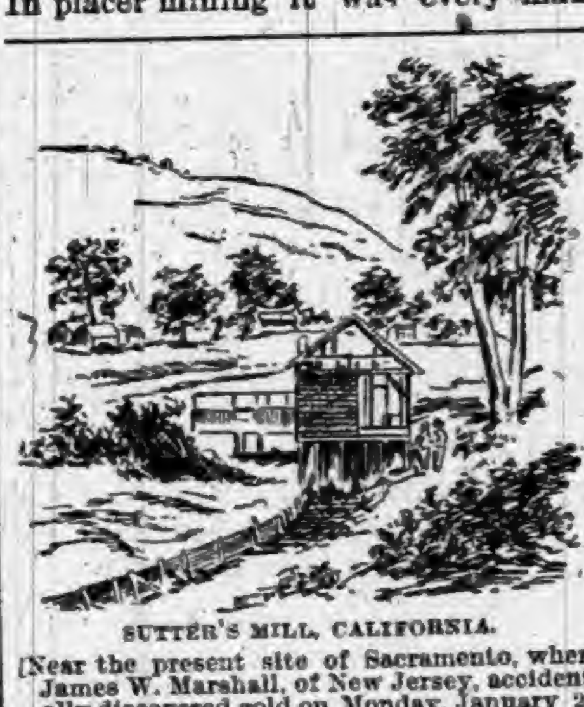
Discovered by Marshall.

The question as to the employment of silver for currency makes interesting some facts in relation to gold, the other metal used for the same purpose. There is an enormous amount of gold produced annually, the output last year being $138,816,627. Australia furnishes more of this than any country, and we come next with $33,000,000 worth, which is $670,800 less than the production of Australasia. The most acceptable theory as to its hiding places is that gold in the days when earth was young existed in certain rocks in a finely divided and powdered condition. The rock covered vast areas. By the slow processes of nature's great laboratory the auriferous atoms concentrated along planes of fracture, the cracks and fissures in the bed rocks mingled with quartz and other minerals. These are the gold veins and drifts so frequently described in the mining nomenclature of to-day. And it is from this source that the bulk of the world's gold is mined at present. Where these veins have been acted upon by the evading and disintegrating forces of nature the rocky crust has been broken down and the golden atoms again concentrated in beds of clay or gravel. These are what miners term "placers."



JAMES W. MARSHALL.
[Who first discovered gold at Sutter's Mill, California.]

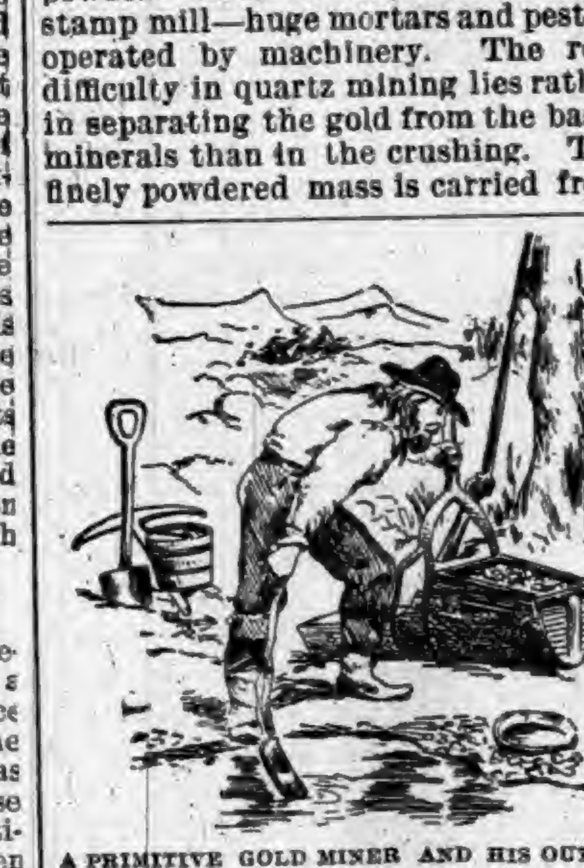
It was in the days of the famous placer mining that the romance and story of American and gold mining lay. It was the mining of the "forty-niners," as pictured by the graphic pens of Bret Hart and Joaquin Miller. In placer mining it was every man for himself. The miner prospected until he found what he thought was pay dirt. Then he staked his claim and set up his "cradle," a rough wooden box into which he shoveled the gold-flecked gravel. Upon this he poured water and rocked his cradle until the water had run out at the little sluiceways at the ends, carrying with it the encumbering soil, and leaving the glinting yellow dust and tiny nuggets behind. These were gathered by hand and deposited in the buckskin pouch that formed the sole safe deposit company of the "forty-niner" and his kind. It was a hard life, but full of the fascination of danger and the greater fascination of chance.



SUTTER'S MILL, CALIFORNIA.
[Near the present site of Sacramento, where James W. Marshall, of New Jersey, accidentally discovered gold on Monday, January 24, 1848, while walking along the tail-race of the little mill, thus inaugurating the most dramatic and interesting period of California's history.]

The Modern Method.

The days of individual alluvial digging are practically at an end. The miner does not now prospect for himself, but works for a syndicate or a company of capitalists, which carries on business on a gigantic scale. The mines now worked are mostly those in which the gold is held intact in quartz dug from veins and drifts. The quartz must be broken, crushed and ground fine as powder. This is the work of the stamp mill—huge mortars and pestles operated by machinery. The real difficulty in quartz mining lies rather in separating the gold from the baser minerals than in the crushing. The finely powdered mass is carried from the stamps by running water first over a shallow bath of mercury. Quicksilver is heavy, but gold is heavier, and into the mercury the larger particles of gold sink. Next the water spreads itself over plates of copper, coated with cyanide of potassium. This coating catches still more of the floating particles. The stream pursues its course over a stretch of blankets, the rough and hairy surface of which retains many more of the yellow atoms. Finally the residue falls into a pit, where everything mineral sinks to the bottom, and the water is allowed to run away. To obtain the gold the mercury bath is emptied, the coating carefully scraped off the copper plates and the sediment at the bottom of the pit washed and saved. The mass is put into a retort, where the mercury is volatilized and passes off in vapor. The remaining conglomeration of gold, copper, iron, silica and other substances is fused; the gold goes to the bottom and the other ingredients form a crust of slag on top. It isn't as romantic and picturesque as the old placer-mining, but it is a deal surer, and what the miner loses in the feverish excitement of washing gold soil for himself he makes up in a steady job for fair wages. The average cost of producing one ton of ore varies from 50 cents to $2, and the cost of extracting the gold from the ore runs from $1 to $3. This brings the cost of mining to from $1.50 to $5 per ton, which experts say is a fair average, though the cost runs higher in some small mines.



A PRIMITIVE GOLD MINER AND HIS OUTFIT.

Gold in This Country.

California is the great gold field of the continent. Last year there was mined in this State $12,571,900. An interesting feature of the latter-day mining in California is the extent to which the Chinese are getting into the business. Last year they mined $1,134,757. This was taken out of placers in sums of from $10 to $60,000.

The bulk of the American production outside of California comes from Colorado, Montana, Nevada, and Dakota. Idaho, Arizona, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, and Alaska follow closely in about the order named. Gold is produced, however, in nearly every State and Territory in the Union. The States along the Appalachian range are mining considerable gold. Last year South Carolina produced $123,364, Georgia $94,733, North Carolina $78,560, and Virginia $5,002. Maryland produced but $1,000, but the year before had $11,000 set down to her credit.

New and improved methods of mining which have been introduced into these mines within the last year will materially increase their production, as it will make profitable many mines which had been closed, not because they were exhausted, but because it did not pay to work them. Texas, Maine and Michigan all have gold, but not in paying quantities.

A Blight on the Honeymoon.

The slush in Fulton street was ankle-deep, but they didn't seem to notice it. It was raining with all the ingenuity of a March storm, but they had no umbrella, and as they stood arm-in-arm at Broadway and Fulton streets, they looked as if they had been married about ten minutes. He was a thin young man, with a brown derby hat and a slightly troubled look. She was young and pretty, and she wore a pair of white kid shoes, and a big white hat with pink roses all over it and she was too happy to think of the weather.

"Oh, William," she whispered, as she nestled closer to the thin young man, "isn't it glorious to be alone together, darling, in a great city?"

The thin young man made no reply. The rainwater was dripping from his brown derby—like medicine out of a patent dropper.

"All alone," she continued, gazing blissfully at the tower on the Western Union Building, and, getting a firmer grip on the thin young man's right arm, "home and friends far away, and though the multitude is surging around us, we two are alone together, dearest, and its me and you against the world; ain't it, William?"

William made no response. He shook some of the rainwater off his brown soggy derby, and then he said: "Let's go back to the hotel, Martha, and set down. If we was tied up like chickens to stand around on one leg in the rain, I wouldn't mind. But there's a hole in my left gum apumbin' water like a house afire, and I tell you, Martha, this sort of thing is squeezin' the honeymoon."—New York Tribune.

The Story of Bresca.

The little town of Bordighera in Italy has furnished the Eastern palms at Rome ever since the year 1586. How the grant was obtained by Bresca, the brave old sea captain, is a curious story. Standing with the crowd in the open plaza, before the Cathedral of St. Peter's, he was gazing with breathless interest at the workmen engaged in erecting the Egyptian obelisk. So momentous and difficult a task was this regarded that Pope Sixtus V. forbade any one to utter a loud word during the operation, on pain of death.

All went well until the massive stone column reached a certain angle, when to the horror of the multitude and the despair of the engineer, it ceased to move. Various expedients were resorted to without avail, and all seemed lost, when suddenly a voice broke the silence, crying:

"Aiga, dai de l'aiga ae corde!" ("Water, give water to the ropes!")

This suggestion, which came from the old sailor, was quickly acted upon; the obelisk slowly righted itself and was successfully raised to the position it now occupies.

When the trembling Bresca was brought a prisoner before the Pope for punishment, the latter not only pardoned the offense, but offered to grant him any reasonable request. The unselfish soul of the man showed itself when, instead of petitioning for some personal preferment, he begged that the right of furnishing the palms for Easter should be bestowed upon his family and the villagers of Bordighera, his birthplace. The request was granted, and is respected to this day.

Swearing a Cause for Thanks.

The Bishop was no sailor. He thought the capful of wind was an Atlantic storm, and worried the captain by asking him constantly if there was any danger. The captain led his lordship to the hatch over the fo'c'sle. "You hear the crew blaspheming," he said; "do you think those men would use such oaths if there was any danger of their meeting death?"

The sun set in an angry storm-torn sky, the wind rose higher yet and the good steamer pitched and rolled and groaned and creaked.

It was midnight, and a portly figure crept forward to the fo'c'sle hatch, the dim light glimmered upon a pair of skin-clad calves and an apron.

"Thank heaven!" murmured the bishop, "they are still swearing."

Sheriff Nabbed Him.

Sheriff Ralston has had a pretty busy time of it since he first took the office. And business seems to be growing. He had eight prisoners, before Deeters the wholesale murderer came, and Tuesday morning he nabbed another fellow, The man he got Tuesday was the one who stole the railroad mileage books at Butler, August 1st. He went to the Wabash ticket office at 10:30 p. m., and asked the agent for some mileage books, and a ticket to Logansport. He pulled out a roll of bills that looked big, and holding it in his hand, proceeded to buy the ticket and two mileage books, each of 2,000 miles. This would all amount to $202. With the roll of bills in his hand, he waited till the agent had signed and stamped the books, and reached in his money and grabbed the books and ran out. Before the agent had time to do anything, the fellow was out of the door, and out across the streets and fields and escaped. The roll of money was found to be two one-dollar bills and and small change enough to make $4,95. Nothing has been heard of the fellow since. But on Tuesday morning, a tall man was noticed on our streets and later went into the auditor's office and was soon after noticed to be handling some railroad mileage books, as if he was examining them to see if the signatures suited him, Suspecting something was wrong, Frank Dills notified the sheriff who at once got on his wheel and went to see Zent, the Wabash agent, at the station at foot of Main street, so as to get the numbers of the mileage books. He then came back up town, but his man had left the auditor's office, evidently being afraid he was being watched. Mr. Ralston went out to hunt him, and soon saw him going west along West Ninth street. The sheriff soon got up to him, and ran his bicycle up to the sidewalk just in front of him, jumped off and told him he was "wanted." He was brought back and held in the sheriff's office all day. The mileage books in his possession had the same numbers as the ones stolen at Butler, Nos. 3938 and 3939, and were filled out for "James Thompson" the name he gave to the agent. He had also signed this name to the books but had scratched the names where the agent had filled them in. He evidently thought he could he sell them them if the name was off. Soon after noon, the night agent at Butler, the man who sold him the books, and been telegraphed to by Mr. Ralston, reached here. His name is Frank Martin, an intelligent looking young man. He recognized the prisoner without any hesitation, and he was held to await the return of 'Squire Walborn who had gone out to the Owens' farm east of town to have the property of that estate appraised. The next morning there was an examination before Mr. Walborn and he was bound over to court in $300, which he readily furnished and he is free. His name is Adolph Widney, and resides near St. Joe. His people are highly esteemed citizens, and there is no way to account for his strange conduct.

THE AUBURN COURIER
OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.
JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.
Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.
THURSDAY....SEPTEMBEB 7, 1893.

THE new liberty bell recently cast at Troy, N. Y., has been taken to the world's fair.

THE Veterans at Indianapolis marched 30,000 strong this week. The city is ablaze with flags and decorations.

AFTER the Sherman law is repealed give us a law to coin a reasonable amount of silver dollars, at our present ratio. Then tackle the tariff.

WATERSPOUT struck the village of Geyton, Georgia last Friday and filled the streets to a depth of four or five feet. People had to swim for their lives though all managed to escape.

REPUBLICAN papers have discovered that there are tramps in the country. They evidently find it quite a novel idea. But this is not the only question on which they show ignorance.

WOOL and wheat have both declined in price under the McKinley high tariff. Will high tariff advocates, or those who make light of tariff reform no matter how we explainwhat the trouble is?

GLADSTONE'S home rule bill for Ireland passed the House of Commons last week by a vote of 301 to 267. It now goes to the House of Lords, where it stands a good chance of being defeated.

EMIN PASHA is reported killed and eaten in the interior of Africa. He was connected with Stanley at one time. His right name is Jacob Schnitzer, and he was exploring for the German government.

THE U. S. mint at Philadelphia is working hard to coin more money. From Aug. 15 to Sept. 15 they will coin five million in gold, and half a million in silver half and quarter dollars and dimes.

IT WOULD cost 112 millions and fifteen years of work to re-coin all our silver money, if we should change the ratio. And then, we would be no better off, for we would not yet have the correct ratio, changed. Let it stand at 16 to 1.

REFORM the tariff in such a way that a reasonable amount of revenue will be secured, and let "protection" take care of itself. Let all be done in such a way that we may secure the good will of other nations in order that we may sell them our farm and manufactured products. Then we will have better prices.

REPUBLICAN papers are full of articles referring to this as "an era of free trade." The last two general changes in the tariff were in 1883 and 1890. These were both republican laws. There has been no change since. But then these chaps don't know it. For deep, dense and murky ignorance, give us a republican editor.

Now let every man who has taken his money out of the bank put it back there or lend it to some one who can give good security. In this way money will get into circulation again. The banks themselves, will then feel safe to lend money. There is as much money in the United States as usual, but the trouble is, it is kept locked up.

THE surplus had been wiped out by Harrison's administration, otherwise the present administration, would have had a hundred million or so, to put out among the people, and we would not have had such a hard time, The Sherman bill was bad enough but it did not do all the mischief. A large part should be charged to Harrison's extravagance.

QUITE a number of papers are publishing a list of towns of 500 people and over that have no newspapers. Singularly enough, they overlook Garrett, a town of 3000 population with a city government. It has had no properly so called local paper for years. It needs one, and the right party could make a fortune there.

POLITICAL yawpers are at the heels of Senator Voorhees. Because he wants to repeal a law that stopped the coinage of silver, they say he is a gold bug. Because he wants to repeal a law by which the government lost forty millions, they say he is a fraud. Because he wants to repeal a law under the action of which silver has been forced lower and lower in price, they say he is the enemy of silver. He is a better friend of silver, a better lover of his country and less a fraud than the thoughtless rabble that are barking at his heels. He would save the government forty millions; they would have the government go on and lose another forty millions. He would take a course that would raise the price of silver; they would reduce its price. He would secure us a reasonable amount of silver coin; they, by holding on to the Sherman law, would continue to prevent the coinage of silver. Voorhees is a statesman and a patriot, one who, realizing what the country needs seeks to secure it; they don't know what the country needs, and wouldn't care if they did know. All they care for is to keep the people dissatisfied enough so as to be willing to throw themselves into the meshes of a new net that is being prepared for those who are thoughtless enough to be caught easily.

B. & O. Excusion to the World's Fair.

A Speck of War.

Capt. Kuhlman, of the Auburn Rifles, got marching orders on Thursday, to rendezvous his men at Miller's Station, on Monday. This is where the B. & O. crosses the Lake Shore, and seven miles to Roby, where the prize fights are held. It seems that Governor Mathews has been waiting to get the opinion of law officers as to his power to suppress the prize fights held there and that acting in the belief that he had the right to stop it even with force if necessary, he had made up his mind to break up the thing, and have an end of it. And as the Roby gang was made up largely of Chicago toughs, there might be a big fight. So he was ordered up several companies of state troops. It was intended to keep the matter quiet and surprise the law breakers, but some newspaper man got hold of it and published it. This put the governor and the adjutant-general in an awkward position, and they at first tried to deny it. But nevertheless, the order was given out as stated. A way had been found to stop the Roby business, by having a receiver appointed, on the ground that the company was conducting an illegal business, and the militia were sent there to preserve order in case there was trouble. The Auburn boys came out to a man, not one lacking. They took grub enough to last a day or two, and went Monday on the noon B. & O. train. At Miller's they were joined by the Lake Shore train with companies from Elkhart, South Bend, Laporte, Kokomo and Goshen. A train over the Ft. Wayne road brought in companies from Bremen, Plymouth Warsaw, Wabash and Ft. Wayne, with the battery with their gatling gun from the last named city. At evening both trains moved up to Roby, and the soldiers got out, and remained about the building, ready for business. But the fight for that evening had been withdrawn, though several of the fighters were on hand. A force of 600 or 700 soldiers with breech loading rifles, was not a thing to be trifled with, especially with a gatling ready to fire several hundred bullets a minute. So after remaining there over night, the Auburn boys came home, reaching here at noon. They made a soldierly appearance as they marched up the street and to their armory. They had not forgotten their appetites, either, for they at once broke for homes or to the nearest restaurants to re-enforce the "commissary" furnished by the state. We doubt if any company came back in better shape than the Auburn Rifles. And the war at Roby is over, and the big pine building near 106th st., Chicago, where the tip end of that great city extends into Indiana, is in charge of a receiver.

Court.

Last Thursday a new case came before the judge. David Smith of Troy township came to Butler and asked deputy-prosecutor C. J. Coats to have his boy arrested for larceny. Mr. Coats advised him that the better way would be to have him sent to the Reform school at Plainfield. Mr. Smith concluded this would be better, and bringing some witnesses they came over here. The first witness as to the boy's bad conduct was Joseph W. Bell, the storekeeper at Artic, testified that some time in July, the boy John Smith, came to him with a written order, signed by the boy's father, requesting Bell to loan the father $5 and send it by the boy. Being a ilttle suspicious, Mr. Bell questioned him closely, but at last let the boy have the money. But as the boy went to go out, he slyly picked up the order, which Mr. Bell had laid on the counter. This attracted Bell's attention, and made him believe something was wrong. He then followed the boy to the station, where he saw him board the train for Butler. The next day the boy came back. Mr. Bell and the boy's father talked over the matter and finally the boy was permitted to pay back the money, he earning it by working among the neighbors. This the boy did and had paid back all but ten cents, when the father discovered he had a silver watch. This proved to be the one he had stolen from the present wife of his grandfather, Peter Smith. Mrs. Smith gave her testimony in a clear and frank manner, without any show of malice, just as Mr. Bell had done. She told how she had found the door had been opened by someone, and her watch taken. Here the judge asked the father to state what he knew, and he told how he had detected the boy carrying the watch. Mr. Smith was nearly heart-broken at the bad conduct of his son, and several times shed tears. The boy did not seem to care much. When Judge Powers talked to him, he acknowledged he had done the acts charged, but denied one charge made, that of stealing some whips from the McCurdy church. He said he knew nothing of that. The Judge explained to him the serious nature of the crime—theft and forgery—and said he could send him to state's prison for terms up to fourteen years. But the law contemplated sending young persons to the Reform School, till they are twenty-one unless they make a good showing of reforming sooner. So he was sent to Plainfield till of age. After some unimportant work court closed to meet in October. It began this week in Angola.

COLONEL GRAHAM, OF POSEY COUNTY

His Joyless Ride in the Smoker with an Ungrateful Jerseyman.

When Colonel Graham, of Posey county, Ind., left town for Trenton yesterday he put in his pocket two of the best imported cigars that he could buy. The colonel is a confirmed cigarette smoker, but he always carries cigars for self protection when he travels. Since he left Posey county he has developed a discriminating nose for tobacco. A rank cigar makes him more peevish than "knees" in his trousers. There are few smokers of bad cigars who will not throw away a half burned stump to accept one of the colonel's good cigars, with the graceful apology that always goes with it.

"Why, do you know," said Colonel Graham the other day, "there are no cigars in Indiana so rank as those that are smoked in New Jersey. They are the brand that will kill vegetation, and I always carry a cigar or two to give away on the smoking car. Why, it's enough to make a man fretful."

Colonel Graham's seat in the smoker was shared yesterday by a man with no taste in tobacco. He sniffed contemptuously at the colonel's cigarette, and puffed contentedly at a very bad cigar with a dark, shiny wrapper. Colonel Graham was growing seasick. He threw away his cigarette, and drawing a cigar from his pocket said to the man beside him:

"Pardon me, sir, but may I trouble you for a light!"

"Sure, Mike," replied the man, and he handed Colonel Graham a cigar that had just been lighted. Colonel Graham carefully lighted his own cigar, and with apparent absentmindedness tossed the other out of the window.

"Well, I'll be"——

"No, don't," interrupted Colonel Graham, "I really wasn't thinking what I was doing. Please accept one of my cigars and permit me to offer an apology. I am very absentminded—at times."

The man looked at the cigar the colonel gave him and said:

"Looks pretty good. Better'n mine, I guess. I pay three dollars a hundred for mine."

"That cigar cost twenty-five dollars a hundred, and is pretty fair, I think," replied the colonel.

"H'm," said the man as he bit the end off. Then he leaned over and said: "Will you give me a light now?"

Colonel Graham offered his cigar. The man lighted his own from it with chuckles of satisfaction. Then he leaned back comfortably and tossed Colonel Graham's cigar out of the window.

"Why, you"——

"Don't," said the man. "When I think of the tariff on cigars I go into a trance, and I'm not responsible for what I do. Let me offer you one of my cigars," and he pulled out one of the three dollar a hundred brand and handed it to Colonel Graham.

"Why, you"——

"Now, don't, I say," interrupted the man. "This is my station, but you can get a light from the man in front. Much obliged for your smoke. Goodby," and he was off the car.

Colonel Graham returned to New York last night and announced that his system was shattered. Hereafter he will ride in the drawing room car and smoke cigarettes.—New York Sun.

How to Learn to Sing.

Lung power and capacity may be wonderfully increased and strengthened by a constant repetition of the syllable "ah" on the three or four notes in the middle register of the voice; that is, the three or four notes which one sings most naturally and with the least effort. Let the pupil get one note clear cut, round, full and musical; then from that note as a starting point let him go up and down, gradually working out the huskiness from the adjacent notes and sounding them until they become pure and resonant and can be delivered without strain or effort.

Let him work systematically and, above all, avoid the pernicious trick of learning "pieces" by rote or by ear. His first effort should be to increase the purity and range of his voice, and to that end he should, as suggested above, use the broad syllable "ah" only for a time, and on no account should he try to sing an air until he can do so understandingly, with a full knowledge of musical notation and a perfect command of his vocal resources.—Demorest's Magazine.

Thackeray's Ideas of Corsets.

Thackeray, who detested "wasp waisted women," once told a young relative, who was much in love, to take his betrothed to a physician before purchasing the engagement ring.

"What for?" his companion inquired, in considerable astonishment.

"To see whether that wasp waist is an inheritance or a consequence," he replied.

"Consequence!" exclaimed the young man; "what do you mean?"

"Corsets," said Thackeray laconically.

"Miss —— has the most beautiful figure in England," said the infatuated lover.

"She is deformed," Thackeray responded. "If it is a natural deformity she may be a moderately healthy woman. Even humpbacks are not always delicate, you know. Mind, I say moderately healthy. But if that girl's figure is the result of corsets you might better go and hang yourself rather than risk the evils that will inevitably follow."

Scandal Well Defined.

Some pupils were asked by an examiner at a school examination whether they knew the meaning of the word "scandal." One little girl held up her hand, and being told to answer the question she replied, "Nobody does nothing and everybody goes telling of it everywhere."—Boston Commercial.

The First Newspapers.

An Impressive Part of a Funeral.

A very beautiful and impressive adjunct to an aristocratic official Parisian funeral is the presence in the procession of the coupe of the deceased, the horse or horses, led by grooms in mourning liveries, and the lanterns lighted and veiled in long streamers of semitransparent crape. The effect is at once somber and picturesque, and is especially striking at the obsequies of some great personage, such as M. Theirs, Gambetta or Victor Hugo. Nobody, not even the nearest relative of the defunct, is permitted to occupy the vehicle.

Dr. A. A. Corkins.

After an absence of 15 years will again visit Waterloo every Saturday at Lock's Hotel, Waterloo.

His success in the treatment of piles can be amply attested by hundreds whom he cured during his former visits. I can cure any case of piles, no matter of how long standing, or how hopeless the case may be. The patient suffers no pain or inconvenience. In most cases one treatment is sufficient, which takes only a few minutes, and the time required for a cure is about two weeks, during which time the patient is not inconvenienced from business. 20tf

Worthington's Illustrated Monthly Magazine for September

Shows great diversity of material and an excellent list of contributors. The interest and value of its leading articles, and the fine literary quality of its stories, poems and department matter, are admirably supplemented by fine press work and specially prepared illustrations which make this number as attractive as it is readable.

The leading article for September is a well-written and highly entertaining paper upon "Seals and Sealing," by Joseph Stanley-Brown (formerly secretary to President Garfield). In the interest of the United States government Mr. Brown spent many months at the Pribilof Islands, the home of the seal during at least half the year, These isolated, rock-bound, fog-drenched islands are the seals' chosen resort, and a necessity to their existence. To them they return with unerring certainty from their winter pilgrimage, completing one of the most extraordinary migratory circles known in the animal kingdom. Upon these little islands, which since the purchase of Alaska, in 1867, have yielded no less than ten million dollars to the United States treasury, the writer studied the habits and family life of the seal and the methods of selecting and despatching the "killable" animals, convincing himself, as he will convince his readers, of the evils of pelagic sealing, which by its discriminate and wasteful slaughter is calculated to deplete herds, until the islands of the Behring sea are as barren of seals as are those of the Antarctic ocean. Mr. Brown made good use of the rare opportunities for photography and the large number of illustrations which accompany the article are reproduced from his pictures. A second article from his pen upon the habits and customs of the natives of the islands will appear in the October number.

Obituary.

Isaac Newton Sawyer was born at his home, in Auburn, Ind., Nov. 1, 1886, and departed this life Sept. 3, 1893, aged 6 years, 10 months and 2 days. He was a member of the Lutheran Sunday-school, of the infant class, and was beloved by teacher and schoolmates. He was an affectionate and obedient child, and much loved by the remainder of the family. Issac leaves behind him a father, mother, and two sisters to mourn his departure. Their loss is his gain.

Little Isaac, thou hast left us,
  'Tis thy loss we so deeply feel,
But 'tis God who hath bereft us;
  He can all our sorrows heal

O, that morning when thou departed
  Dear friends stood around thy bed,
Thou seemed to say, "be not sad hearted,
  When I am mingled with the dead."

Thou wilt no more say, "Mamma, take,"
  When thy little limbs are weary;
O! how her loving heart will ache,
  Through the left years to be dreary.

How she clung to thy little hand
  When she saw that thou wast parting
From this earth to the better land,
  While the burning tears were starting.

The lovely flower hath faded,
  And is hidden from the sky!
The flower which bloomed so brightly
  Blooms in eternal life.

Funeral services were conducted from the house Sept 5th, at 10 a. m., by J. D. Brosy. Interment took place in Woodlawn cemetery.

Among the incidents of childhood that stand out in bold relief, as our memory reverts to the days when we were young, none are more prominent than severe sickness. The play was good and Manager Wagner omitted nothing that would add to the comfort and pleasure of the audience. Miss Sembower played the piano for the orchestra, and though we are not acquainted with all the members, we feel like complimenting them on their excellent music of which they were not stingy. Geo. W. Carper one of our young farmers, made the printer happy Saturday by paying cash subcriptions in to '95. And it occurred to us that this was much the easier and pleasanter way to do. At least George set a mighty fine example for several hundred who are a year or two behind. We are pleased to learn, also, that he has a prospect for good crops.

The little Sunday school ladies had a splendid supper at the Presbyterian church last Friday evening, though the attendance was not large—owing probably to the many other things taking the people's attention just then. But they should not feel discouraged, for they had done their part as well as if it had produced them a hundred dollars. All who were there speak in their praise.

The account of the terrible tragedy near Butler is in our correspondence from that place and is no doubt pretty correct, as he is on the ground, and has been careful to get at the facts. Deeters is in jail here to wait for trial at the October term of court. Some are of the opinion that he is insane, as it is said he has been a time or two. Others are of a different opinion. It is the most terrible tragedy that ever happened in our county.

A little boy of Mrs. McDonald's living near here, fell against a red hot stove and was fearfully burned. The pain was terrible, and it was thought the burn was so severe as to scar the child for life. I sold the lady a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which, after greasing the sore, she applied. It soon removed all the fire and eased the pain, and in ten days the boy was well, no trace of the scar remaining. J. D. McLaren, Keysport, Clinton county, Ill. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Auburn vs Defiance.

Last Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock a large crowd filled the grand stand at the base ball park, and thronged about on either side of the diamond to witness the "rub" game between the home and Defiance teams. Auburn came first to bat, and "found" the pitcher readily, running in three scores. Defiance followed with a goose-egg, and Auburn pounded the ball to the tune of five runs. Defiance got another cypher. In the third Auburn scored 3 and the Ohio boys 1. Then came a goose egg for the home team, and the last mark for the Defiance team. The balance of the game only gave the game more decidedly to Auburn.

At the outset you could hear "Defiance," on every side; after the 5th inning you couldn't find an Ohio man, except the players. Lew Willis umpired the first six innings, then Brandon was called to the box. Moody was splendid on first, as were Little in center field and Ogden in left field. It was a good game. Following is the score by innings:

Auburn 3 5 3 0 6 1 0 0 2—20

Three-base hits: Ogden and Welch. Geo. Frederickson pitched an excellent game for Auburn and was ably supported by Capt. Bennett. Gaffney and McCarty were the Defiance battery.

WE have fortunately reached a halt in this employment of cheap foreign labor and turned the tide backward to the land whence it came, and if employers shall consult their own interests the exodus of alien labor will continue until our American industries are manned throughout legitimate American labor, either native born or naturalized. The labor that comes in utter ignorance of our laws and institutions, that ever continues a stranger to our citizenship, and that never can be taught the liberty of law should be excluded from the workshops and mines and forests of our free republic.

THE Iowa Supreme Court has rendered a decision defining what constitutes a peddler. A man went from house to house in Stuart taking verbal orders for spoons, albums, etc. A few days later the merchandise was shipped to Stuart and delivered to the purchasers by one Cunningham. While thus engaged he was arrested for violating an ordinance prohibiting peddlers from selling or offering for sale goods or merchandise along the streets or from house to house. The case finally reached the Supreme Court, where the defendant was ordered discharged. The court says that the authorities are not agreed as to what constitutes a peddler, but it adds that its "attention has not been called to any authority which holds that a person who delivers goods previously sold by another is a peddler within the ordinary use of that term. The defendant did nothing that was prohibited by ordinance and should have been acquitted."

A HIGHLY respectable young lady of St. Louis has just kissed a young man who was an entire stranger to her. In justice to the young lady it must be said that there were extenuating circumstances. The kissing was done under conditions of intense emotion. For that matter it generally is. In this case the cause of the intense emotion was unusual. The young lady was out driving with her father, who left the vehicle for a moment to enter a store. During his absence the horse ran away and the strange young man gallantly rushed out into the street and stopped it, rescuing the terrified young lady from various dangerous possibilities. She rewarded him by kissing him at once on the spot—the right spot. Possibly her father had not kissed her at all during the ride, and a buggy ride without kissing suggests kissing on the principle that, like tact, "it is especially prominent when it is absent." Besides, the young man, even if previously unknown, had just proved himself to be a worthy young man in at least one respect—his physical courage; and what woman does not admire physical courage? It is already rumored, however, that the enterprising young men of St. Louis are organizing a stock farm syndicate for the purpose of breeding and training a mild and intelligent variety of runaway horses for the use of young ladies, and that the young ladies of the "future great" are stiffening up the market for driving gloves.

LOUISVILLE has met with a notable loss in the death of a well-known citizen, who is described as "the best known sporting man in the South." A recent issue of the Louisville Commercial devotes a column and a half to a glowing eulogy of the deceased. He died a wealthy man, and the bulk of his fortune was acquired in gambling, yet the Commercial informs us that "words of praise for actions in his life were uttered by many." Mr. Waddill, for that was his name, must have been a man of rare goodness of heart, for a fellow-gambler is quoted as saying of him, "He was a very conscientious man, and his character in this respect I can best express when I say that he would rather give up $500 or $1,000 than keep it with the least suspicion that he was not entitled to it." Again, the Commercial says, "Although a gambler, he never forgot that he was a gentleman at heart," and "he gave away thousands of dollars to people who went broke at his games, not because there was any reason that he should do so, but because he was begged for the money." He also was "great in unostentatious, real charity, relieving many a poor person who was a total stranger to him." In one respect this account of the dead gambler's life is deficient. It fails to mention whether, like Mark Twain's Buck Fanshaw, "he never shook his mother." But probably lack of space compelled the editor to leave a hiatus in the career of this noted Kentuckian. In closing, the Commercial says, with an air of regret that does it honor: "The deceased was a member of no church or order." We are sorry that such should have been the fact. His failure to join a church or an order was the one mistake of his life. Had he been a church member, for instance, nothing would have been wanting in the example that he set. But the best of men have their shortcomings, and it was perhaps too much to expect that even "the best known sporting man in the South" should have rounded out his useful and praiseworthy career by making a profession of religion.

The Well of Frozen Air.

Near Dayton, Ore., there is a well locally known as the "well of frozen air." In drilling it a stratum of frozen clay and gravel was encountered at a depth of fifty-five feet. After passing through five feet of this, numerous cavities were encountered from which cold air came with sharp gusts. The escape of the air from the well may be heard a distance of nearly 200 yards, and it is so frigid that is not possible for any one to hold his hand over the opening for more than a few minutes without having it frozen stiff. According to an exchange a bucketful of water set near the mouth of the well will freeze through during one night's time. It is needlessly to add that work on the well was abandoned as soon as these frigid blasts found vent through the opening made by the drill.

REPLIES TO A REPUB.

CLEARLY SHOWN WHY PRICES GO DOWN.

They Become Lower in Spite of and Not Because of Protection—The Democratic Party Is Falsely Accused—Not a Lack of Currency.

Answer to a Protectionist.

The Courier-Journal has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from a Democrat in Illinois, who admits that he has been talked to a standstill by an intelligent Republican of his acquaintance, and he appeals to this paper for help. Here is the substance of the argument submitted by the Republican:

> Granted that a protective tariff increases cost of goods to consumers at first, it always results in cheaper goods ultimately. For instance, wire nails cost, when first invented, 10 cents per pound; a tariff of six cents was proposed, but Mr. Mills exclaimed, "Oh, that will never do. 'Twill make them cost 16 cents," but the tariff was put on and is on to-day, yet the wire nails sell at three cents per pound. Again, steel rails were costing $35 or $40 per ton; a tariff of $26 was put on, which stimulated home production so that now they sell at $25 per ton, although the high tariff of $26 is still on for foreign rails.
> So is it ever the case that a protective tariff, by increasing production, tends to lower price of goods. Again, while the prices of manufactured goods are still at a high figure, the farmer can well afford it, because it makes a larger margin of profit. A thrifty farmer can sell, say, $1,200 worth of produce and spend $300 in clothing, tools and other manufactured articles. Now let protective tariff be removed and the scale of all prices comes down exactly one-half. The farmer sells the same produce for $600 and pays $150 for his purchases, thus pocketing $450, where he formerly pocketed $900. If the purchasing power of $450 is equivalent to the former $900, the farmer might still be no worse off; but then low wages at the mills have meantime driven many operators to the farms to become competitors of the farmer, and also his market at the mills is smaller, and he is not sure of selling all his produce, as in former years.

We make room for this long extract in order to present the argument entire, and also because the last part of it is an answer to the first part. The first argument is that protection is right because it makes prices lower. The second argument is based on the assumption that the removal of protection would lower prices one-half. These two theories cannot stand together. The pretense that protection lowers prices is based on the impudence of protectionists claiming credit for what happens in spite of them. Owing to the many discoveries of this century, the use of steam, the introduction of improved machinery, and many labor-saving inventions, labor has been growing more and more productive. It happens, therefore, that the labor of a man will produce, with the aid of machinery, ten, twenty, or even fifty times as much of some objects of desire as it would one hundred or two hundred years ago. This has had two results. It has cheapened commodities and it has raised the wages of labor. Commodities are cheaper because they cost less labor, while wages are higher because they produce so much larger quantities of commodities. This change has occurred under high and low tariffs and under free trade.

The Protectionists, however, assuming that no one knows what is going on abroad, have tried to account for this universal tendency by ascribing it to laws passed in the United States, although it has gone on here under a revenue as well as under a protective tariff. Apart from these improvements in machinery, it is competition that cheapens commodities, and this competition stimulates invention. It is the manufacturer most pressed by competition who is most likely to discover devices for saving labor, according to the old adage that "necessity is the mother of invention." This competition is inconvenient to manufacturers, and they try to diminish it by shutting the foreign producer out of the market. By this means they are able to keep prices higher than would otherwise be possible. In process of time domestic competition may spring up and help to reduce prices, but, of course, the domestic competition alone cannot, ordinarily, make prices as low as both foreign and domestic competition would. Steel rails afford a very good illustration of these principles when the whole truth about them is told. The use of steel for rails was made possible by the cheapening of steel, and that was due to a new process. If protection had made them cheap in America, free trade would have made them high in England. The fact that they were $10 a ton higher under protection shows what the tariff is for. The general decline in the price is due to invention; the difference between the English and American prices is due to protection.

The Republicans cannot adhere to the theory that protection cheapens. It is a wholly artificial theory, and they are always forgetting all about it and talking about the ruinous prices at which goods will have to be sold under free trade. They are continually telling the wool-growers, for example, that the bare prospect of free wool has put down the price. This shows plainly enough that there is no sincerity in the plea that protection cheapens. If protection really cheapened the product no producer would ask for it, for every one wishes to sell at the best possible price.—Louisville Courier-Journal (Dem.).

A False Accusation.

The Republican party is trying to make it appear that the present unsatisfactory condition of things in this country arises from an uncertainty as to what the Democrats are going to do, says the Burlington Gazette. We do not believe a word of this. This crisis has been threatening the country for some time. Even President Harrison, in one of his later messages to Congress told the people that to avoid such a condition of things the Government had come to the relief of the situation. It has been seen by the wise men of the nation, and they have predicted it, let whichever party assume the reins of power. It is a natural consequence of a false system of legislation, which has instituted a false system of general business methods and a wrong basis for our financial conditions, and all together have brought about a condition of national affairs which is giving alarm to all our people. This condition of things can only be permanently remedied by a salutary system of legislation which shall partially at least undo what has been wrongly done in the way of legislation. That is what the Democratic party has been put into power to do, and if it does not do its work with a master hand and in the spirit of alacrity, a reckoning day will soon come upon it, and the people will ask why their pleadings have not been heeded. Read the writing on the wall, and act accordingly.

Not a Lack of Currency.

The Hon. John De Witt Warner presented a memorial from the New York Chamber of Commerce to the House, during the silver debate, praying for the repeal of the silver-purchasing clause of the Sherman act. Mr. Warner explained, for the benefit of Western and Southern Congressmen, that the Chamber of Commerce "is not composed either exclusively or mainly of bankers," but of business men who are borrowers and not loaners of money. They are big merchants and traders who are interested in the prosperity of the whole country. In reply to questions from various Representatives, Mr. Warner said that he was willing to advocate each and every plank in the Democratic platform. He expressed himself as follows regarding the question of whether or not it is a lack of currency or a lack of confidence that is now afflicting this country:

"If this country has learned anything from the present crisis so that it has been burned into its memory as with a red-hot iron, it has learned this, that while the currency has been increasing as fast as gold can be brought from Europe, and as fast as Government notes can be printed, money has been getting scarcer than before. Men are beginning to learn that the real money of commerce, the real currency for the transaction of business, does not consist in silver or gold, but in the confidence of business men.

"That, sir, is the matter in which the chamber of commerce is primarily interested. We want the Government, not to help us to do business, but to let us alone, so that we can have facilities to do business. This law is a destroyer of confidence, an interference with the development of this country; and we ask to have it repealed.

"We want that repeal, not as an end, but as a means; as a means to the reinstatement of the public confidence, so that, as in former flourishing times, every bale of cotton as it reaches the press, every bushel of wheat as it reaches the elevator, every ton of ore as it lies on the dock, shall be a basis of credit and be current money throughout Christendom.

"If that law, which puts it out of our and your power to restore that confidence, is once repealed we can co-operate with you in helping on what will be the greatest reaction of prosperity that this country has ever seen—in which, from Texas to Maine, from Florida to Washington, all will be blessed, and we with you will share in the benediction."

A Peculiar Parallel.

Under the heading, "The Deadly Parallel," a great many of our partisan Republican contemporaries are publishing the following extract from the Utica Herald:

Opening of President Harrison's message to Congress, December, 1892:	Opening of President Cleveland's message to Congress eight months later, August, 1893:
In submitting my annual message to Congress, I have great satisfaction in being able to, say that the general conditions affecting the commercial and industrial interests of the United States are in the highest degree favorable. A comparison of the existing conditions with those of the most favorable period in the history of the country will, I believe, show that so high a degree of prosperity, and so general a diffusion of the comforts of life. were never before enjoyed by our people.	The existence of an alarming and extraordinary business situation, involving the welfare and prosperity of all our people, has constrained me to call together an extra session of the people's representatives in Congress, to the end that through a wise and patriotic exercise of the legislative duty with which they are solely charged present evils may be mitigated and dangers threatening the future may be averted.

Can't they see that the thing is loaded? Have they not learned to keep their hands off campaign literature from New York? Did not Harrison assume the office after Cleveland, and did not Cleveland again take up the work where Harrison left off? Is not the whole argument in favor of Cleveland, and, according to the Herald, may we not expect a condition at the end of his present term similar to that which obtained at the inauguration of Harrison? If all this is true, is it not a good thing for the country that Grover was successful? The Herald is quoted by the directories as a Republican paper, but its editor must be devoid of tact and foresight.—Cedar Rapids Gazette.

They Squirm.

Republican journals and politicians are following the cue to protest against any disturbance of the tariff. Business, they say, demands rest and certainty. To proceed to obey the people's mandate for a reduction of taxes, after the monetary danger is removed, will, they insist, "unsettle" our industries. There has been no talk of precipitate action. The intention of the Democratic party is to reform the tariff with due care and deliberation, and to give business ample time to adjust itself to any changes—six months at least.

The Republican protest is inconsistent and impudent. Ten times since the war tariff was passed have the Republicans revised or amended it in general bills. They have been persistent tariff tinkers. But always, with one exception, the duties have gone up, up, up! The average duty of 32 per cent. in the original war tariff of 1862 had increased to 38¼ per cent. in 1874. Under the "reform of the tariff by its friends" in 1883 the average rose to 42. Then, with a surplus of revenue of nearly $100,000,000 annually, came the McKinley revision of 1890 covering every schedule, and last year the average duty on dutiable articles imported for consumption was 48.71.

This is the record of the Republican tariff tinkers who now ask that their new tariff of abominations be permitted to stand in order to secure stability to business. This continual tax-raising is the answer of the monopolists to the people's demand for relief from oppressive burdens! They have never hesitated to "disturb industry" when they wanted their bounties increased. They will not prevent the relief demanded by the people by bringing out again their tattered old campain bugaboo.—New Age.

The House for Honest Money.

The House of Representatives must be thanked for doing thoroughly what it has done somewhat tardily. And perhaps the country is to be congratulated upon the tardiness because of the greater thoroughness. As it is, no one can say that the house has acted hastily or without due deliberation. Ample opportunity has been afforded for exhaustive argument of the various questions involved in all their important aspects. The result is the complete rout of the allied forces of dishonest and destructive monetary legislation and a more complete assurance of future safety to the business interests of the country than a vote without full discussion would have been likely to afford.

At first the silver people predicted, with the utmost confidence, that the Sherman purchase clause could not be repealed unless something equally or more satisfactory to them should be coupled with the repeal. As the debate progressed their confidence diminished, until at last they conceded the unconditional repeal bill would pass the House. But they would not concede more than twenty-five or thirty majority, while not many even of the advocates of repeal claimed a majority of more than forty to sixty, and the very few who ventured to predict a majority of 100 were regarded as visionary enthusiasts down to the very hour when the voting began. The first vote was on the Bland 16 to 1 amendment. The number voting was 348, or only six less than the whole number of members of the House, and the majority against the proposition was 102. The Blandites were driven from their first ditch by more than a two-thirds vote. Then the 17 to 1 ratio was beaten by a majority of 140; then the 18 to 1 by 137; then the 19 to 1 by 132; then the 20 to 1 by 103. This last was the widest departure from the present ratio which the silver men would deign to consider at the outset. It was the last ditch of the free-coiners, the ditch in which they were going to exhibit their full strength, and yet the majority against 20 to 1 was one greater than that against 16 to 1, and the number of votes in favor of it four less. And finally, to complete the stampede of the silver forces from their last ditch and their final dispersion through the woods and swamps, the House passed the Wilson bill by a majority of 131 in a total vote of 349, giving 240 affirmative votes, or sixteen more than two-thirds of a full House.—Chicago Herald.

Who Passed the Sherman Bill?

It may be of some interest to know how the vote stood upon the passage of the Sherman bill in the Republican Congress which forced it upon the people of this country. The vote in the Senate stood as follows: Republicans for it, 29; Democrats against it, 26; and this included the full vote of the Senate for and against the passage of the law. In the House the vote was as follows: Republicans voting for it, 121; also one Independent. Against it were 90 Democrats. And this is the full vote upon the adoption of the bill in both houses. One Democrat in the House and fifteen Republicans not paired refused or neglected to vote. Thus it will be seen how the Democrats stood then upon this compromise measure. They did not compromise much one way or the other. They were solidly against the measure, and have none of the responsibilities of its evil effects to carry.

Legacy of Republicans.

The Ohio Democratic platform puts it thus truthfully and forcefully: The financial situation is the unfortunate legacy of a Republican administration. It is the natural result of the McKinley tariff, the Sherman silver law, extravagance of the revenue of the party lately in power, and the creation and fostering of trusts and corrupt combinations by that party, all combining to shake credit, to create distrust in the money of the country and to paralyze its business.

On His Own Platform.

The Ohio Democrats have made revenue reform the direct issue, with the author of the tariff plank in the National Democratic platform leading their ticket in opposition to McKinley, the framer of the protection plank in the National Republican platform. The convention approved "especially" those portions of the platform adopted by the national convention at Chicago referring to the tariff and to currency legislation.

Will Drop the "Gov."

Gov. Wm. McKinley Jr. has dropped the "Jr." from his name. After election he will drop the "Governor," and then will be known simply as plain Bill McKinley.

Lost Through His Love for Fun.

In one of the old castles of northern England visitors are shown two rooms which are connected with each other by a singular mechanism. Each room is adjoined by an alcove, used as a sleeping apartment, and the floors of the adjoining alcoves turn on a pivot in the center of the partition wall. This ingenious device was the invention of one of the ancestors of the present proprietor, who was somewhat of a wag and found great pleasure in frightening and mystifying his guests. When one had gone to bed in the green room and the other in the blue the floors were turned on their pivots, and on awakening the visitor found himself in strange quarters, with clothes that were not his own. It is said that this fun-loving lord lost a rich inheritance by thus disturbing the restful moments of a wealthy aunt, who never forgave the trick her nephew played upon her.—Post-Dispatch.

Made Miserable for Life.

This you may easily be if you fail to remedy the indigestion and non-assimilation of the food, which are the attendants and originators of nervousness, that ever present ailment which no narcotic, mineral sedative or nervine can ever do more than temporarily relieve. Of course these remedies have no effect upon the organs of digestion and assimilation, except to disorder and enfeeble them, thus aggravating the original difficulty. Among the most alarming and dangerous symptoms of chronic nervousness is insomnia, which is the professional term for inability to sleep. Where this exists there is always a tendency to mental overthrow, paresis and eventual insanity. Begin at the fountain head of all this difficulty with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters and avert evil consequences. No sooner does the stomach resume its tone, and the system gain in vigor through the aid of this benign tonic, than sleep returns and the nerves grow tranquil. Chills and fever, rheumatism, biliousness and constipation yield to the Bitters.

Cibber Was Cool.

Colley Cibber was playing cards one night. As the game went on he did not follow suit, whereupon a testy old general cried out: "What, have you not a spade, Mr. Cibber?" The poet-laureate, nothing abashed, looked at his cards and answered: "Oh, yes, a thousand," a reply which drew forth a very short and peevish comment from the general. Colley, who was a very cool customer, and was, besides, "shockingly addicted to swearing," as the narrative says, retorted with "Don't be angry, General, for, damme, I can play ten times worse if I like."

Unreasonable.

Old Hyson (angrily)—See here! I would like to know what you intend to make of yourself? Your college principal says he doesn't know of anything that you would be likely to make a success of.

Young Hyson—Well, you don't expect me to answer a question a college professor can't answer, do you?—Puck.

A Peculiarity of Georgia Lightning.

Lightning is playing some queer freaks in Georgia these summer days. Recently, in Thomas County, a gentleman, holding a baby in his arms, took refuge under a pine tree during a thunder storm. Lightning struck the tree, severely shocked the man, but left the baby unharmed, and the latter continued to clap its hands, evidently enjoying the vivid flashes that illuminated the storm.—Atlanta Constitution.

HUNDREDS ARE LOST.

MIGHTY HARVEST OF DEATH IN THE SOUTH.

Ruin Wrought on Every Side—Scores of Lives Destroyed by the Angry Element—Southern Coast Strewn with a Hurricane's Wreckage.

Work of the Wind.

As communication becomes established with that part of the South devastated by the furious hurricane of Sunday and Monday, more complete details of the awful visitation are made known. Many places where the storm was most severe are not reached by telegraph, and reports from these points are necessarily slow and inaccurate. The cyclone flew through Port Royal, S. C., at the rate of 100 miles an hour, and was followed by a tidal wave that almost swept the town away. One hundred lives are said to have been lost here. At the time this is written Port Royal is completely cut off from the outside world, as all the telegraph wires are down and the railroads washed away. Even the people themselves have no idea of the extent of damage done. The messenger was unable to give the exact number of lives lost, but without overestimating says that over 100 persons were killed and drowned. He saw himself thirty dead bodies. Others are being recovered, and many are still missing. The suffering and misery the storm has caused cannot be pictured nor the damage to property be estimated. Most of the drowned are negroes.

The people of Beaufort and Port Royal were apprehensive in regard to the fate of St. Helena, a small island four miles from Beaufort. They were unable to hear a single word from there. There were twenty-five lives lost between Port Royal and Seabrook, a small station only four miles from the harbor, all of them negroes, who were plantation hands. Houses were blown down and carried in every direction, and almost a tidal wave covered the town to a depth of ten and twelve feet. Only meager reports have been received from other points near Beaufort, and it is feared that many more negroes have been killed. The Alma Cumming, a large boat loading at the Sea Island Chemical Works, was swept from its moorings and badly injured. The pilot boat Palmetto, tied up at Port Royal docks, was blown to pieces and finally sunk a few yards from its moorings. Every house in Port Royal and Beaufort was seriously damaged.

Lives Lost by Hundreds.

A passenger train of the Atlantic Coast line reached Richmond, Va., from Charleston, S. C., having been delayed twenty-four hours by the storm. J. B. Beddinacauld, the Southern Express Company's messenger, who was in Charleston during the storm, says that the battle of wind and rain began with terrific force at one o'clock on Sunday afternoon and continued without cessation until Monday morning at seven o'clock. While the record of terror and ruin wrought by the great disaster of 1885 remains unbroken, Charleston stood in the track of this cyclone which has shaken the old city to her foundation stones. The total damage to property cannot be told for some days, and the loss of life is unknown. Not fifty yards' space was left in the streets that did not contain debris of all kinds—roofs of houses, signs, awnings, telegraph poles, etc., which were scattered in all directions during the storm.

It is reported that five hundred persons have been drowned on the Sea Islands, but this report cannot be verified. The Sea Islands skirt the coasts of North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

Storm at Savannah.

At Savannah, Ga., the storm, which had been predicted by the weather bureau for several days, began early in the afternoon and, according to a dispatch, increased from then on until it reached the climax between 11 and 12 o'clock at night, having lasted for eight hours. The storm and rain ceased for awhile in the afternoon. It began again with terrific force and the work of destruction reigned supreme and lasted until midnight, when the storm spent its fury. All the wharves along the river front and ocean steamship companies and Savannah, Florida and Western Railroad wharves were under water. The city streets were impassable on account of debris and fallen trees, twisted roofs, masses of brick fences, and broken limbs and branches.

It is difficult at the time this is written to estimate the damage as the result of the storm, but it was very general, and it is safe to say it will go up in the hundreds of thousands and perhaps higher. Nearly if not quite all the property owners in the city have been damaged to some extent and some to the amount of thousands. Fourteen lives are known to be lost, and this will certainly be augmented when details come to hand. There are forty or fifty other persons who are reported missing, and it is supposed, as nothing has been heard from them, that their bodies will be found later on. Twelve barks and barkentines which were anchored off quarantine station were thrown high upon the island, and some of them were carried by the storm across the marshes into an island twenty miles distant from the quarantine station.

The ruin at quarantine is immeasurable. Nothing is standing where one of the finest stations of the South Atlantic was twenty-four hours before, except the doctor's house, and how this weathered the fearful gale is miraculous. The wharves are gone, the new fumigating plant, which cost the city so much money, is in the bottom of the sea, and nine vessels which were waiting there for release to go to the city are high and dry in the marsh, and no doubt will be total wrecks. The Cosnine was the only vessel which managed to keep afloat. It is reported that eight of the crew of a terrapin sloop which went ashore on the south end were drowned. All the bath houses are gone, the Knights of Pythias' club house was washed away, two of the cottages of the Cottage Club are also gone. The Ranch and Rambler club houses were wrecked and the railroad track is cleaned out. The water swept with tremendous force over the island, railroad tracks being carried from 300 to 500 feet.

The people of Savannah and at Brunswick had warning of the coming storm and took to flight. But for this the loss of life would have been terrible. Whole rows of houses were wrecked and everything in the path of the wind went down. The known property loss is already over $1,000,000.

Havoc in the East.

At Baltimore not since the big flood of 1868 has such a deluge of water invaded the city. The wind blew a gale all the afternoon, damaging all movable property. Mountainous seas were piled up and rolling in the basin. The waves spread over the wharves and flooded the streets and buildings adjacent. Men rowed around in boats from store to store in the lower part of the city carrying merchants and clerks to their places of business and removing valuable goods and books. The streets resembled lagoons rather than business thoroughfares. The wharves were completely submerged, if not destroyed.

New York, Philadelphia, Boston and other cities suffered to a greater or less extent. Along the Coney Island beach everything has been swept away, and the roofs of many big buildings were carried for blocks.

The storm seems to have had its origin in a cyclone arising in the West Indies and from there swept along the Atlantic coast in a northeasterly direction for a distance of nearly 1,500 miles.

RAIN FAILS TO FALL.

Hot and Dry Weather Continues in Many Regions—Crop Conditions.

Washington dispatches in speaking of the weather and crops during the past week say that hot and dry weather continued in the Ohio valley, where the crops have been injured in many sections by continued drought. Frosts were reported in Wisconsin, which must have caused some damage. The weather was more favorable in the Northwest. Crops were generally improved in the States to the west of the upper Mississippi, while the conditions were unfavorable in the States of the Ohio Valley and Tennessee. In the Southern Rocky Mountain districts the season is reported as the most satisfactory for years, while in the Northern Rocky Mountain districts the ground is dry, crops need rain, and the ranges are in poor condition. The week was dry throughout the central valleys, except in portions of Kansas and Nebraska. Over the greater portion of the region named crops are much in need of rain, and especially from the lake region southward to the east Gulf coast.

The West India hurricane which passed inland from Florida to Northern New England caused great damage to growing crops in Eastern Georgia, South Carolina, and portions of North Carolina and Virginia. Generous rains occurred in North Dakota and portions of Minnesota, but the week was drier than usual from the Rocky Mountains westward to the Pacific coast. Alabama reports cotton picking getting along favorably, but the crops are in need of showers. Northern Georgia reports that corn has been injured by droughts.

CORN CROP IS POOR.

The Farmers' Review Gives the General Outlook as Discouraging.

The Farmers' Review, which is generally recognized as authority in the matter of crop conditions, this week contains the following:

Corn—Since our last report the condition of corn has continued to deteriorate. Only one in nine of the correspondents in Illinois report the crop in good condition. Two-ninths report fair. Over 66 per cent. of all the counties report the outlook as very discouraging. In Indiana there has been a great decline in condition, and in only a few counties will there be an average crop. In three-fourths of the counties the crop is estimated at less than 75 per cent. of the normal, and in many cases falls below a half crop. In Ohio not one correspondent reports a good prospect, but about one-third report fair. In the others the condition is from poor to very bad. Michigan reports a better outlook, the conditions being about evenly given at good, fair, poor. In Kentucky half of the correspondents report fair and good, the others poor. Missouri has a good prospect for corn, the condition being good in more than two-thirds of the counties. In Kansas 25 per cent. report good, 35 per cent. fair, the rest poor. Nebraska reports good in 31 per cent. of the area, fair in 24 per cent., poor in the rest. Iowa will have a large crop, nearly all counties being reported at fair, good and very good. The general condition is good in Wisconsin and Minnesota and fair in the Dakotas.

Potatoes—The average condition of the potato crop is poor in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Wisconsin and the Dakotas. It is nearly fair in Kentucky and Iowa; good in Missouri.

Pastures—Pastures are in very bad shape in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, Kansas, Iowa and Wisconsin. In Missouri, Nebraska, Minnesota and the Dakotas the pastures are still fair.

NEWBY DENIED A NEW TRIAL.

The Case Will Go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

At Springfield, Ill., Judge Allen overruled the motion for a new trial made by the defense in the celebrated Newby case. A motion for arrest of judgment was likewise overruled, and the court then sentenced the convicted man to two years at hard labor in the Chester penitentiary. An appeal was allowed, and the case will thus go to the United States Supreme Court. Ex-Attorney General McCartney has been engaged to carry the case up. Pending the appeal the defendant will go to prison. He takes the outcome indifferently. Grand Army men are taking a deep interest in the case, and Department Commander Blodgett has authorized Fairfield Post to appeal to other posts for aid in raising a fund to defend Newby.

Stole a Canal Boat.

Sunday night thieves stole a canal boat on the Miami and Erie canal, which was tied up about thirty miles south of Toledo, Ohio. They next caught a horse in a neighboring pasture, hitched him to the boat and hauled it to Defiance. Here the thieves broke into J. B. Weisenberg's elevator and stole about $650 worth of clover seed. This they loaded into the boat, and a start was then made for Toledo. After getting through three locks the robbers ran the boat into the Maumee River, hoping the current would carry them down. By this time the alarm had been given, and the men, being closely pursued, ran the boat into the bank, then escaped into Wood County. The police have no clew to the robbers.

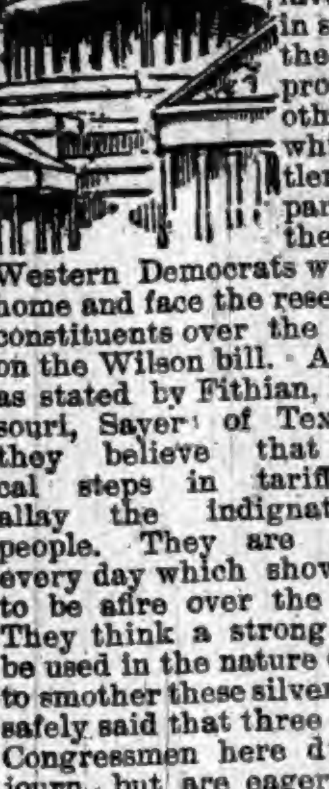
TO ACT ON THE TARIFF.

PROBABILITY THAT CONGRESS WILL NOT ADJOURN.

Leaders of the Democrats in the House Favor an Immediate Attack on the McKinley Bill—President Cleveland's Wishes to Be Consulted.

Doings at the Capital.

Washington correspondence:



IT is the plan of Bland, Springer and Crisp to go right on with Congressional business and avoid an adjournment. The sentiment of nearly all the Democrats and a strong contingent among the Republicans is in favor of continuing in session and go at the tariff, the appropriations and all other questions which press for settlement. This is particularly true of the Southern and Western Democrats who dislike to go home and face the resentment of silver constituents over the House outcome on the Wilson bill. Aside from that, as stated by Fithian, Dockery of Missouri, Sayers of Texas, and others, they believe that prompt, radical steps in tariff revision will allay the indignation of their people. They are getting letters every day which show their districts to be afire over the silver question. They think a strong tariff bill might be used in the nature of a wet blanket to smother these silver flames. It can be safely said that three out of every five Congressmen here do not want to adjourn, but are eager to push on with the work and get through. However, this wants to be remembered: Congress proposes but Cleveland disposes. Congress will adjourn or not just as President Cleveland wishes, and no one has heard whether Mr. Cleveland wants it to adjourn or not.

Routine Proceedings.

The House was occupied Monday altogether with the silver question. The Senate, by a vote of 32 to 29, decided that Mr. Mantle, of Montana, and Mr. Allen, of Washington, are not entitled to seats in that body, and that the Governor of a State has no right to appoint a Senator to fill a vacancy caused by the expiration of a regular term not happening by resignation or otherwise. The House bill to repeal the Sherman act was laid before the Senate and referred to the committee on finance. The bill allowing the banks to increase their circulation up to the par value of the bonds deposited by them was taken up, the question being on the amendment offered by Mr. Cockrell for the redemption of such two per cent. bonds as may be made and the payment therefor in a new issue of treasury notes. The amendment was rejected—yeas 23, nays 28. Mr. Cockrell then offered an amendment authorizing the holders of any United States bonds to deposit and receive in exchange legal tender notes equal to the face value of the bonds, the bonds to be held in the treasury subject to redemption in the same amount of legal-tender notes, which are then to be destroyed, and no interest to be paid on the bonds while so held in the treasury, but when again withdrawn the interest is to be paid, less 1½ per cent. per annum; but without action the Senate proceeded to executive business and soon adjourned.

Tuesday in the House was marked by a lively tilt between ex-Speaker Reed and Speaker Crisp. The latter left the chair to reply to criticisms by Mr. Reed and to sustain his own position. In the Senate a resolution offered by Mr. Stewart, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate whether there is danger of a deficiency in the revenues of the government during the current year, and, if so, what is the probable amount of such deficiency and whether the legislation is necessary to supply such deficiency, was adopted. Mr. Dolph introduced a bill (which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations) appropriating $500,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the Chinese exclusion act. Silver discussion is not yet ended.

Senator Sherman, in his speech Wednesday, submitted no plan, but made a few suggestions. He thinks that the silver bullion now in the Treasury should all be coined, and he is also in favor of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury or the President to issue bonds whenever it is necessary. Mr. Sherman was followed by Mr. Teller, and at the conclusion of Mr. Teller's speech the Senate went into executive session. The House is still discussing rules.

Mr. Wolcott, of Colorado, addressed the Senate Thursday, deprecating the repeal of the Sherman act; he was opposed by Mr. Gaffery, of Louisiana. The resolutions of the House on the death of Representative Mutchler, of Pennsylvania, were laid before the Senate and resolutions expressive of the sorrow of the Senate were offered by Mr. Cameron and agreed to, and the Senate, as a further evidence of respect to the memory of the deceased, adjourned. The House was occupied all the day with its rules.

Friday, after some twenty minutes spent in the ordinary routine morning business of the Senate (none of which was of public importance) the House bill to repeal part of the Sherman act was taken up. The House resumed the consideration of the new code of rules, the pending question being on the amendment offered Thursday by Mr. Boatner (Dem.), of Louisiana, which would practically put it in the power of any member who is in charge of any proposition on the floor to propose closure at any time that he thinks it advisable to do so. The amendment was rejected.

In the House the debate on rules was continued. In the Senate the House deficiency bill was reported and passed with some small amendments. A bill was introduced by Mr. Dolph appropriating $500,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the Chinese exclusion act. A large batch of nominations was received from the President, and a still larger one confirmed. It is likely the Senate will devote three weeks to silver talk.

"Then how do you know all this?"

"I'm the—"

(Interrupting)—"Why, Great Scott! I ought to have known it at once. Shake! I'm an assessor myself when I'm at home."—Chicago Tribune.

Don't Discard the Suspenders.

The stout man who wears a tight belt around his waist to give him an appearance of jauntiness, as well as to do the suspender service, does not know what harm he is doing to himself. A doctor told me yesterday that the wearing of a tight belt by a man, especially a stout man, is most injurious to health. It stops the circulation, and does not permit the digestive organs to operate as they should. When asked why it should be so much more injurious for a man to wear anything tight around his waist than it is for a woman, who is laced up year in and year out, the doctor said: "A man and woman can't be compared in that regard. A man uses entirely different muscles in breathing than a woman. He becomes accustomed to breathing from his abdomen, while a woman breathes almost entirely from her chest. Men had better wear loose belts and provide some other substitute for suspenders."—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Dumas' "Plagiarism" on Wilde.

An amusing mistake was recently made by a certain French critic who is usually accounted clever. A waggish Englishman, after the recent performance of Dumas' "Denise" in London, wrote to a newspaper, gravely explaining that there were epigrams in "Denise" which were obviously parodied and sometimes lifted from a play called "Lady Windermere's Fan." "Who is this Dumas," the writer indignantly demanded, "that he should calmly take possession of somebody else's phrases?" The Frenchman, strange to say, did not perceive the irony nor investigate the dates of production of the two plays. He was struck with amazement at British ignorance and proceeded to preach a severe sermon in the Debats on the subject.

Vanilla and Tonka Beans.

The genuine vanilla bean of commerce grows upon a vine of the orchid family, one of those weird sort of tropical air plants of which travelers give such interesting descriptions. It is quite an expensive article in the markets, and the coarse tonka bean, which is very inferior to it, is quite frequently substituted for it.

So general is the adulteration of vanilla extract, that chemists who use it in flavoring almost always prepare their own from the genuine bean, although at a considerably greater expense. The best place to get the vanilla bean is at a large wholesale drug store, in the great cities, where such articles are usually retailed.

An Idiot's Memory.

Great men are usually said to have great memories, but it does not follow that all who have great memories are great men. An idiot in Ohio was a great curiosity many years ago. He knew the whole Bible by heart from beginning to end, and if any verse was read or repeated to him he could tell exactly in what book and chapter it was to be found, and its verse number in the chapter. He was considered a great marvel in this particular, but in every other he was a mental imbecile, and could not be trusted even to feed himself.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Customs as to Dining.

The Spaniard, however courteous he may be, never invites a guest to dinner; in Italy, too, the privacy of the family is seldom invaded at the dinner hour; the Frenchman is delighted to entertain, but prefers to do it at his club, while the Englishman is never so genial as when seated at his own table with company surrounding him.

Doubtful Compliment.

A French physician has lately received the distinction of the cross of the Legion of Honor. The reason for the compliment is curiously stated thus by a Parisian medical journal:

This decoration Dr. X. owes to the [illegible] of the cholera to Paris. He lost fifty-six patients in that epidemic.

THE euchre player puts on a knave look when he plays the right bower.

MINISTERS exchange pulpits sometimes, but they never pay any boot.

A CURRENT remark—I must make some jelly this season.

Animals and Earthquakes.

Visiting Bellano after the earthquake we were taken by our guide to a handsome palazzo belonging to one of the patrician families of the place. It was built in the Venetian style, with marble pillars and staircases, and a central hall from which the living rooms opened. The house still stood, although in a ruinous condition. Beneath one side of the hall ran a range of stables, tenanted by some fine horses, of which the owner was extremely fond. On the night before the earthquake these animals kept up a constant stamping and pawing, the noise echoing through the corridors. More than once the head groom and once the master himself went into the stables to see what might be amiss. The horses were in a strange and unaccountable state of agitation, but they could discover nothing else. In what way the coming convulsion was conveyed to their senses, who can say? For these dumb beast evidently had a knowledge of it, denied to man.—T. O. Trollope's Reminiscences.

Continents and Oceans.

Of all the sciences that of geology is perhaps the least advanced. This is due, not to a lack of students or earnest and persistent investigation, but to the restricted field of observation. Much of the study of geology, therefore, is necessarily of a theological character.

Frequently about the time these theories became accepted as facts they were over-turned, or apparently so, by some new discovery. Until a few years ago, for instance, it was generally accepted by geologists that the continents and oceans of the earth occasionally changed places; that islands of the oceans were summits of submerged mountains or ranges of mountains.

But recently, in view of certain discoveries, many students in geology have been compelled to change their belief, and hold that the great continental masses and deep ocean floors are permanent features of the earth's crust.

Effect of Music on Penn.

Walter Savage Landor introduces Peterborough in conversation with William Penn, and makes him applaud Penn cynically, when the latter declares that there is something in a violin, if played discreetly, that appeareth to make hot weather cool, and cold weather warm and temperate; not, however, when its chords have young maidens tied invisibly to the end of them, jerking them up and down in a strange fashion before one's eyes, and unless one taketh due caution, wafting their hair upon one's face and bosom, and their very breath, too, between one's lips, if peradventure one omitteth to shut them bitterly and hold tight.—Musical Courier.

Not Flattering.

A certain young poet has achieved rather an unenviable reputation among his friends for his blunt candor that is forever betraying him into one of the things-one-would-have-preferred-to-say-differently, as Du Maurier puts it. On his last birthday he was given a charming dinner by his doting parents, at which he was bitterly disappointed by the regrets of several notables. Thus, when a society girl said to him at the close of the evening: "What a delightful time we have had!" he exclaimed from the fullness of his heart: "I'm glad it hasn't seemed dull to you. We invited some awfully clever people, but not one of them came!"

Don't Blame the Cook

If a baking powder is not uniform in strength, so that the same quantity will always do the same work, no one can know how to use it, and uniformly good, light food cannot be produced with it.

All baking powders except Royal, because improperly compounded and made from inferior materials, lose their strength quickly when the can is opened for use. At subsequent bakings there will be noticed a falling off in strength. The food is heavy, and the flour, eggs and butter wasted.

It is always the case that the consumer suffers in pocket, if not in health, by accepting any substitute for the Royal Baking Powder. The Royal is the embodiment of all the excellence that it is possible to attain in an absolutely pure powder. It is always strictly reliable. It is not only more economical because of its greater strength, but will retain its full leavening power, which no other powder will, until used, and make more wholesome food.

"August Flower"

"I am ready to testify under oath that if it had not been for August Flower I should have died before this. Eight years ago I was taken sick, and suffered as no one but a dyspeptic can. I employed three of our best doctors and received no benefit. They told me that I had heart, kidney, and liver trouble. Everything I ate distressed me so that I had to throw it up. August Flower cured me. There is no medicine equal to it." LORENZO F. SLEEPER, Appleton, Maine.

The Carter Medicine Co. Gain an Injunction against Substitutions.

In the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division Royal Courts of Justice, Saturday, Aug. 5, 1893. Before Mr. Justice Romer. The Carter Medicine company vs. Knight.

A Pharmaceutical chemist at Bath, Somersetshire, England, named Joseph Knight, has had an injunction made against him restraining him from selling any "Little Liver Pills" not made by them. The evidence adduced, satisfied the judge that in one case he had endeavoured to pass off as Carter's, pills he had bought from a London wholesale house.—The Chemist and Druggist, London, Eng.

THREE DOLLARS A WEEK FOR LIFE,

Here is a Snap for Brainy People. The Latest thing out.

In order to introduce The Canadian Agriculturist into new homes, the publishers have decided to present an unusually attractive reward list for their Great Eighth Half Yearly Literary Attraction for the summer of 1893, which closes Oct. 1. All that is necessary is to take a few sheets of paper and make a all the words you can out of the letters in the three words, "World's Columbian Exposition," and send them to us, enclosing $1 for six months subscription to either The Canadian Agriculturist or The Ladies' Home Magazine, two of the choicest illustrated periodicals of the day.

The sender of the largest list will receive $3 per week for life; 2d, $1,000 in gold; 3d, $500, 4th, $250; 5th, $100; 6th, ticket to World's fair and ten day's expenses; pianos, organs, ladies' and gents' gold and silver watches, silver tea services, diamond rings, and over 10,000 other rewards, making altogether the most valuable prize list ever offered by any publisher. Send for printed list of former prize-winners.

Rules 1. Foreign or obsolete words not counted. 2. Who Is Responsible?

(South Bend Times.)

It seems characteristic of the human race to shift responsibility or often to misplace it at least. The blame for the stringent times of the last two months has been no exception to this rule.

A few days ago the writer overheard the beginning of what he supposed would be an argument between two political opponents. The republican shifted all the responsibility of stringency upon the change of administration and the democrat party. The democrat seeing the uselessness of arguing with one set in his opinions to the point of unreasonableness, simply turned away and left his disputant standing by himself, whereupon the republican ejaculated, "That is the way with democrats when you charge them with responsibility for the hard times."

The writer answered: "Your charges are unreasonable. In 1873 we had a panic more severe and critical than the present one, with one bank failure after another until value had depreciated one half, and real estate could not be moved at any price and some of our present real estate dealers of twenty years standing, have gone home many a night with 'tears in their eyes,' so to speak, because they could not sell any property and could scarcely keep up the interest on their investment. All this after thirteen years of one administration, which continued during and after the panic until times became better and values increased to their former standing. So the panic of '73 could not have been caused by a change of administration. Neither were they the fault of so called labor organizations. Stringencies have ever followed good times and ever will in the history of our country. Please don't shift the responsibility on your neighbor or his party, but take some of your own medicine."

OLD TIMERS.

Low Journalism.

The Kendallville Standard has this:

The filthy Sunday Sun of Chicago, which has circulated in several towns in Indiana, defaming the character of many respectable and upright people, has been excluded from the mails by the postmaster general, which was right and proper.

Served it right. It is not a fit sheet to go before the public. Yet the Garrett Clipper is much filthier and runs on a much lower intellectual and moral plane. Yet it is allowed to go through the mails. And people claiming to be decent read it in private. The Chicago Sun is also blamed for "blackmailing Auburn's citizens." But it has not blackmailed Auburn or its citizens a tenth as much as has the foul mouthed Clipper. The people of Auburn ought to have spirit enough to kick both the nasty sheets out of the community.

Harvest Excursions.

One limited first class fare with $2.00 additional for the round trip, Aug. 22d, Sept. 12th and Oct. 10th, 1893, the "Wisconsin Central Lines" will run low rate Harvest Excursions on above dates, to points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota. WATERLOO.

General Blair was in Auburn Monday.

Date of the Waterloo Indiana District Fair, October 9, 10, 11, 12 & 13, 1893.

Mrs. Cary Duncan is visiting her people in this county. Her home is in Ohio.

Mrs. John Leas, accompanied by her niece, are visiting relatives in Marlton, Michigan.

Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Johnson, Mrs. L. M. Ensley and J. H. Wagner, of Hudson, and Miss Katie Ahrendt started for the fair Tuesday.

Many of the people here and vicinity attended the Bachtel funeral near Butler Sunday, as the tragedy had created great interest with all.

Several of our veterans went to Auburn Monday, to take the special Wabash train to Indianapolis, with the rest of the DeKalb county Battalion.

Monday forenoon the fine brick residence of Charles Bassett, in the west part of town, burned to the ground. The fire caught from a chimney, and was first seen burning in the roof. All efforts to put it out were useless for there was but little water to be had. Some furniture was saved, though in bad shape. It was insured for $1,100, but the loss of a well furnished and expensive home is a great one to Mr. Bassett.

BUTLER.

For many long years, the traveler by rail or highway in his passage between Waterloo and Butler has observed a tumble down log house, hard by the highway and a little north of the railroad, that has undergone little, if any change in its appearance, since the early fifties, when it was erected by Samuel Deeters, a pioneer, who with his wife and a number of small children, occupied it. It happened to occupy the right of way of the Lake Shore railroad, and Samuel Campbell, in clearing the right of way for this road in 54-5, removed it a few rods north and east to its present location, where for nearly forty years, it has stood in sunshine and storm, and where this family of small children have grown up and started out to face life and its trials. From some cause many years ago, Samuel Deeters left his little family and wife and spent his life in western wanderings, never returning or bestowing any care upon his family. All these years his faithful wife cared for her family. One by one her children left her, or married, until her only son, Samuel, alone remained. He, though now near forty years of age, still clung to his mother, and by hard work and frugal management has gained a fair competence, a good farm near by, and for the past few months has been engaged in building a tidy and comfortable dwelling for himself and mother and had the same so far completed as to be ready to occupy. Last Wednesday he adjusted matters with his builder, A. W. Seldenright, and on Thursday went to Auburn to get some $300 that he had deposited in Davis' bank. He found the bank closed and but meager hopes of ever getting his hard earned money and came home very despondent On entering his home his mother asked him if he got his money. He replied that he had not done so, and asked her to loan him $75, which she did, he then asked her for $70 more, she replied that she would not do it unless he gave her his note. This seemed to turn his mental equilibrium and he answered by saying he would have the money anyway, and seized a piece of pine board about three inches wide, half-inch thick and three feet long, and beat his seventy-five year old mother into almost insensibility. Laura Lowe daughter of Amos Bachtel, who lives just across the highway, heard the mother's screams and ran down to the fence in front of the house, to inquire the cause or render assistance. He desisted from beating his mother, and invited her to come into the house, this she declined to do. when he then commenced to upbraid her, and ran up stairs, as his mother supposed, to get her money, but came down with a revolver. Mrs. Lowe fearing for her safety fled homeward, only to be followed by a fusilade of bullets, one of which broke her arm above the elbow and another penetrated her body below the waist. She succeeded in reaching home, and in the excitement, his mother had escaped unseen and reached Mr Bachtel's house. He then proceeded to demolish the furniture, little of which escaped complete destruction. He then made a further search for his mother, and failing to find her, concluded that she had concealed herself in her barn just across the railroad, which he immediately set on fire, and which with considerable of his own property was totally destroyed. He still retained his revolver, and seeing Wm. Yates on his way home from town ran down to the railroad crossing and motioned him to stop. Mr. Yates not knowing anything was amiss did so. He no sooner came near than he commenced to shoot at him. Mr. Yates jumped from the wagon and ran ahead of his team and he followed with all his might shooting as he ran. Two balls took effect one in the shoulder and another in the hip, neither necessarily fatal. He then started back and got to the main road just as Mr. Bachtel came along on horseback on his way to Butler for a doctor for his daughter. He caught Mr. Bachtel's horse by the bridle and deliberately shot him twice. Mr. Bachtel fell from his horse, but was able to reach Mrs. Campbell's house nearly, when Mrs Campbell's daughter, started to go home with him in a round about way, but had proceeded but a few rods when Mr. Bachtel fell, and was carried home by neighbors Deeters went back home and sat down on the fence in front of the house, apparently unconcerned over the deviltry he had wrought. Medical aid was hastily summoned, but the wounds of both Mr. Bachtel and Mrs. Lowe were pronounced fatal. Mr Bachtel died Friday morning about 9 o'clock and his daughter, Laura Lowe, about four in the afternoon of the same day. Soon after the shooting he quietly surrendered and was lodged in jail the same evening. The opinion of the community is widely divided as to the cause of tragedy. Many think he is insane, yet a goodly few shake their heads and say he only had a mad fit. His worst enemies have only good words for him in the general way, but the feeling now against him is very bitter. His victims Mr. Bachtel and his daughter, Mrs. Lowe, were were buried last Sunday. Their funeral took place from Mr. Bachtel's late residence and was conducted by Rev. Mr. Kain of the M. E. church of Butler, of which Laura was a member, assisted by Rev. Mr. Tedro of the U. B. church. The gathering was the largest perhaps in the history of the county, an actual count of more than 550 teams, being made and the number present being estimated at from 3,000 to 5,000 people. It required about one hour for the people to view the remains marching in double file. The remains were interred in the cemetery just east of town. This fatal and tragical event has produced intense excitement, and little is heard anywhere but a discussion of its varied phases. What the outcome will be, seems a puzzling question, but that he should ever be allowed freedom in this locality seems quite unlikely. His mother has survived her injuries and is in a fair way to recover.

THE SONG OF THE TEXAS CORN.

I was dry and dusty;
I was weak and weary;
Now I'm glad and lusty,
And the earth looks cheery,
Oh, the soaking,
Mirth provoking,
Laughter making rain;
Soft and silky,
Mild and milky
Grows my golden grain.

Listen to the laughter
That my leaves are making,
When the wind comes after Kisses, softly shaking.
Oh, healthgiving,
Breathing, living,
Heaven pouring rain!
Come, caress me,
Kiss me, bless me,
Once and once again!

Let your hearts be singing;
Peal your pæans, peoples;
Set the joy bells ringing
In the lofty steeples.
Praises render
To the sender
Of the joyous rain;
Of the living,
The lifegiving,
Of the precious rain.

How Greeley Helped Lincoln.

"In McClure's 'Lincoln and Men of War Times,' I see," said aged Charles Wister, of Germantown, yesterday, "that the colonel gives Andrew Curtin a great deal of credit for Lincoln's nomination at Chicago in 1860. I sat in a chair beside Colonel McClure in that convention, and I think Curtin and all others were totally overshadowed by Horace Greeley. Greeley bore Seward a bitter grudge. He said he had made Seward governor, and he thought him ungrateful. On Seward's refusal to act as he wished, Greeley declared, 'My time will come at last.' When the convention time arrived we all saw what seemed to be a band of soldiers marching up the street. What was it but old Horace Greeley in his famous plug hat and white coat stalking along after a brass band at the head of the New York delegation. They were the pick and flower of the state too. They were given a rousing reception in the convention hall.

"Greeley had corresponded with the ablest Republicans throughout the Union, and for two years had been planning against Seward's ambition. When the battle was fought and Lincoln was nominated Greeley came down stairs from his room in the hotel with his carpetbag in his hand. As he bade goodby his words were, 'My mission is accomplished.'"—Philadelphia Record.

Change for the Wedding Fee.

A clergyman in Cumberland county had married a couple, and was surprised by the groom's asking him the amount of the bill. He had not been accustomed to receive anything of much value, and said that the matter was left to the groom to decide. "But I'd rather you'd state the figures," was the reply, and finally the minister said, "Well, anywhere between one and ten dollars." The groom handed him a five dollar bill and departed.

In about a fortnight he returned to the minister's house and said, "Look here, when I gave you that five dollar bill I expected some change back." The astonished minister happened only to have two dollars about him. He took that from his pocket and gave it to the man, and there the transaction ended.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Three Remarks About Marriage.

James Lane Allen has a story entitled "John Gray," in which he has three remarks to make apropos to the subject of marriage: "Some women in marrying demand all and give all; with good men they are happy; with base men they are broken hearted. Some demand everything and give little; with weak men they are tyrants; with strong men they are divorced. Every bachelor is really the husband of an old maid. For every single man carries around with him the spirit of a woman to whom he is more or less happily wedded. When a man actually marries, this inner helpmate wisely disappears in the presence of her external contemporary."

Bacteria in Croton Water.

The examinations of artificial ice made from the distilled Croton water have shown that when it does contain a few bacteria these are not of many different species, as is the case with the undistilled Croton, but they are almost all of one single species, and this a hardy, harmless form which multiplies readily and rapidly in pure water.—T. Mitchell Prudden in Harper's.

Carrying a Mortgage.

Bilkins—Jimson must have built that fine house of his under a mortgage, didn't he?

Wilkins—Yes. How did you know?

Bilkins—I notice his shoulders are beginning to look like a mansard roof.—New York Weekly.

A strange custom is followed by Mexican farmers. They use oxen of one color in the morning and another color in the afternoon. They do not know why, but they know that it must be the right thing to do, because their forefathers did it.

The best words of Richard III were: "Not one foot will I flee so long as breath bides within my breast, for he who shaped both sea and land this day shall end my battles or my life. I will die king of England."

About 90 per cent. of the wild animals used for the beast fights of the Circus Maximus came from northern Africa, and the Algerian coast towns are still the favorite rendezvous of international pet dealers.

According to a somewhat cynical old proverb the meed of nightly sleep justly due to average human beings should thus be distributed: "Six hours to a man, seven to a woman and eight to a fool."

Count Chardonet, of Paris, makes silk from cellulose that is indistinguishable from that manufactured by silkworms. It is dangerously inflammable.

Foot Notes.

Never wear a nice pair of shoes when you must needs wear rubbers. It spoils them more quickly than anything else. Have an old pair to wear under rubbers, and thus save your good shoes and enjoy the comfort the older ones give. When soles are worn thin use insoles—they will save both shoes and stockings. These are cut from sole leather. When suffering from corns cut out the place over them from an old shoe and cover with a neat patch. It is a sure cure.—Detroit Free Press.

HEADACHE, SLEEPLESSNESS, NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. I soon gained twenty pounds. All this occurred after learned and well known physicians had failed. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results. LOUIS D. VANDERVERE.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1872—Continued.

In the winter of 1871-2, a state board of education began the publication of monthly lists of questions to be used by examiners in testing the knowledge of applicants for license to teach schools. These lists, sent under seal to be broken only in the presence of the assembled prospective teachers, secured uniformity of requirement throughout the state and made examinations almost wholly written and much more difficult.

Examiner Barns organized, at Waterloo, a training school to qualify the district teachers for their duties and to prepare them for the ordeal of examination. His example was imitated by the principals of graded schools, who made a specialty of instructing this most deserving class of young people, with gratifying results.

The Auburn schools were a potent factor in this important duty and the large attendance of intended teachers stimulated progress in the High School department and added greatly to interest in scholarship. The regular term closed under pleasant circumstances, having enrolled 230 pupils nearly equally apportioned among the four teachers. These teachers had the hearty good will of parent and pupil alike. Just after the close of the rhetorical exercises, during which the two upper rooms had been thrown into one, presenting the united schools compactly seated, the Rev. A. W. Lamport, of the M. E. church, stepped forward and presented the Principal with Bishop Kingsley's "Round the World" in two neat volumes, and then Miss Ciddy Hare, on the part of the High School students, presenting Mr. McIntosh with a fine album, said: "As you unclasp and open the leaves of this album, you will behold the many faces you have often looked upon in this school room. These photos are but our shadows, yet we hope far down the future years, that they may call to your mind many pleasing memories of the Auburn Schools."

Most pleasant were these testimonials to the recipient, most creditable to Auburn youth of 1872, and while those faces have aged and grown grave with the cares of life, the album preserves their shadows in perpetual youth and keeps green a happy memory.

Prof. James G. Bowersox, of Butler, a most able and worthy teacher, preacher and citizen, closed the proceedings by an admirable and scholarly address still preserved in the COURIER files.

A spring term began March 18, but was seven weeks later abruptly closed in pursuance of an order by the Town Board in consequence of supposed prevalence of the small pox. At this session, M. F. Long succeeded Mr. Houser and the primary grades were taught by Emma Hull and Julia Plum.

The fall term, measured by numbers, and the character, diligence and deportment of the High School members, marks a period to which all interested can refer with pleasure and pride. Scores of young men and women, not only from DeKalb but adjoining counties, crowded the upper rooms and large classes, their members actuated by scholarly zeal, stimulated study and incited enthusiasm in recitation to the close of the session.

Final exercises were held in the M. E. church on the evening of Nov. 1, and a crowded house listened with unabated interest to a program in which twenty-eight speakers had a part. A novelty of the occasion was a spirited, simultaneous declamation of selections by five young men, each speaking his separate piece and seeking by all his oratorical powers to concentrate upon himself the attention of the audience.

The names of speakers and their themes, in the light of methods in vogue more than twenty years ago, are given, as follows:

Frank Griswold,	Change and Decay.
Wm. Hoagland,	Hardest time of all.
Martin Hoffman,	Murderer's Secret.

Lorenzo Nelson,	End of Time.
Daniel S. Littlefield,	Wonders of Contrast.
J. W. Hippenhammer,	March of Mind.

For the winter term of 1872-3 W. H. McIntosh was engaged at a salary of $80 a month, the highest compensation paid any instructor in the Auburn Schools to that time. He was assisted by Mr. Long and Miss Rainier, Miss Hall and Miss Hull.

Enrollment in the High School was 56 with almost perfect attendance. Wright's Orthography, Henderson's Test Speller and Walton's Dictation problems were of the studies. Writing was taught according to the Spencerian system and the class in Green's Analysis numbered forty-one. Lessons in length and subject matter taxed the intellect of the student to the utmost and the laggard found little rest in reviews and examinations.

Chicago on Fire.

One of the most interesting and wonderful exhibitions outside of the World's fair, at Chicago, is the great panorama of the Chicago Fire. No written description can do justice to this remarkable scene. It presents the city as it was while burning, in which are shown in a startling manner the fire ruins and panic that make this conflagration the most awful calamity of the century. Every-one going to the World's fair to see the sights should take occasion to view this thrilling scene. It is situated at 140 Michigan Avenue and is easy of access from all the down-town hotels.

AROUND THE WORLD.

INTELLIGENCE FROM ALL PARTS OF THE GLOBE.

A Wealthy Planter Rewards His Faithful Colored Attendants—Paper Money of the Country — Bismarck Seriously Ill — New Western Base Ball League.

A Worthy Pardon.

Lincoln D. Wood of Cleveland, Ohio, who was to have been tried at Danville, Ky., for the murder of ex-Mayor Barney Higgins of Somerset, in the Danville Court House in May last, is a free man. Mrs. E. H. Pierce of Danville, with Mrs. Gibson and Mrs. Waddle of Somerset, went to Frankfort to lay before Governor Brown a petition signed by ninety-seven women of Somerset and 187 women of Danville, asking for Wood's pardon. Higgins, when killed, was in Danville on a change of venue to be tried for attempting to assault an invalid sister of Wood. He succeed in having his trial postponed, and as he was leaving the Court House he and Wood met for the first time. Wood drew his pistol and emptied it at Higgins, who died the next day. Wood's act was approved by public sentiment. His sister is now an inmate of a New York asylum. Wood is employed by the Bingham Hardware Company of Cleveland.

The Paper Money of the Country.

An official statement prepared by the Treasury Department shows the total of the United States notes, treasury notes, national bank notes, gold and silver certificates, and currency certificates outstanding to be: One-dollar notes, $39,866,353; two-dollar, $31,190,255; five-dollar, $253,387,809; ten-dollar, $312,034,466; twenty-dollar, $239,587,480; fifty-dollar, $45,097,165; one-hundred-dollar, $75,829,170; five-hundred-dollar, $20,142,000; one-thousand-dollar, $45,441,500, five-thousand-dollar, $14,875,000; ten-thousand-dollar, $34,640,000. Total, $1,112,091,198.

Leaves a Fortune to Negroes.

George W. Dye, one of the wealthiest planters in Northeast Georgia is dead, and has left his fortune of over half a million to the negro family which attended him for the last fifty years. Dye was never married. He owned 10,000 acres of land in one tract, and raised a great quantity of cotton. He had no member of his family living with him, and his attendants were faithful negroes. To these he left his estate. His executors are leading men in Elbert County. One is a preacher. Mr. Dye was 84 years of age.

A New Western League.

It is announced that a new Western base ball league is to be organized with Indianapolis as one of the clubs. The list of cities will probably include St. Paul, Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, Detroit, Milwaukee, Toledo, and Indianapolis. Many of the cities have already agreed to join the organization. John T. Brush, President of the Cincinnati club and a prominent figure in league affairs, is in with the new deal.

Ask the Repeal of the Geary Law.

At the session of the Michigan Methodist Conference, Chaplain McCabe offered a resolution, which was adopted, asking Congress to repeal the Geary Chinese Act, on the ground of justice and fair dealing, and for the reason that it endangers the interests of the church in China. The petition stated that the Methodist Episcopal Church has $400,000 worth of property and 125 missionaries in China.

Small-pox Quarantine.

The Indiana State Board of Health has issued an order that all passengers out of Muncie, Ind., must show certificates of proper vaccination and that their baggage has been disinfected. This is to prevent the small pox, which is epidemic in that city, from spreading, and is practically a quarantine against Muncie. Secretary Metcalf, of the board, is there to see that the order is carried out.

Will Talk It to Death.

Mr. Pugh of Alabama, a member of the Senate Finance Committee, in a two and one-half hours speech against a repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law, declared that it was the determined and unalterable purpose of the opponents of repeal to oppose it until their physical strength was exhausted and their power of speech gone.

For Minister to Bolivia.

The President has sent to the Senate the name of Charles H. J. Taylor of Kansas, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Bolivia.

Bismarck Very Ill.

A special dispatch from Kissington says Prince Bismarck is very seriously ill. It is said that he has entirely lost the use of his hands.

Thousands Apply for Work.

Owing to the information that had gone forth to the effect that 2,000 men would be put to work cleaning streets at Chicago, and that they would be hired at 5 o'clock in the morning, many of those desiring work were on hand before the booths as early as 4 o'clock. At 5 o'clock there were hundreds there and at 6 o'clock thousands. The whole day was devoted to picking out the men and assigning them to the foreman under whom they will work.

Verdict on the Colehour Wreck.

Chicago special: The investigation of the disaster at Colehour, on the South Chicago and Southern branch of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway, by the Coroner is finished. The verdict fastens the responsibility of the wreck upon the operating officials of the railroad and assigns as the cause of the accident imperfectly arranged schedules, improper track facilities and the criminal negligence of operators. The verdict reads:

"We, the jury, from the evidence and the surrounding circumstances, believe said collision was due to the imperfect makeup of the time card regulating the movement of the trains and improper track facilities, also to the criminal negligence of the operating officials, therefore, we, the jury, recommend that Charles D. Law, superintendent, F. B. O'Connor, and the rest of the management of the western division of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago railway, whose names are unknown to the jury, be apprehended and held to await the action of the grand jury."

G. A. R.

The National Encampment at Indianapolis.

At Wednesday's session of the National Encampment of the G. A. R., held at Indianapolis, the report and address of Commander-in-chief Weissert was delivered. In an introductory way he reviewed the progress of the order during the past year and made appropriate allusion to the death during that time of two illustrious comrades, Rutherford B. Hayes and Benjamin F. Butler. Continuing, he said: "While our leaders are fast passing away there has been an unusually large death loss amongst the rank and file of those who carried the gun and knapsack during the late war, and post charters throughout the order have been repeatedly draped with the insignia of mourning. The loss by death in the G. A. R. during the past year is 7,002. This is an excess of any previous annual mortuary return.

After the reading of various reports Past Commander-in-chief Merrill arose and nominated Capt. J. G. B. Adams of Massachusetts, as Commander-in-chief to succeed Commander Weissert of Wisconsin. Gen. Hurst of Ohio withdrew and Adams was chosen by acclamation. Ivan N. Walker of Indianapolis, was elected Senior Vice Commander, and J. C. Bigger of Texas, Junior Vice Commander without opposition. Amidst great excitement the Encampment adjourned until 10:30 Thursday.

Adams, the new Commander-in-chief, was born in 1841, and in 1861 enlisted in Ben Perley Poore's rifle battallion. He was promoted to captain for his valor. He participated in every battle of the Army of the Potomac. At Fredericksburg he saved the colors from capture after eight color-bearers had been killed. He was captured in 1864, and held prisoner for nine months.

The next Encampment goes to Pittsburgh. There was no other applicant.

TRAINS MEET.

A Terrible Head-End Collision on the Nickel Plate.

When train No. 40 on the Nickel Plate road reached Leipsic, Ohio, the white lights were out and the train sped rapidly onward. The morning was foggy and the engineer could only see a few rods ahead. Two miles east of Leipsic Engineer Charles Merriett was horrified to see train No. 37 approaching rapidly from the opposite direction on the same track. He called to fireman Rodeheaver and both jumped when the two trains were only about three car lengths apart. Engineer Davidson and fireman Perry Unser, on the engine attached to train No. 37, also jumped before the engines came together. They jumped too late, however, and were caught and buried under the wrecked engines and cars. Engineer Davidson was horribly crushed by the cars that heaped themselves upon him, and was taken from the wreck dead. Firemen Unser was scalded from the head down and suffered a compound fracture of the left leg.

Charles Merriett, the engineer on train 40 suffered a fracture of the leg and had three ribs broken. Fireman Rodeheaver also had a leg broken and was badly bruised about the body.

The accident was caused by the failure of operator Nease at Leipsic to deliver orders that were sent him from Fort Wayne. These orders were for the trains to meet at Leipsic.

DEFEATED.

The House of Lords Rejected the Home Rule Bill.

London special: The House of Lords has rejected the Irish home rule bill by a vote of 428 to 420. A special police force was ordered to report for duty in the palace yard in front of the house of parliament to be ready for immediate action in case of hostile demonstration against the lords when the latter left the building after division on the home rule bill. All the corridors and approaches thereto were packed with people. Prominent among the crowd were Chamberlain, Balfour, and United States Minister Bayard. The side galleries were filled with duchesses and countesses, and their daughters. The clergy of Great Britain were represented by seventy bishops, including the Archbishop of Canterbury. In the streets an immense crowd awaited the announcement. When the result finally reached the people it was received with vociferous cheering. An analysis shows that twenty-five bishops and both archbishops were present at the division, and all voted with the majority. The vote was the largest ever recorded in the House of Lords.

DAYLIGHT ROBBERY.

The Cashier and Two of the Robbers Killed.

A daring robbery occurred in broad daylight at the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank at Delta, Col., but the sum secured was small. Three mounted men rode up and entering quickly rushed up to A. S. Bleke, the cashier, presented guns and demanded what money he had. The cashier refused. The robbers made a grab through the window, securing $500 and opened fire. The cashier fell dead. The robbers fired at H. H. Wolbert, assistant cashier, but missed him. The shooting attracted the citizens and Ray Simpson, a leading hardware merchant and a dead shot, ran for his Winchester and started for the alley in the rear of the bank where the robbers tied their horses. The robbers had started out of town when Simpson got there but he succeeded in killing two, shooting them through the head.

Terrific Explosion on Board a Steamer.

Pacific mail steamer Barracouta has arrived at San Francisco in a badly shattered condition. The deck house, hatch, and saloon were wrecked and match wood made of the vessel's fittings. The captain reports that on the 27th, shortly after noon, when twelve hours out of Comax, B. C., sixty miles off shore, when the steamer's course had just been shaped for Acapulco, a terrific explosion occurred doing the damage stated. The explosion seemed to have occurred in the hole among the coal and the captain thinks it was dynamite, but has no reason to suspect any one.

Police Officer Killed.

The other morning the lifeless body of John Springer, a member of the Lafayette, Ind., police force, was found near the tracks of the Big Four Railroad. His skull was fractured and the scalp torn loose from his head and drawn down over his face. The indications are that he jumped from the train while it was in motion. He alighted in a gulley beside the track, throwing him forward, his head striking the car wheels or the ties. Springer was a sober man and one of the best of the force.

TWELVE LIVES LOST.

BAD WRECK ON THE FT. WAYNE RAILWAY.

Two Trains Collide on the "Y" Near Colehour—Twelve People Killed and Nineteen Others Seriously Hurt—Passenger Train Runs Into a Milk Train.

Disaster and Death.

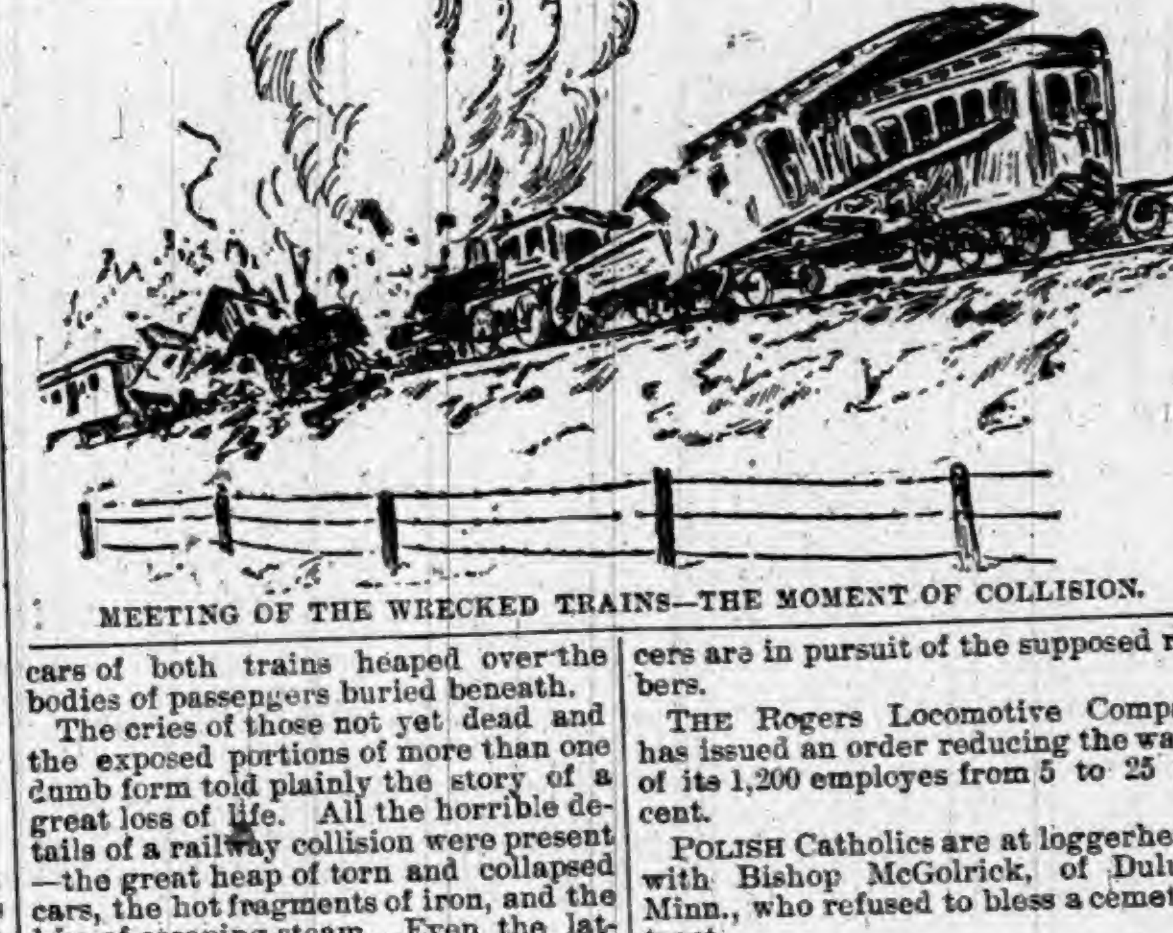
In a collision the other morning between a milk train of the Pittsburg, Chicago and Fort Wayne Railway and an east-bound passenger train out of Chicago on the Panhandle, or Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railway, twelve persons were killed outright and nineteen others were injured. The collision occurred on the "Y" running from the main line just south of Colehour to East Hammond, Ind., at the point of a curve, and in a sparsely settled locality. The baggage car of the east-bound passenger train was ground into pieces, and from this most of the killed and injured were taken.

The scene of the wreck being far removed from immediate police and surgical aid made the calamity a most distressing one, and it was more than an hour before the first of those rescued, maimed and bleeding, could be carried to houses in Colehour and South Chicago for treatment. Physicians were summoned from the latter place and engines and unused cars were hastily prepared and rushed to the scene of the wreck.

Terrible Force of the Collision.

The trains met on the single track of the "Y," or East Hammond branch, just where there is a heavy curve. The contact of the moving masses of cars was tremendous and hardly a standing portion was left of the east-bound baggage car. The twisted and torn pieces of this car were penetrated in every direction by the jagged iron points of the milk train locomotive, and when the residents of Colehour came hurrying to the scene they found the fruit cars of both trains heaped over the bodies of passengers buried beneath.

The cries of those not yet dead and the exposed portions of more than one dumb form told plainly the story of a great loss of life. All the horrible details of a railway collision were present—the great heap of torn and collapsed cars, the hot fragments of iron, and the hiss of escaping steam. Even the latter could not drown the moans of the wounded, who were helpless, while the uninjured passengers and those of the train crew not buried in the wreck made preparations for their relief.



MEETING OF THE WRECKED TRAINS—THE MOMENT OF COLLISION.

Word of the calamity having reached South Chicago, the police notified the surgeons of that city, and by 10 o'clock a procession of these and many citizens was on its way to the death field.

Twelve dead bodies were taken out the wreck. The list of the killed is:

ANSON TEMPLE, Manager of Schiller Theater, Chicago.
Unknown man with Manager Temple. Probably an actor.
WILLIAM RIGNEY, Traveling Passenger Agent Wisconsin Central Railroad.
G. A. HINES, Vincennes, Ind.
WILLIAM SHONICKER, New Albany, Ind.
WILLIAM RICHARDSON, Chicago.
R. D. ADAMS, Fairfield, Ill.
E. A. BARNARD, Terre Haute, Ind.
Four unknown men.
Nineteen people were badly hurt.

Colehour, a settlement that is practically a southern continuation of South Chicago, and which contains many of the latter's shipping interests, lies between the lake shore and the Calumet River at 105th street. It is but a short distance north of Roby, and is cut by three railways, the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago, the Lake Shore, and the Baltimore and Ohio. The Indiana State line touches the lake shore just southeast of Colehour, which is thirteen miles from the city hall. The town concentrates its business along the river front, where there are salt, lumber and coal docks and ship-building yards.

SINGULAR MORTALITY RECORD.

Four California Pioneers Pass Away Within Seven Days.

Within the last seven days four old California pioneers, intimate friends for years, have passed away. Their deaths form a singular record in mortality. Every afternoon the four men, all over 65 years of age, met at their club, the Arion, at San Francisco, and played whist together. On one Wednesday, Joseph Hug, aged 69, died from a paralytic stroke. Three then sat about the card table. The day before Hug's funeral Theodore Wetzel, aged 66, youngest of the quartet, passed away. Two days later William Dargener, the patriarch, died. Emil A. Engelberg was left alone. He attended the first two funerals, but on the day of the third burial he could not rise and two days later he also was dead. Engelberg was a member of Stevenson's California Regiment. He was rich and prominent, and all three of his comrades were well-to-do and well known.

CHOLERA IN COMMONS.

A Charwoman Employed in the House Expires from the Plague.

In the House of Commons Friday afternoon, Mr. Fowler, President of the local board, announced that a charwoman who had been employed in the House died under very suspicious circumstances. He was not prepared to say that it was a case of cholera, but a most careful examination was being made of the body. Mr. Fowler's announcement created almost a panic among the members and many of them left the House forthwith. It is learned that the doctor's examination leaves scarcely a doubt that the woman died of Asiatic cholera.

'Frisco Train Robber Confesses.

The leader of the gang that held up the 'Frisco train at Pacific, Mo., on Tuesday night, has confessed. Pennock was arrested on the scene of the robbery, and has since been almost constantly subjected to the "sweater." Under this pressure he is said to have admitted that he led the gang. He implicates three others in the crime. Acting on this information, the police arrested Sam Robinson, a railroad brakeman and friend and companion of Pennock. The police are looking for Muncie Ray, an ex-brakeman, and Jim Pennock's brother, both of whom were seen with Pennock on the day of the raid.

National Banks Resuming Business.

The three national banks at Mankato, Minn., reopened their doors Thursday morning, after having been closed a little over a month. The counters were crowded with business men and others anxious to make deposits. During the first hour and a half the Citizens' National took in $30,000 over the counter, and the First National and Mankato National did quite as well. There were no withdrawals.

CHAPTER V.

THE KANAKA LOVER.

A look of marked aversion mantled the face of Miss Bullet, as the intruder emerged more distinctly from the evening shadows. It was such a look as only a woman can bestow after she is off with an old love and on with a new one.

The new-comer was a Kanaka, as we have said, although only half native. His father had been one of the many runaway sailors domiciled upon the island, but as is often the case with the lower races, the blood of civilization had been assimilated and obliterated by the blood of the savage. Keeri had, in fact, inherited so completely from his mother that it would have been hard to detect any difference of color or form between him and his full-blooded brethren.

He was tall and muscular, with keen, dark eyes, long black hair, a strongly marked nose, a wide mouth and prominent chin, and with a complexion that was brightly tawny, as if his whole person had been subjected to a vigorous polish. Aside from the passions of the moment, which were sufficiently violent, there was nothing rough or repulsive in his aspect, and there was ever a certain dignity in his bearing, and a rare intelligence in his glances.

"O, it's you, eh?" greeted the old sailor's daughter, in a voice of insolent indifference that annoyed her rejected admirer immensely.

"Yes, it's me," was the rejoinder, as Keeri planted himself squarely before her.

"Did I not tell you to keep away from here, that all was over between us, that I wouldn't have anything more to say to you, that I was tired of having you hanging around here eternally?" asked Alma, all in one breath.

"Yes, you said so," assented Keeri, still more doggedly.

"Then why are you here?"

"To have a talk with you—as I have already stated."

"I do not want anything to do with you," declared Alma, looking swiftly around to assure herself that Ralph was not within hearing. "You must go away from here immediately. I told you several weeks ago that it was impossible, and always would remain impossible, for me to marry you in your walk of life, and that it would consequently be as much for your peace of mind as for mine that you should turn your attentions upon some other woman. Did I not tell you this?"

Keeri nodded grimly.

"Well, I said my last say on that occasion," resumed Alma. "My views are just the same now as then—and always will be. You must go away immediately."

It was clear that this repeated injunction fell upon unwilling ears. So far from complying with it, Keeri dropped into an easy attitude upon the old sailor's favorite rustic seat under the flowering vine that shaded the door-way of the cottage.

"Well, that's cool," commented Alma, as she began tearing the nearest flowers to pieces in her impatience. "What great regard you have for my feelings and wishes! It's easy to see what an obliging and gentlemanly companion you would have made if I had been such a fool as to accept your proposal of marriage."

Keeri was not affected at all by this scorn and bitterness, or if so, his countenance only became more adamant.

"I did not, of course, make any allusions to your stove-pipe complexion upon the occasion in question," proceeded Alma, with increased vehemence. "I didn't even hint at the dilapidated state of your treasury. But if you insist on forcing your presence upon me in this way, I shall be compelled to say things to you that will be decidedly unpleasant."

Keeri fumbled in one of his pockets, drew out a pipe and tobacco, and was soon smoking like a furnace.

"Say them," he muttered.

Alma's face reddened instantly. She looked around twice in quick succession; first, to see if her father were visible; secondly, to see if Ralph were still invisible.

"This is too much for human endurance," she then proclaimed angrily. "If you do not go away immediately I will call my father."

"You may call him a long time before he will hear you," rejoined Keeri, with a fresh cloud of smoke, as a mocking smile curled his lips. "He is just now busy with Kulu—particularly busy. I overheard him riding his high horse under Kulu's shed as I came along the road."

"Do you mean that he was quarreling with Kulu?" demanded Alma, her anxieties changing their object, or rather widening.

"Yes, they were quarreling."

"You are not the kind of man to come away without learning what they were quarreling about. What is it?"

Keeri took a still more vigorous pull at his pipe, and jerked his head with an air of mystery toward the interior of the cottage.

"They were quarreling about the very thing that you and I are going to quarrel about," he muttered. "They were quarreling about him!"

The girl started, her looks attesting that she considered the matter serious. She turned and closed the door, and then seated herself upon a rustic bench, opposite that so freely appropriated by her rejected suitor.

"They were talking about Mr. Benning?" she asked slowly.

"They were not only talking about him," communicated Keeri, "but quarreling. Mr. Bullet has heard some rumor in town to-day that does not please him—some rumor as to this Mr. Benning, who he is, how he came here, what he is staying here for, or who his friends are, or what is the secret of all this mystery in which Mr. Benning seems to be living and moving, and having his being."

Keeri talked so fast, now that his tongue was loosened, that it made Alma breathless to listen.

"And it seems that Mr. Bullet blames Kulu for not having kept the secret sufficiently close—whatever the secret may be," said Keeri, continuing to make himself quite at his ease. "But Kulu responded that no word or hint of the real state of affairs had ever passed his lips, from the hour when he first discovered Mr. Benning until now. I must do the dog the justice of saying that he seemed to me to be perfectly sincere and honest in all he was saying. Very naturally I should have been glad to witness the conclusion of the quarrel, but I was in a great hurry to improve your father's absence, and here I am accordingly."

"Well, you can go back as quick as you came," declared Alma, with an anger under which was visible a certain uneasiness. "I will have nothing to do with you! I want no speech with you whatever!"

"Then the proposed talk will be a little one-sided, for I have quite a number of things to say to you, Miss Bullet, and I am here to say them. I won't leave this place until I have unburdened myself, or until I have made an awful row with your Mr. Benning. My decided impression is that you had better hear me!"

The manner of Keeri, no less than his declarations, impressed Alma strongly. She saw that he was in one of those sullen and ugly moods which can be inspired only by a bitter jealousy. Her decision was promptly taken.

"If you can possibly have anything to say to me, after what I have already said to you," she murmured, in a voice of scorn and with a look of defiance, "why, say it, and quickly."

Keeri took his pipe from his mouth, and his air became the attentive air of business.

"When you sent me adrift the other day," he began, "had you ever seen this Mr. Benning?"

The girl's features contracted and she blushed to scarlet. This questioning was visibly and deeply revolting to her. But she controlled her emotions and answered with an outward show of calmness.

"No, I had never seen him. I rejected you because I did not love you; because you were a half-breed; because you are poor; because you have no home to take me to; because your wife must inevitably be a drudge and a nobody, and because I have other and higher views for myself—all good and substantial reasons, if I am not immensely mistaken."

The Kanaka's countenance brightened in the same ratio that one would have expected it to darken. He evidently saw in all this series of declarations only one essential point, namely, that it was not because of the stranger under Bullet's roof that he had been rejected.

"There is no reason why you should abide by your former decision, Alma," he declared, his voice softening, and a look of mingled love and admiration pleading in his eyes. "I have not for a moment accepted it. I love you today better than ever. You are the prettiest and best girl in all these islands. As to the drawbacks you have heretofore refrained from mentioning, I have not been unmindful of them, and have sought and found a remedy for such of them as are important. With my love, I can now offer you a home all ready to move into, and a snug little fortune bequeathed to me by an aunt. I refer to the Creeka place, which is now mine. As to my complexion, that does not prevent me from having both brains and heart. With my changed circumstances I shall be able to move in the best society of the capital, and in that way I shall acquire polish and all the marks of a gentleman. So that I shall become, if not so good a husband as you deserve, at the least as good a husband as the island can afford. Let me hope, therefore, in conclusion, that you will change your mind in my favor and marry me."

This was all said so respectfully and so effectively that Alma could not listen with entire stoniness of heart. She knew well the value of the inheritance which had reached her suitor, and had a sufficient appreciation of the man himself. But an immense gulf now exisited between his ideas and her own, and she did not hesitate an instant to place herself in direct opposition to him.

"You have reached your good fortune too late for it to have any weight in this matter," she declared, in a hard voice and with an icy manner. "I congratulate you, of course, as a friend, upon your improved condition in life, but it can never change my late decision. It is impossible that I should ever marry you."

"And why impossible?" asked Keeri quickly.

"Do not ask me."

"But I will ask you, and I have a right to an answer. Why is it impossible for you to marry me? Mr. Bullet has never seemed very friendly to me, but he will not now refuse——"

"Oh, he will—he does, as I do."

The declaration served as prompt fuel to the flames already raging in Keeri's soul.

"But why should your father object to me?" he demanded, in a hoarse, concentrated voice. "And why do you refuse me?"

"Since you force me to tell," replied Alma, looking him coldly and squarely in the eyes, "it is because I love another."

The shock of this assertion was so terrific that Keeri, old smoker as he was, dropped his pipe for the first time in his life through a mental cause.

"And who is the man you love?" he breathed, in a hoarse whisper, as he leaped to his feet and stood trembling before her in a jealous and despairing rage. "Is he Mr. Benning?"

Either Alma thought she had gone too far to hesitate now, or she was willing to make an end of Keeri's hopes in a breath, for she instantly answered:

"Yes, he's Mr. Benning."

CHAPTER VI.

KEERI RESORTS TO VIOLENCE.

Alma's avowal instantly plunged the Kanaka into a state of mind bordering upon frenzy.

"It is as I supposed, then!" he muttered, as he came nearer, while his eyes gleamed as savagely as a wolf's. "You rejected me because of this stranger?"

Alma made a gesture of disgust.

"No," she declared, with angry emphasis. "Must I tell you a thousand times over how the case stands? I rejected you for the reasons I have given, and at the date of that rejection had never set eyes upon Mr. Benning."

"Then you have fallen in love with this man since that time?"

"Yes, I have—since you are such a fool as to force me to say so many things that must annoy you. I expect to become his wife at an early day, and that day will come all the sooner, because of the annoyances to which you are now subjecting me. So, you now know that I will have nothing to do with you, and the sooner you take yourself off the better."

The realization of the hopelessness of his suit that dawned upon Keeri's mind was such as to drive him to desperation.

"I thank you for your confidence," he muttered, with an icy sneer, "and will answer it in kind. You say that you are going to marry this Mr. Benning, but I am resolved that you shall never, never marry him. I'd sooner kill you both, and myself afterward."

"Hush! What does all this mean?" suddenly broke from the old sailor, as he emerged into view around the corner of his dwelling.

The joy of Alma was so great at this timely interruption that she could not immediately find voice to tell what had happened. But when she did find it, she talked so fast that her father was soon in possession of the facts, as seen from the daughter's standpoint.

"And now, hear me, sir," said the Kanaka, with illy repressed excitement, as soon as he could cast a word into the torrent of explanation and denunciation that flowed from the lips of Alma. "Is it not better that your daughter should marry a man she has always known, and——"

"Hush! You don't know what you are talking about!" interrupted Bullet. "'Familiarity breeds contempt.' A girl should always marry as far away as possible from the paternal mansion, and choose, if possible, a husband with whom she has had no previous acquaintance."

At these declarations the Kanaka looked as blank as if he had received a slap in the face. But his passion was too ardent for him to be easily repulsed and he hurriedly resumed:

"Since I last had the pleasure of seeing you, Mr. Bullet, a remarkable stroke of good fortune has befallen me. My only aunt has died——"

"Silence! This is horrible!" cried Bullet, recoiling in pretended amazement. "What! you are so lost to all sense of shame, so hard-hearted as to rejoice with these untimely jibes over the scarcely closed grave of your unfortunate relative. Out upon you. Why, sir, if you were the husband of my daughter I should expect, at the very first reverse of fortune, to be carted off to the hospital."

Keeri raised both of his hands in a frenzy of vexation.

"I did not mean that I was glad of my aunt's death," he hurriedly protested. "I merely meant to say that having, in her own good time, reached a happy and peaceful end, she has been so good as to leave me all her wealth and assets, including the well-known Creeka premises, so that I am now the possessor of considerable money——"

"Enough! You shock me!" broke in Bullet again. "Am I indeed such a viper that you should suppose me capable of selling my only daughter for money? What is wealth but 'vanity and vexation of the spirit?' The marriages I am in favor of are marrirges of pure affection, and such, sir, I am proud and happy to say, is the marriage upon which my daughter is about to enter. Not a word! There is not the least use, Mr. Keeri, of pestering us with your vain hopes. We shall never, never marry you. And so, hail and farewell!"

He whipped his daughter into the house by a dexterous and significant pressure, and then as dexterously entered himself, closing the door in the very face of the rejected suitor, and as promptly locking it.

"That's an iron well planted," muttered the old harpooner, as he dropped into a chair and rubbed his hands gleefully together, "and I only hope it will hold until after you are married."

For a minute or two the Kanaka stood motionless at the door, as if at a loss what to do with himself, and then he walked moodily away, soon disappearing in the direction in which he resided.

Not Looking for a Ladle.

Not many years ago, before the "boom" struck Southern California, Mr. L——, an old New-Yorker, had a large ranch near Los Angeles. He was fond of good company and a good dinner, and frequently entertained house parties at the comfortable old-fashioned Mexican hacienda. Among others who made a stay with one of the New York parties was Miss M——. Although a woman of "uncertain age," she retained much charm of manner, and her quick wit was respected by every one who had come in contact with it. Mr. L—— was a jolly bachelor of perhaps forty summers, who had seen much of the world and had a magnetic personality. He was a man of enormous proportions; some of them, no doubt, encouraged to their growth through his fondness for good things to eat and good wines to cheer the bachelor.

The party was at dinner at the ranch one day. The host, the bachelor, sat at one end of the table and Miss M—— was on his left. He had been chatting with her for some time when she asked for a spoon. Mr. L—— arose at this and, bowing in his most suave way, said,—

"My dear Miss M——, won't you take me?"

"Mr. L——," retorted the lady, "I did not ask for a ladle."

Persecuted His Barber.

"Hum?" said the irritated barber. "It's easy enough to kick. Didn't I slice all the hair off your face? What more do you expect for fifteen cents?"

"The stubble has been removed," remonstrated the customer, "but with it a large amount of my cuticle."

"Well, what of it?" demanded the barber. "Didn't I dab alum on that gash in your ear?"

"You did," the exacting customer confessed, "but you cut the tip off my nose."

"And I pasted it on with court plaster."

"True enough, but you severed one of my eye-brows and lost it on the floor."

"I kept the razor out of your eye, didn't I?"

"You did."

"And only gashed your neck in four places?"

"Quite right."

"I am afraid you're a kicker. My advice to you is to grow a beard or buy a safety razor, and not come around insulting union barbers. You're one of those fellows that want a dollar's worth of surgery with each shave and then kick because you weren't chloroformed."

Highly Trained.

A Southern man has taught his dog, a water spaniel, to extinguish fire whenever it sees anything burning. To test the little dog, a piece of paper was ignited and dropped on the floor. In an instant the dog jumped upon it and very quietly extinguished it by rubbing it with its paws. The dog was tried with a lighted cigar, with the same result.

Cortez's Jewels.

Cortez obtained in Mexico five emeralds of wonderful size and beauty. One was cut like a rose; another in the shape of a horn; a third in that of a fish, with diamond eyes; fourth like a bell, with a pearl for a clapper; the fifth was a cup, with a foot of gold and four little chains, each ended with a large pearl. He had also two emerald vases, worth 300,000 crowns each.

YOU must always know who said a thing before you can determine just what it means.

GALL OF A STEEL MAN.

WOULD BLUFF THE PEOPLE OUT OF THEIR OWN.

The Manufacturers Are Heard From, but Where Do the Farmers, Laborers and Mechanics Come In?—Facts and Theories—Give Them Rope.

Want No Revision.

One of the manufacturers who applied for a hearing before the Ways and Means Committee when they began their hearings is James W. Swank, manager of the American Iron and Steel Association. He protests against the material reduction of the tax on pig iron and all forms of finished iron and steel in a letter, in which he says:

> If there is no surplus in the Treasury to be reduced; if prices of domestic products are fixed by home competition and not by tariff duties; if they are now lower, as a rule, than they ever have been in our history; if a day's wages of an American workingman will purchase more of the necessaries of life under our present tariff than ever before; if the paternalism that cares for the general welfare is sanctioned by the Constitution and by the exact terms of our first tariff act, what reason or show of reason remains for a revision of the tariff at this time? We know of none. But we do know and the country knows of one overshadowing reason why it should not be revised.

He then refers to the financial and industrial crisis, attributes it in part to "the apprehension of still greater disaster and stagnation which would follow a revision of the tariff," and says:

> Shall this apprehension be justified and intensified by persistence in a policy of tariff revision which rests for support solely upon the discredited theory that the tariff is a tax, and which would encourage the importation of manufactured commodities that can be produced at home?

Such cheek! Such a statement can come only from a man inured by thirty years of protection to bluffing the people out of their own. No revision, because, forsooth, Mr. Swank's friends, the Republicans, looted the treasury, to prevent a reduction of duties and to compel the country to submit to McKinleyism for the rest of this century? No revision, because our constitution may be found to sanction paternalism—by the protected manufacturers, we suppose? No revision, because prices are lower than ever before? No revision, because wages are higher than ever before? No revision, because the theory that the tariff is a tax has been discredited? When, where, by whom? No revision, because the present crisis is due to an apprehension of tariff reduction? Holy smoke! Mr. Swank should appear before a lunacy and not a tariff commission. Much tariff has made him mad.

It is not a question of whether prices are lower now than formerly. It is a question of whether or not they are as low here as abroad. The wage earner is entitled to the lowest prices. He should be permitted to obtain the most possible for his wages. It is not possible to increase wages by placing duties on goods; it is possible to increase the purchasing power of wages by taking duties off the goods. This the Democratic party is pledged to do, and this it will do if it has to make good a considerable deficiency of revenue by taxing the incomes of those who have grown rich by means of protection spoils.

Must the Ways and Means Committee spend its time listening to the ravings of such men as this one? Must its intelligence be insulted by such statements from supremely selfish products of our protective system? Where do the farmers, laborers, and mechanics come in? Will there be before this committee no representation of the 65,000,000 consumers who have been taxed for thirty years to produce these fine specimens of plutocrats and empty-headed autocrats?

Goods and Labor Reservoirs.

The New York Press of Aug. 26 accidentally struck the tariff nail on the head. It said "Water in two reservoirs, connected by an unobstructed pipe, will have the same level in both reservoirs. Labor cost, in two countries trading without tariff obstruction, must be practically the same, and the level to which it will go will be the lower level."

This is true. There being no tariff on labor passing in or out of this country, labor cost is practically the same as in other countries. This was the conclusion reached by both Secretaries of State Blaine and Evarts after receiving reports from numerous foreign Consuls on the subject. We presume they were right. It also looks reasonable that the cost of goods would be practically the same in different countries if trade were not obstructed by tariffs. Unfortunately, however, for the man who sells labor and has to buy goods, there is a heavy tariff on goods coming into this country. This tariff protects manufacturers and sellers of goods then at the expense of the laborers.

There are but two ways of leveling up the goods and the labor reservoirs: (1) Put a tariff on imported labor sufficient to protect labor and to increase the cost of labor to the manufacturer equal to the protection the manufacturer now receives on his goods. This plan would probably not be practicable, because it would not please the rich manufacturers who would insist upon their inalienable right to employ whomsoever they will. It is now morally certain that a tariff upon labor could not obstruct the passage between the European and American reservoirs sufficiently to raise the level of the American reservoir as high as the level in the American goods reservoir. Unless it could and should do so the American laborer would still be at a disadvantage compared with the American manufacturer. (2) Open the pipes between the goods reservoirs as wide as they are between the labor reservoirs of this and other countries. In this way, and in this way only, can the reservoirs be kept at a level as favorable to the poor laborer as to the rich manufacturer.

Beyond the Power of One Nation.

The entire history of this monetary legislation shows that down to the passage of the Bland dollar act, in 1878, Congress, in the exercise of its constitutional power of regulating the "value" of money, constantly aimed to conform the legal ratio of gold and silver to their market relations. But, with all this conscientious care to provide an honest measure of value, bimetallism has utterly failed under every experiment. Gold and silver have refused to keep company as full legal tenders whenever the legal ratio did not harmonize with the market relations of the two metals—and this was nearly all the time. Whatever might be accomplished by international agreement, it is plain enough that no one nation can establish and maintain bimetallism at any ratio so long as supply and demand affect the market relations of gold and silver.—Philadelphia Record.

Give Them Plenty of Rope.

These are happy days for Republican statesmen out of jobs. With but few exceptions they are lending themselves to a scheme to put the wicked Democrats in a hole. They are loudly proclaiming that the present financial panic is the result of the fear of free trade and is not due to currency tinkering. They are increasing the dimensions of the panic by telling the hosts of unemployed, "You voted for a change; and now you have got it, I suppose you are satisfied."

Let these conscienceless Republicans extract all the comfort they can out of these hard times. A day will come, and at no very distant time either, when it will be the turn of the Democrats to laugh; and they will laugh at the better times which will follow the repeal of the Republican silver purchase act and at the folly of the Republicans for trying to hoodwink the people. Republicans have been tried twice and each time found "guilty" of fraud and robbery by the highest tribunal in the country. They are now serving out their terms in exile. It is too late to raise the cry of "Stop thief." It will deceive but few and will not obtain any pardon or respite. They must take their full punishment unless—what now seems probable—they succeed in hanging themselves before their terms expire. Give them plenty of rope!

Prospects for Sugar Tariff.

There has been a good deal said about the sugar duty; and, as in every tariff measure, there are two ways to look at it, from the tariff reform and from the protectionist sides, respectively. As long as so large a proportion of all sugar used in this country was grown outside of it, the sugar tariff might be considered a revenue duty, and thus not to be especially criticised as an essentially protective measure; though the policy of so heavy a taxation—amounting to nearly 100 per cent.—upon what has become the necessary of life, next to the breadstuffs, might be questioned. With the development, however, of our Florida plantations and of the beet sugar industry of the West, there seems to be for the first time some prospect that we may yet produce a large proportion of the sugar we consume. Meanwhile, we admit raw sugar free, we pay a bounty of 2 cents per pound on its equivalent produced here, and we impose a duty of ½ cent per pound on refined sugar—thus giving that much bonus to the American sugar refiner, who gets his raw materials upon the same terms as the foreigner and his labor cheaper per ton of product than any competitor in the world.

I have no special prejudice against trusts. I have never been able to understand the casuistry that defends a man for getting the tariff to put the money into his pocket and then condemns him for taking every precaution to see that the money results do get into these pockets. Indeed, if anyone is fool enough to work for a protective tariff and then consciously lets its proceeds slip through his fingers, he strikes me as an Esau who, having sold his birthright of principle for a mess of greens, is so superfluously foolish as to forget to carry off the pottage. At the same time it seems to me that the sugar trust ought to be made an example of, to the extent at least of depriving it of special privileges, after it has had the effrontery to use them as it has done. To impose a tax of seven-sixteenths of a cent per pound upon raw sugars imported would compel the sugar trust to pay a trifle less extra for its raw materials than the extra bonus secured it by the tariff on refined sugar—the product of refined sugar being somewhat more than seven-eighths of the raw material.

The result, therefore, would be a gain of $15,000,000 a year to our Treasury without the addition of a mill to the cost of sugar to any inhabitant of our country; while the sugar trust would still be enabled, and interested, to control the market of this country as now, but would be confined to the legitimate profits of enterprise and economy. More than this, the bounty now paid by our Government could be reduced by nearly, if not quite, the amount of the duty imposed upon raw sugar and thus, say, one-fifth of the total expenditure for sugar bounties saved without decreasing in the least the effective bonus now secured to the domestic sugar producer.

I am aware of the tremendous opposition that there would be to such a measure. The resources of the sugar trust are practically boundless; and unless this matter is thoroughly agitated, the attempt to get its profits would be more strenuously resented than would the attempt to wipe out every cent of protection, by bounty or otherwise, that any sugar planter receives. If, however, the matter is once understood by our people, I believe that this addition to our revenue, this saving in expenses, this cutting off the sugar trust from extraordinary profits levied upon our people by Government for its benefit, can be enacted into law.—John DeWitt Warner.

The Tribune Is Rattled.

We observe that the Tribune omitted its "tariff cut" this morning, though the editorial disquisition on "Reaping the Whirlwind," which had been prepared to accompany it, was permitted to slip in. Excellent reason for omitting the cut is to be found on the third page of the paper, where the news of the reopening of several large manufactories is chronicled under the following head-lines: "Cheering News for Workmen—Big Mills and Factories in Many Places Resuming Operations." If it was dread of tariff reduction which caused these mills to shut down, why are they resuming while that dread is hanging over them? The editor remarks in his whirlwind article: "When the voters decided to have a change, many employers knew that they must get ready to close their works, or else must take the risk of running them at a loss. The closing of mill gates and factory doors is only the echo of the shouts for Cleveland." This being so, what does the reopening of the same mill gates and factory doors signify? What is that action the echo of? Has the danger of ruin by tariff revision been removed, and if so, when?—New York Evening Post.

Facts and Theories.

Republicans tell us that "the trouble with the finances is due solely to tariff reform," and "nothing can restore prosperity except a proclamation on the part of the President, and his party that attack will not be made upon the tariff system." Such being the case, the appointment of a radical tariff reformer, like William L. Wilson, to the Chairmanship of the Ways and Means Committee, with the declaration that he will proceed at once to draft a bill in accordance with the Chicago platform, should immediately close up what mills still remain open. Strange to say on the very day on which Wilson's appointment was announced we began to read of "clearing skies," and "prospects brightening," and the lists of "mills reopening" soon became longer than of "mills closing." The week following this terrifying announcement was the best one in two months. It showed fewer failures and a more prosperous condition of business. How can Republicans fit these facts to their theories?

Former Hard Times.

(Laporte Argus.)

It is rather amusing to hear some men who ought to know better, if they do not, talk about the present hard times being the worst they ever saw, and even some men of assumed financial ability and learning are found who talk in that way for some reason best known to themselves. During the great panic of 1873 and the depression that lasted until 1878 there was no gold or silver in circulation and all paper money was at a big discount. The New York banks only had about $5,000,000 in their vaults and they now have about $100,000,000, a large part of which is gold, and gold coin is in free circulation in all parts of the country. There is simply a money stringency in the fear that the operation of the Sherman law will create trouble and bring everything down to a silver basis. Hence people who have money will not loan it till they see what is going to be done. They don't want to loan on a gold basis and be obliged to take their pay on a silver basis, and hence, they will not loan at all. This has locked up enormous sums of money and checked or stopped the wheels of many kinds of business, but in the very nature of things this state of affairs cannot last long, and any establishment that is running on an honest basis will not be likely to have various serious trouble. There is plenty of money in the country and it is good money. During the panic of the '70's nearly all thd factories of the country were shut down for years, riots were frequent in the factory districts, and in many instances labor-saving machinery was burned in the fields because it was popularly supposed to be the cause of hard times among laboring men. Railroad strikes of gigantic proportions were of frequent occurrence. Who that lived in that time does not remember the great Pittsburg riots, the Buffalo railroad strike, and the great railroad strike at Indianapolis. Hundreds of people were killed in such affairs, and there is no comparison to be made between the conditions then and now.

THE COST OF FARMING.

An Estimate of What It Costs to Raise Wheat and Corn.

(Laporte Argus.)

The following estimate of the cost of raising grain in LaPorte county is in reply to an inquiry made by the government, and it will be found interesting to our readers:

In computing the cost of producing wheat and corn in this county I have consulted with other farmers and made light allowances for variation of soil and methods of farming.

Our farms are worth $80 to $100 an acre. There are no tenant farmers that pay a money rent. It takes two seasons to produce a crop of wheat. If the rental value is equal to six per cent per annum on the value of the land, the the rental value per acre for wheat would be $9.60 to $12, but as some farmerss get a crop of oats before the wheat is put in, or pasture, both before the wheat is put in and after it is taken off, it occurs to me that $6 an acre would be a fair average rental of land per acre to charge against the wheat crop.

Commercial fertilizers are not used. It is the general practice to convert the straw into barn yard manure and to put it upon the land so as to maintain the fertility of the soil. The wheat straw has value, but I think it is offset by the cost of making it into manure and hauling and spreading upon the land.

In estimating the cost of the different operations, I have included the value and depreciation of tools and implements, except the threshers and threshing. I have included the amount paid for the machine and board of all hands, and the value of the labor of men and teams in bringing the wheat from the shocks to the machine, and in carrying the wheat to the granary, and on the basis of an average yield of 18 bushels to the acre.

WHEAT.	PER ACRE.
Rental value of land	$6 00
Manure (offset by straw)	0 00
Preparing ground (plowing, harrowing, etc)	2 00
Seed, 1¼ bu. clean wheat @ 75 cts	94
Drilling in seed	35
Harvesting, including twine and shocking	1 88
Threshing, machine and board $1.08. All other cost $1 66	2 74
Housing, use of granary and insurance 1 cent per bu	18
Marketing 3 cts. per bu	54
Cost per acre	$14 63

Cost per bushel when yeield is 18 bushels to the acre, 81¼ cents.

The average yield in this county this year will not exceed 13 bushels per acre, and it cost to produce and market that quantity according to the above estimate $15.13 per acre, or $1.08 7-10 per bushel.

CORN.	PER ACRE
Rental value of land	$4 00
Manure (offset by fodder)	0 00
Preparing ground for planting	1 50
Planting and seed	40
Cultivating 5 times	1 80
Shucking and putting in crib	1 25
Marketing, 5 cts. bu	1 50
Cost per acre	$10 45

The average yield in this county is 30 bushels per acre, and the cost per bushel on the above estimate is 34 8 10 cents.

But this year owing to the great drouth, the average yield will not exceed ten bushels per acre and the cost is likely to be, on the above basis, 86 1-5 cents per bushel.

Respectfully,
E. H. Scott.

His success in the treatment of piles can be amply attested by hundreds whom he cured during his former visits. I can cure any case of piles, no matter of how long standing, or how hopeless the case may be. The patient suffers no pain or inconvenience. In most cases one treatment is sufficient, which takes only a few minutes, and the time required for a cure is about two weeks, during which time the patient is not inconvenienced from business. 20tf

Nearly every daily paper we pick up now-a-days has an account of a fresh railroad horror—wrecks all over the country, and usually accompanied with great loss of life, seems like an epidemic.

South Carolina's new liquor law is proving a better thing than it did at first. Since people have come to understand it, and see how it works, it is proving a good thing. There is much less drunkenness, especially among the negroes, for they were in general hard drinkers, and now they obey the law better than any other class. They save their wages and buy food for their families, and their wives are loud in their praises of the new arrangement.

"Silver is downed," is one of the big headlines used by a thoughtless free silver paper. It means by this the repeal of the Sherman law. But don't they know that the Sherman law stopped the coinage of silver, and that little or no silver in dollars has been coined for over two years. But to them "silver is downed" when we repeal the law that downed silver. If they will only be patient it is likely we will soon have a silver law that will produce silver dollars.

The Indianapolis Sentinel offered a costly sword as a present to the most popular department commander at the great encampment last week. It was decided by cutting out a coupon printed in the Sentinel, writing a name on it and sending to the Sentinel office. It was found at the close of the contest that Rev. Myron W. Reed, department commander of Colorado, had received the most votes. He preached in Indianapolis for several years and was very popular there. Hence his large vote.

We copy an article on hard times, taken from the Laporte Argus. It calls up many facts in regard to other panics, that many had forgotten. While we cannot agree with the writer, that the Sherman Law is the one great and overshadowing cause of the present stringency, it has had its share of influence. It was a bad and very foolish and unbusiness-like law, but there are many other causes—some of them we have called attention to—that have had as much effect in bringing on the present crisis as the Sherman Act. Let us all study these questions, and good may come of it.

Last week the House of Lords voted on the Home Rule bill and defeated it 419 to 41. It was hard work to get the dear fellows together at this season of the year, when there in so much hunting and racing to see to. But the vote shows that nearly three-fourths were present. It is likely that if Gladstone lives he will soon see that his bill passes the Commons again, and then, of course, the Lords will again defeat it. Then, if he is able to work with his usual vigor, he may appeal to the people and have new members elected to the House of Commons. Then, if the people show themselves plainly for the Home Rule plan, the Lords may conclude to obey the force of public opinion and let the bill pass. The greatest number ever got together before was 375.

Tax Levy For State Purposes.

Auditor of State Henderson has announced the following as the tax levy for state purposes for 1893: General fund for the state treasury, 10 cents on the $100; benevolent institution fund, 5 cents on the $100; school revenue for tuition fund, 13½ cents on the $100; state debt sinking fund, 3 cents on the $100; permanent endowment fund of Indiana university, 12½ cents on the $100. In addition to this is included the usual levy of 50 cents on each taxable poll for state purposes, and 50 cents on each taxable poll for the school revenue for tuition fund.

Ligonier Banner: The laborers on the railroad in this locality had an object lesson on the money question last Monday that fully illustrates the falsity of the republican cry against silver dollars. The gold that they received from the railroad would not buy a cent's worth more at any store in the city than the much talked about and villified silver. It also illustrated how false the cry is that gold is scarce or at a premium as the railroad company would not pay in the yellow metal if it was hard to get or more expensive that silver or paper.

From Sea to Sea.

"It is a far cry to Inverary" is an old Scottish saying. It may have seemed like a great distance to them, in that little, pent-up country that comprises the narrow end of that not very large island between the North Sea and the Atlantic Ocean. It was probably quite a trip for them to go from the waters of Solway to Bewick, and their "rough riders" would have consumed several days and used up a horse or two in making the trip. What would they think of such a trip extending across our great continent, a distance of 3,252 miles? In other words a horseback ride from San Francisco to New York, using the same horse all the way, and not stopping a day. This is what is being done, however.

Last Thursday forenoon, an intelligent looking man, in somewhat unusual dress came into this office, and introduced himself as one of the gentlemen making this long ride. He was booted and spurred, and though well dressed, presented a rather picturesque appearance. Polished and gentlemanly, there was nothing of the cowboy about him, if by that term we mean the style of cowboy that most of us have met in the west. This gentleman, Mr. Wm. J. Hanley, treasurer of Harrigan's Theater, New York City, and Mr. John A. Dee, instructor in Durland's Riding Academy, in the same city, were making this 3,000 mile trip on a wager. They started from San Francisco June 1, and the conditions were that they must reach New York not later than Sept. 30. Another condition was that they would ride Kentucky horses, using English saddles—or saddles similar to those used about here, and in states eastward as distinguished from western or Mexican and Spanish saddles. Each man was to have but one horse, and he must ride that one horse the entire distance. They had maps of the several states, and in each case, had their route laid out some distance ahead, by means of pencil lines, also showing the towns where they were to stop over night. For example, Tuesday night they were at Goshen, Wednesday night, at this place: Thursday night at Defiance, Ohio; then on through Bowling Green, Fremont, Sandusky, Cleveland and Warren and then across the north part of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and into New York by way of Jersey City. The wager is with Mr. Durland, and the well known Ed. Stokes. The distance from here to the end of their journey is about 800 miles, so that they have less than an average of forty miles a day to make themselves safe. Those who saw their horses here, say they were fine animals and in good condition, and there is no reason why they should not win easily. The riders had rubber coats and a good outfit generally, as well as plenty of money, and they asked for and paid for the best accomodations for themselves and their horses. They put up at the Swineford House, and had their horses given the best attention at the Palace Livery stable. At about 10 a. m., they started out to the sound of a bugle, of which each had one, going east over Ninth street bridge, when they turned onto the Newville road, intending to dine at Hicksville and reach Defiance that night. They say the trip has been a pleasant one, as the weather has been favorable, and the roads good. It was a little tiresome, the first few days, but now it had settled down to an ordinary business matter. The horses had suffered but little, showing only one or two saddle galls, very trifling affairs when we consider the long distance each had carried his man. We hope to hear they reached the end of their long ride in ample time to win.

It will hardly do to close this little chapter, without a brief allusion, to the interest caused by their sudden and unexpected appearance in town. Two ladies, Mrs. Harter and Mrs. Davis, were sitting on the veranda of the former's residence on North Jackson street, while several lads were playing under the electric light at that corner. Suddenly from the west came the sound of galloping hoofs,—a bright, lively galloping, such as we seldom hear in this part of the country, where one seldom sees a horse ridden. Nearer came the inspiriting sounds, and turning their eyes that way, the ladies were surprised to see two jaunty, well dressed horsemen, with splendid mounts, come suddenly out of the darkness and stop near the lads playing under the light. The strong light showed the fine forms of the horses, and the unusual dress of the riders, their high boots and bright spurs attracted notice. At once, visions of wild west riders rose up before them, the capture of towns and trains, and even the white cap raids that have been so distressingly common in the south end of our state. They were re-assured, when one of the men asked the way to the Swineford House, for it was evident then, that they were simply strangers, who by coming into town in the night and over the wagon road had found themselves on a back street, with no indication ahead, as to the place they wished to reach. They were directed to go ahead to Main street but as they crossed it in the residence part, they did not evidently recognize it and soon came back for better directions. They reached the hotel, and after seeing their horses cared for, quietly retired for the night. Next morning, they rose rather late, but were in good time for the day's journey, as were also the horses which stamped impatiently while waiting to be off. It appears the gentlemen did not court much publicity, although they did not particularly avoid it. They talked quietly to Mine Host, Mr. Ilger, and expressed to him, as Mr. Hanley did in this office, that Uncle Sam's domain was a vast one, and very wide, and if anyone doubted the extent of our great country, let him ride across it.

Express Train Robbed.

Monday night, or rather about one o'clock Tuesday morning, the east bound express on the Lake Shore road was held up and the express car robbed, at Kessler's siding about three miles west of Kendallville. It had a good deal of money in the express car, including one large safe that is locked at Chicago and carried to New York, and no one on the train can open it—only the parties to whom it is sent know the combination. It was this safe that was broken open. The train was all right when it passed Brimfield, and the engineer had no orders to stop, but as he approached Kessler's side track he saw that the switch was turned for him to go on the side track as the red light side of the switch lantern was towards him. Not knowing what the trouble was he slowed up his train. He leaned out of the cab and called to know what was the matter, when a shot was fired hitting him along the back. He fell back into the cab and remained there till the affair was over. The shot wakened part of the passengers, who put their heads out of windows, but more shots made them get inside and they staid there. Two messengers were in the express car. As soon as the train stopped, there was loud pounding on their car door. They opened it to see what was wanted when a rifle shot came in, just missing one, and blinding them by the flash. They slid the door shut again. Then came blows of a sledge hammer, then a short pause, and a dynamite bomb shattered the door. A second bomb blew the door to pieces and the messengers were stunned and found themselves under heaps of express matter, with rifles held to their heads. They had no keys to the through safe, so the robbers drilled it open, handed the money to a man outside, and all ran to the woods. The train was stopped a little over one hour. There were about a dozen robbers. Some boxes of gold lay in the car, but other things were piled on them, and they were not discovered. Strange to say, no train happened to come along, though this train met a westbound passenger at Kendallville. The robbers got a big sum, but no one knows how much. Parties are hunting for them in all directions, yet they may escape.

The Epworth League will give a penny social at the home of John Weaver, Wednesday evening, Sept. 20. Mite, 11 cents, and part will be refunded. Something entirely new. Be sure to attend and enjoy yourself.

Attorney T. M. Eels of Albion, who is a veteran, had entered the lists for a foot race at Indianapolis at the encampment last week, but was kept at home by an injured ankle. About 250 had entered in this race, a third being from this state.

"Playing ball on the business streets is a d—d nuisance," said Kiblinger last Saturday, and those who passed through the crowd and dodged the flying chunk of rawhide were inclined to agree with him. Let us practice a little further from business.

Window shades, lace curtains, baby carriages, toilet sets, dinner sets, carpets and everything you can think of in the line of furniture, can always be found at the Foster Furniture Co., Fort Wayne, LaFayette and Terre Haute, Indiana, and Jackson, Michigan.

The Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan Homeopathic Medical Association meets this year at Ligonier in the parlors of the Mier House, Oct. 3. Dr. W. E. Newton is the local chairman. Prominent physicians and surgeons are expected and valuable papers will be read.

A man in Noble county found a bee tree recently, and for some reason climbed up the tree about sixty feet, from which point he fell to the ground, and was killed instantly. We can't see what he expected to do with the bees or the honey sixty feet from the ground. He could have secured both by cutting the tree down, if it stood on his own land.

We were greatly pleased Saturday to hear a friendly greeting in the cheery tones of our friend Sol. Fisher, of Waterloo. Sol. has become a full fledged farmer, and we have no doubt is doing as well as hard times will permit. At all events he gets enough to pay the printer, which he did that day in grand shape. Always glad to see our old neighbors, anyway.

Trustee R. S. S. Reed will move back onto his farm north of town next week, and make that his home again. From that time on his office days will be Thursdays at home, and on Saturdays at Hebel's store in Auburn. Those who have business with him will do well to make a note of this change. Mr. and Mrs. Reed have made many friends during their stay in town, but they are still not out of the neighborhood.

Mrs. Jennie Dickinson reports from their neighborhood that Mrs. Belle Hensinger has a nice 9-pound baby girl. The youthful Hensinger made her debut on the world's wide stage last Tuesday morning, and to all appearances likes the situation pretty well as far as she has got and doubtless if proper inducements are laid before her will stay some time with Freeman, who smiles benignantly on all now and sets up the cigars all around, and was heard humming

"Oh, 'tis nice to be a father, father,
When the swallows homeward fly."

The Albion Democrat, says that "Auburn should build a decent court house." But we understand these things better at this end of the line. We need a new school house much more than we do a new court house, and we are building one. The court house does us very well. We have also made many costly and valuable improvements, over our county, and got into debt thereby. Our court house will do awhile for we are not proud. When our debts are paid and our other improvements are finished, it will be in order to talk up a new court house.

Dell Points, the man who was in jail for assaulting Thompson near Butler some time ago, has broken jail and skipped. He had been locked in a room by himself, as a safeguard for his recent attempts to saw the bars and get out, some of the files having been found in his possession. But Sunday night he managed to squeeze out through the hole in which food is passed into his room. It is about 6 by 12 inches and no one would believe a man of 145 pounds could get through it. But he is gone and no one will be the worse if he stays away, for he was a tough one.

Enormous stocks of goods cannot be kept in small towns. To the selection of carpets and furniture, people want, and ought to have, the opportunity of making their purchases from large stocks of goods, made up of the choicest and newest styles the market affords. The widely known house of the D. N. Foster Furniture and Carpet Co., of Fort Wayne, carries the largest stock of furniture and carpets of any firm in the state. They deliver goods free to this place, provided your purchase amounts to $10 and upwards.

A hearty welcome should be extended to the famous Dr. Wan-Ke-Maugh, the Indian Doctor, who will be at the Hotel Swineford Thursday, Sept. 28, where he will be prepared to heal the sick. The Doctor has become the most popular and successful specialist in the state, through curing cases given up by others. He can locate diseases and tell how one feels without asking questions, and one who can do this can cure, as he never treats the wrong disease. Another reason he is more successful than others is that he only uses the roots, barks, herbs, etc. placed in the ground by an all-wise Providence for the benefit of suffering humanity. Terms, $3 to $5 per month.

Death of Mrs. McNagny.

The sad news was receieved here Sunday morning of the untimely death of Mrs. McNagny on Saturday at her home in Columbia City. She had been sick but two or three weeks and when it was found that her condition was dangerous, Mr. McNagny was summoned home from Washington and remained with her to the last. Her disease was some severe form of bowel trouble that physicians found it impossible to check. The funeral was on Monday and was one of the saddest ever seen in Columbia City, for she was a woman who had endeared herself to all by her high character and womanly virtues. Her husband has the sympathy of all in this sad hour of his sorrow.

Mrs. McNagny is well known in this place, she being a sister of Mrs. Theo. Reed, who resided here some years ago, when her husband was connected with the COURIER. Her maiden name was Effie Wunderlich, and she left many warm friends here, who are made sad by her untimely death.

IT seems a little curious that with all the cry about hard times and the starving masses it is almost impossible for city people to obtain a good servant in the kitchen for less than exorbitant wages, and farmers are complaining that they cannot find men to work for them for love or money. If they are starving, why not work at whatever comes to them? If they are in a position where they can afford to lie idle, why cry about short rations? The two things don't fit, some way.

BETTER late than never is a maxim in which the Columbian Roller Chair Company has at last seen wisdom, and a sweeping reduction in rates has been the result. Under the new tariff persons of moderate means can afford to patronize the "gospel chariots" and a marked increase in the business of the chair company is sure to result. The reduction ranges from 33 to 50 per cent. Trip tickets have also been placed on sale, and the whole plan indicates that the company means to recover, as far as possible, the losses sustained by the excessive charges in the past. Under the new order of things visitors to the Fair will find it alike pleasant and profitable to use the chairs, instead of wearing themselves out by making the tour of the buildings on foot. The change comes late, but is none the less gratifying, and its wisdom is already apparent.

EUROPEAN correspondents, who used to be capable of making a war cloud out of every fog, have learned by experience to become conservative. Not even the extreme tension of the situation in Siam led to a declaration of war among them, or even to a suspension of diplomatic relations. There was a great deal of speculation and a pointing out of the tremendous possibilities in the case, but the correspondents did not venture into the probabilities. Even Mr. Blowitz, who is supposed to know more than any one else of the innermost intentions of financiers and Kings, came near being "scooped" when the French minister at Bangkok called for his passports and his umbrella. The European correspondents are less unreliable but also less interesting than they once were.

THIS eternal question, whether the "United States are," or the "United States is," has come up again, and Boston papers are taking a hand in the discussion. In a letter to the Transcript the other day, Charles Dudley Warner wrote: "The United States of America is a nation, and that is its name. If I were speaking of it as a nation, I should say is—no matter about the grammar. Speaking otherwise, I might say: 'The United States are distinguished by great variety of production.' I should then be thinking of the several States, rather than of the political nation." But, on the other hand, in a letter to the Journal, Mr. S. C. B. Tillinghast, of Medford, has the following patriotic communication: "Concerning 'the United States is' and 'the United States are' the late Jefferson Davis held that the latter is the only correct form. It cost the rebellion to demonstrate that the United States is. The whole doctrine of State rights is in 'the United States are.' Let us insist that our children be taught that 'the United States is.'"

THE New York Sun has been making a study of the debts of the various States, and finds that in the last ten years there has been a total decrease of $10,000,000, the forty-four States owing collectively $224,000,000, upon which they are paying $10,000,000 a year in interest. Ten States, Massachusetts, Indiana, Minnesota, New Jersey, Virginia, Maryland, Georgia, North Carolina, Florida and South Carolina, have increased their indebtedness. Seven States, Vermont, Iowa, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Oregon and Montana, are out of debt. The other twenty-seven States have reduced their debts during the ten-year period. Ten years ago five States had more than $20,000,000 each, in outstanding obligations, as follows: Virginia, $29,000,000; Tennessee, $27,000,000; Louisiana, $23,000,000; Massachusetts, $20,000,000, and Pennsylvania, $20,000,000. The debts of these five States now stand as follows: Virginia, $31,000,000; Tennessee, $10,000,000; Louisiana, $11,000,000; Massachusetts, $28,000,000; and Pennsylvania, $11,000,000. The outcome in general shows that good financiering is the rule in the majority of States.

SAYS the Chicago Herald: Among the list of nuisances with which down-town Chicago is cursed the otherwise amiable bicycle enthusiast is assuming a prominent place. Not satisfied with the freedom of the boulevards, where the wheeling is superb and where he will be in no one's way, this person has taken to spinning along through the business district where the crowds are thickest. An exasperating feature of the down-town bicycler is his whistle. Approaching a thronged crossing he sounds a shrill note, and without slackening speed dashes onward, expecting people to get out of the way. This whistling business is going to get the lordly wheelman into trouble one of these days. Chicagoans have long ago resigned the right of way in their own streets to cable cars, cabs, and other deadly vehicles, but when it comes to being whistled aside like refractory curs by a spindle-shanked person bestriding a bicycle the public rebels. A good stout cane thrust between the spokes of a wheel has a repressing effect on the autocratic bicycler, and it is to be hoped that this method will be adopted unless the nuisance is abated. Only a fragment of our boasted liberties remains and we can't afford to surrender the last shred at the behest of any long-legged, stoop-shouldered victim of Kiphoris bicyclistanum, even if it is the World's Fair year.

Avenged by His Pets.

Meinrad, a famous Swiss saint, who flourished in the ninth century, led a hermit's life in a cell in Einsiedeln, where he was often visited for advice and help. The companions of his solitude were two tame ravens, to which he was much attached. In the year 861 the saint was murdered in his cell by some men inspired by greed of gold, which they supposed the poor man to possess. After the foul deed they fled toward Zurich, whither they were followed by the two ravens. There certain pilgrims identified the birds, and inquiries having been made at once, the murderers were arrested and punished. The saint's cell remained untenanted for nearly fifty years, but was rebuilt of stone about a century afterward, and some two hundred years later the great convent of Einsiedeln, still the richest and most frequented in Switzerland, arose on the spot where the lonely preacher was slain.

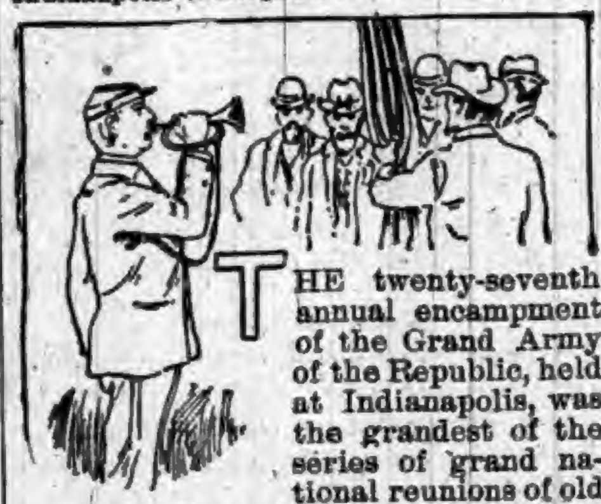
BRAVE BOYS IN BLUE.

ENCAMPMENT OF THE G. A. R. AT INDIANAPOLIS.

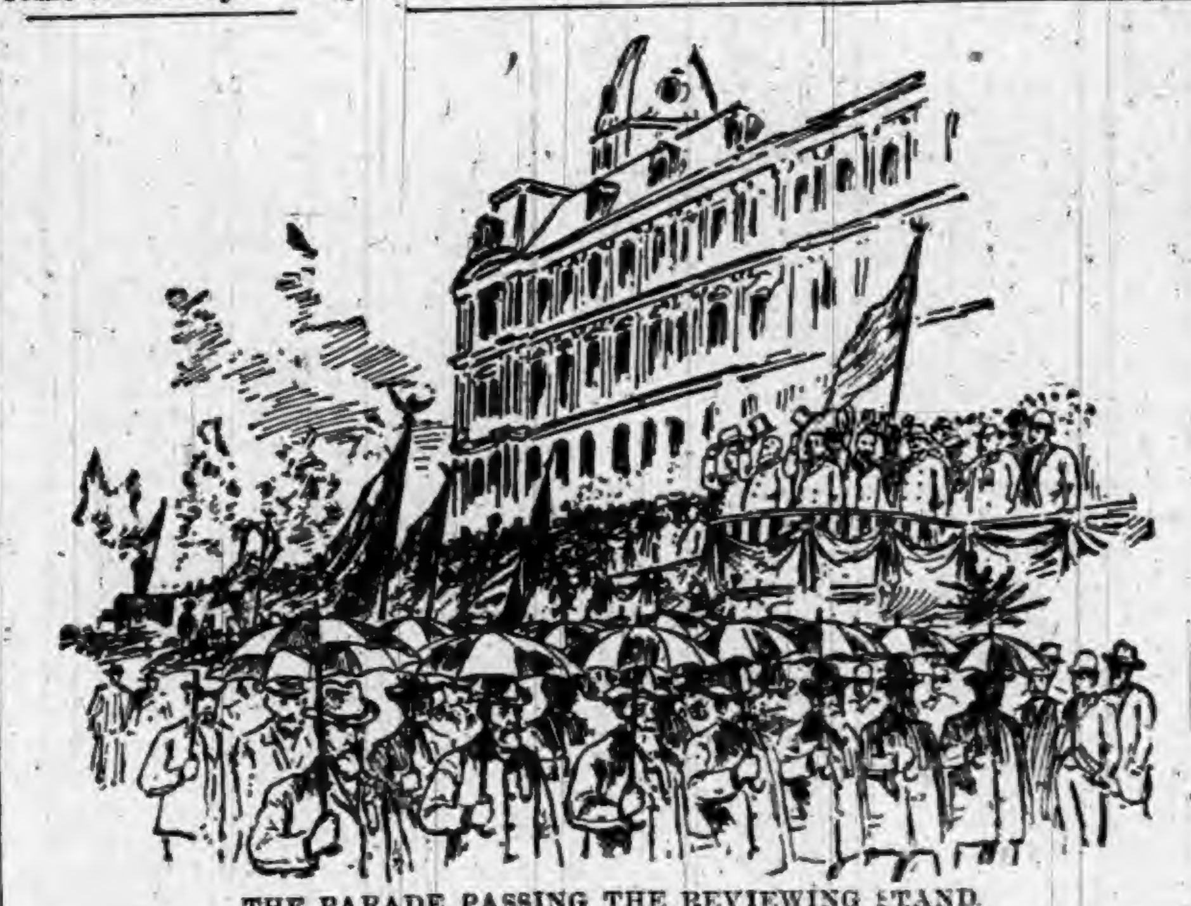
The Old Veterans Entertained in Royal Style at the Hoosier Capital—A Week of Reunions and Parades—Number in Attendance, Etc.

Twenty-seventh Annual Meet.

Indianapolis correspondence:

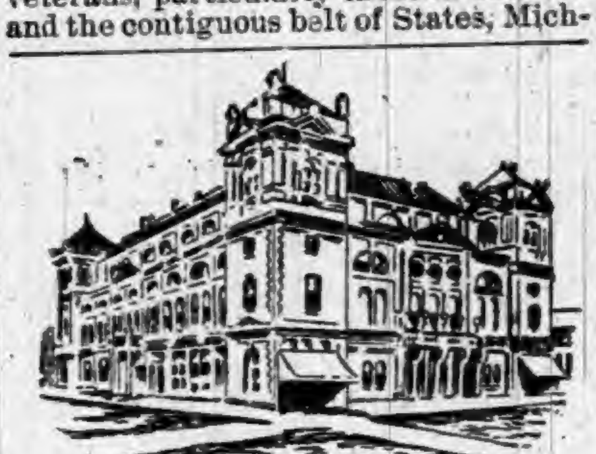


THE twenty-seventh annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, held at Indianapolis, was the grandest of the series of grand national reunions of old soldiers. It was in Decatur, Ill., on April 6, 1866, that Dr. Stephenson formed the first post of the G. A. R., and for the third time since the birth of the order the Hoosier capital has opened wide its arms in hospitable welcome to the boys who wore the blue.



THE PARADE PASSING THE REVIEWING STAND.

Many causes contributed to the success of the gathering this year, among them the untiring energy and marvelous capacity of the Indianapolis managers, of whom a group is here pictured, the enthusiasm of the Western veterans, particularly those of Indiana and the contiguous belt of States, Michigan on the north, Ohio on the east, and Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska on the west, and the associated attraction of the World's Fair. The West is noted as the land of big things, and it is not behind in the size of its Grand Army following. The fraternity originated in the West, and the West started out in the lead in point of influence and has kept its end more than level. At the first encampment in Indianapolis in 1866 the West naturally had a majority of the delegates, but at the second encampment in Philadelphia it also took the lead. Indiana, Illinois and Ohio alone sent one-half the delegates. A Western veteran, John A. Logan, of Illinois, was commander-in-chief and held the office two terms.

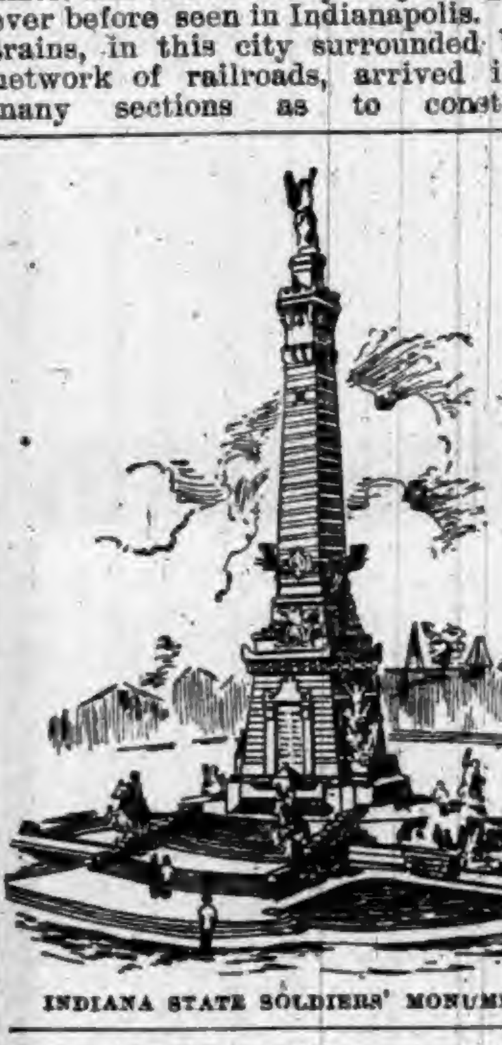


TOMLINSON HALL.

The arrangements for entertaining and caring for the thousands present had been committed to a Citizens' Committee of 3,000 persons, including prominent men from other cities and towns. The head of this large body, which was divided into numerous subcommittees, was Colonel Eli Lilly, President of the Commercial Club, in which the scheme for securing the encampment was worked out. There was a large Executive Committee, of which Colonel Lilly was Chairman; D. P. Erwin, Vice Chairman; William Fortune, Executive Director; Allan Hendricks, Secretary; and State Treasurer Albert Gall, Treasurer. The names of such wellk-nown men as Gov. Matthews, ex-Governor Chase, Mayor Thomas Sullivan, and General Lew Wallace also appeared on this committee.

Gathering of the Veterans.

For several days previous to the formal opening of the week's programme the veterans gathered from every part of the Union. Great cities, small towns, little hamlets, and solitary farmhouses sent their quotas, greater or smaller, and the result was an attendance that no man could closely estimate, and one certainly surpassing any ever before seen in Indianapolis. The trains, in this city surrounded by a network of railroads, arrived in so many sections as to constitute an intricate problem in railroad management, and every train was laden with comrades and their wives and sons and daughters. Besides, there were thousands of sightseers not in any way connected with the Grand Army. The old soldiers were accompanied by their wives and children to an extent, it is said, never noticed at any previous national encampment. The spectacle presented as the veterans arrived and marched up Illinois street and around the monument in the circle, and this seemed to be the favorite tactics of nearly all the arrivals, was novel even to those who had attended encampments on former occasions. All of these people were taken care of as they arrived by the members of the Reception Committee or their corps of numerous assistants.



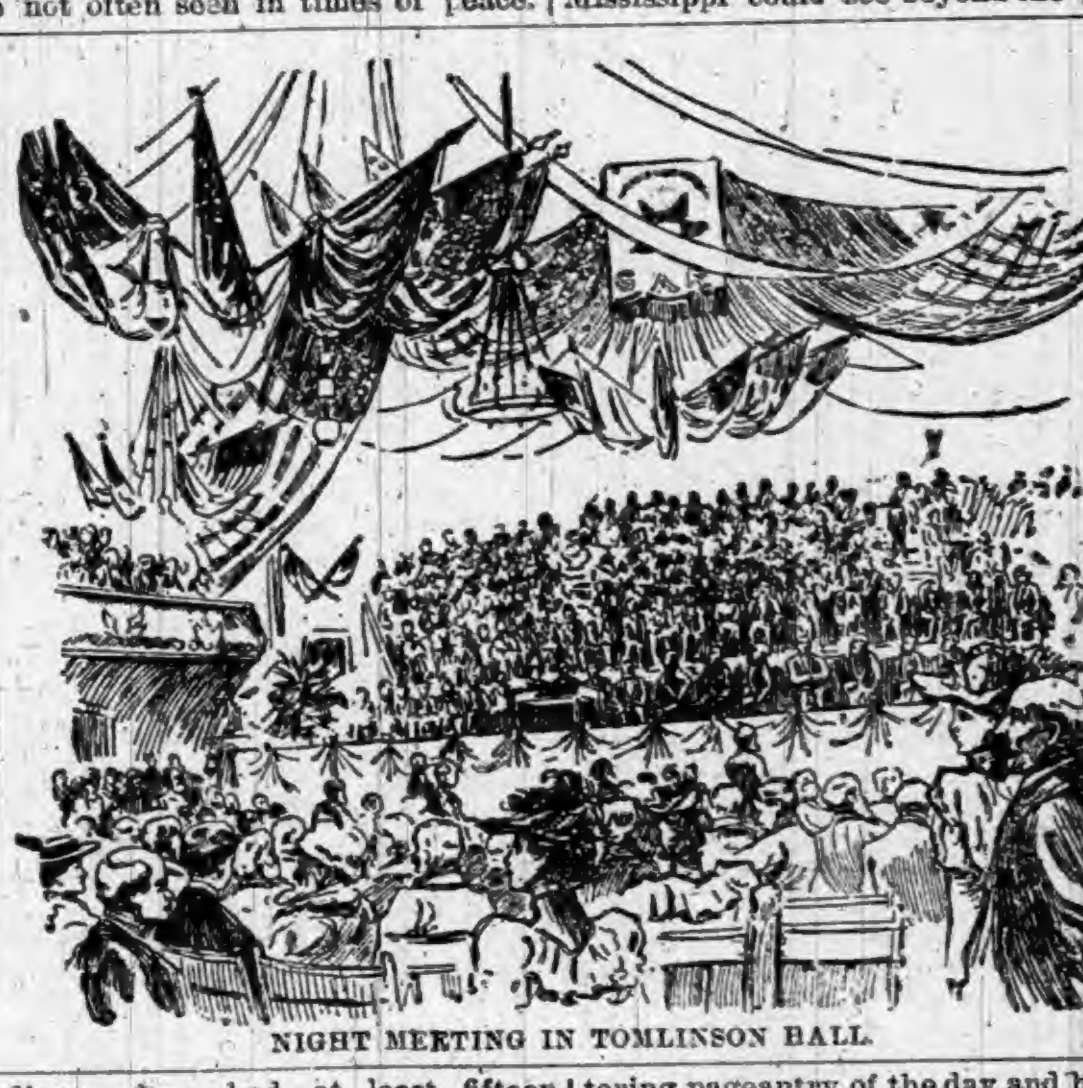
INDIANA STATE SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

The programme for the week's doings began Monday. Most of the day was taken up by the arrival of veterans and other visitors. In the evening a grand reception was given to the national and department officers and delegates at Tomlinson Hall. The hall will accommodate 3,200 people and there were thousands unable to gain admission. A chorus of 300 voices and an orchestra of forty pieces rendered music appropriate to the occasion. Gen. Harrison delivered the address of welcome and Commander-in-chief Weissert made response.

To the National Association of Naval Veterans was accorded the honor of inaugurating the business features of the week, and the hall of the Masonic Temple was comfortably filled with gray-haired salts when, at ten o'clock Monday, the eighth annual convention was called to order by Rear Admiral B. S. Osborn, of New York. Rear Admiral Osborn was chosen to succeed himself by a vote of 33 to 27 over Francis B. Allen, of Hartford, Conn., the present Commodore. This convention was a close to their events which began the previous Friday.

The Great Parade.

The grand parade took place on Tuesday, and lasted from ten o'clock a. m. until six o'clock in the evening. It is estimated that there were about 25,000 men in line, the number falling short of expectations on account of the delay of trains in bringing the veterans into the city. From noon until five o'clock the trains brought in thousands of the old soldiers, too late, however, for them to take part in the review. Furthermore, half those that were here seemed to prefer watching the others march. There were not enough men in several of the State delegations to fill the time allotted them. For two hours the parade moved in broken columns, but after Indiana swung into line with her 15,000 veterans there was no break and the multitude was given a view of the finest demonstration ever made by a single State at the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. The Chief Marshal was Gen. James R. Carnahan, Chief of the Uniformed Rank, K. of P., of the world, and himself a veteran of rank. In addition to the main reviewing stand occupied by Commander Weissert, the line of march passed stands erected for disabled veterans, for a chorus of school children, who sang patriotic songs, and for thousands who willingly paid $1.50 each for seats. A feature of the parade surpassing all previous ones was the number of horses in line. Decorations of the most elaborate kind marked the line of march, and the whole spectacle was one not often seen in times of peace.



NIGHT MEETING IN TOMLINSON HALL.

Indiana alone had at least fifteen thousand old soldiers in line in addition to the militia of the State, and these survivors of 154 war regiments, while passing in review before Commander-in-chief Weissert and an array of distinguished guests, reformed the old ranks and unfurled the battered battle flags they carried on the field.

The parade ignored the splendid shaft erected in Circle Park in memory of soldiers and sailors. This was premeditated on the part of the veterans. For a year or more there has been a controversy between the Grand Army of the Republic and the monument commission as to whether there should be placed on the monument dates calling to mind the Mexican war. The Grand Army of the Republic opposed the placing of the dates. The commission had its way about the matter and the Grand Army of the Republic decided that the veterans should not be allowed to pass the monument while marching in the parade.

Tuesday night was devoted, in a spectacular way, to the fireworks display, at which the heavens were made brilliant for two hours with fire and color in elaborate designs in a field accessible by street cars and 160 acres in size. Tuesday was also the night of the reception by the Woman's Relief Corps at Tomlinson Hall. Refreshments were served, and speeches were made by Gen. Harrison and others.

The first regular meeting of the delegates to the encampment occurred Wednesday morning in Tomlinson Hall. While the delegates were transacting business, those not delegates met in army corps and brigade reunions. All corps headquarters were pitched in tents in the Court House yard. Military Park was reserved for regimental headquarters, and the official headquarters occupied the large and airy rooms in the State House. Wednesday night was the occasion of private hospitality and sociability. A large number of citizens entertained visiting comrades on that night at their homes, and there were receptions to the veterans from every State and Territory.

The War Pageant.

Thursday and Friday were also days of reunions of regimental, corps and brigade associations, and halls and tents had been arranged in which 154 of these could be held in one day. Thursday night the war pageant, by the citizens of Indianapolis, closed the list of entertainments. Besides continental and civil war soldiers on horseback, fifteen beautifully illuminated pictures of stirring war scenes mounted on floats and manned by veterans and their sons were shown. Figures represented by 150 men, fourteen ladies and six children were selected for the portrayal of the various pictures. A feature of the parade was a Grand Army badge of immense size and constructed of flowers in the form of a cannon, shot and other war emblems. Friday was also devoted to excursions to the near by cities in the gas belt.

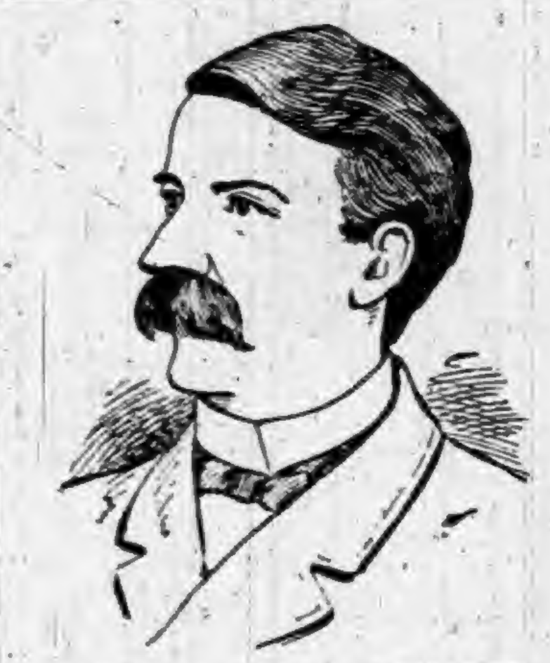
INDIANAPOLIS EXECUTIVE BOARD.

A full-size model of the old war ship Kearsarge was open to visitors on the Capitol grounds, and it was here the naval veterans made their headquarters. A unique sight was an elaborate display of natural gas, with which the city is supplied from fields twenty-five miles away. During the nights of the encampment Indianapolis was illuminated in brilliant style. Nearly 6,000 incandescent electric lights had been placed in various parts of the city, forming different devices and figures. The soldiers' monument and the Commercial Building were especially gorgeous in their illuminations. The monument, which towers in the air nearly 300 feet, was literally shrouded in its 3,000 electric lights, while from the landing at the foot of the crowning figure powerful search lights sent their blinding rays out over the city. From the top to the bottom of the monument hung festoons of red, white and blue, Old Glory standing out in brilliant effect just above the pedestal.



COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF WEISSERT.

The veterans of all the armies when they stood in Monument Circle before the grand but silent memorial set up by genius and art to glorify the 26,000 heroes whose graves stretch from the Atlantic shores to the banks of the Mississippi could see beyond the glittering pageantry of the day and hearken to other sounds than the plaudits of the hour. They remembered how the Indianians stood in the unconquerable ranks of Shiloh, how they faced the guns at Perryville and fought on undismayed at Stone River. They breathed again the smoke of Missionary Ridge and Chickamauga, braved the fiery heights of Fredericksburg and Gettysburg and thought how Indianians earned the glory which the Grand Army holds up for all the world to look at and applaud.

Women as Shoeblacks.

A custom is rapidly gaining ground in France, and especially in Toulon and certain other towns, which, it may safely be prophesied, will not find much imitation in this country. This is the employment of women as street shoeblacks.

The French women shoeblacks are most coquettishly gotten up; and as to their caps and frills have somewhat the appearance of hospital nurses, and it is surprising that though their occupation is a tolerably dirty one, they always seem clean and tidy; some of them are doing the polishing in gauntlet gloves.

In the towns in which they are employed they certainly are a success pecuniarily, especially where English and American visitors, who generally seem to treat the whole affair as a good joke, are numerous.

It is said that one reason for the occupation being a popular one among women in a certain grade in life is that many of the fair polishers have married opulent customers who have been impressed by their shining qualities.

The Paper Wedding.

The paper wedding, which may be observed on the second anniversary of one's marriage, can now be made a very charming fete. At one not long ago the bride and guests wore dresses and flowers of paper, the house was decorated with marvelous paper flowers, and the plates and napkins were of paper. The guests were requested to come without gifts, but if one will it otherwise so many beautiful things can be fashioned out of a little crepe paper that it is no grevious tax on one's friends. Lamp shades, articles for the dressing table and table spreads are pretty gifts. Choice photographs, etchings, books, and a subscription for a magazine would give a more enduring pleasure at no very great outlay.—Philadelphia Times.

The Bell.

Nothing that the phonograph does is more wonderful than its rendition of the sound of a bell. Although the Westminster bells were probably the first to have their tones recorded in Great Britain, the experiment has been tried here. The writer of this paragraph assisted in what was the first introduction of the phonograph to a big bell. The instrument was taken into the tower, and just as the great bell tolled twelve the cylinder was set going. The wonderful fidelity with which the swiftly revolving cylinder reproduced the slow and measured tones of the big bell was little short of marvellous.

Caught in the Toils

Of that lurking foe, chills and fever, we often struggle vainly to free ourselves from its clutch. Palliatives there are without number, but if you want a real remedy, as of course you do if afflicted with this abominable malady, hasten to procure and persistently use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. If you follow this suggestion, permanent restoration to health will reward you. Every form of malarial disease is permanently eradicated by the Bitters, which is likewise a reliable safeguard against maladies of this type. Not alone on this continent, but throughout the tropics, it is justly regarded as a complete antidote to miasma poison in air and water. No less effective is it for disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, rheumatism, kidney complaints and nervousness. No one sojourning in a malarious region, or who is subjected to outdoor exposure in rough weather, or to excessive mental or physical strain, should be without this fine defensive tonic.

Nature's Lace Work.

In the cultivation of ferns there are a few cardinal rules to be observed, writes Nancy Mann Waddle in the Ladies' Home Journal. Almost all ferns, with few exceptions, love shade and moisture; the sunshine may wither the fronds and the plant never again recover its tone. In potting, the pots should be filled a quarter of the way up with broken pieces of crock, then filled with sand, leaf-mould, a little loam and charcoal. They thrive best in an open soil. Never water the fronds of the gold and silver variety; in fact, it spoils the appearance of some ferns for their fronds to be sprayed.

Justice of the Peace, George Wilkinson, of Lowville, Murray Co., Minn., makes a deposition concerning a severe cold. Listen to it. SOLDIERS OF CHRIST.

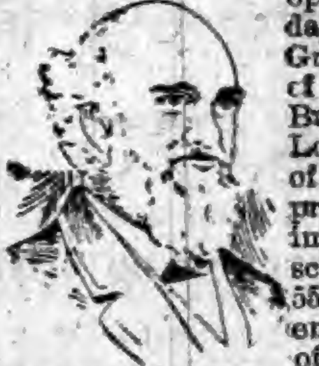
GATHERING OF SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS AT ST. LOUIS.

Delegates Attend from All Parts of the World—Two Million Sunday Schools Represented—Distinguished Men Who Took Part—Will Meet in Boston.

Army of the Lord.



PRESIDENT MILLER.

The seventh International Sunday-school Convention of the United States and the British provinces in America opened its four-days' session in the Grand Music Hall of the Exposition Building at St. Louis, with upward of 1,000 delegates present, representing 130,197 Sunday-schools, with 1,372,558 teachers and an enrolled attendance of 10,870,104 scholars. The second World's Sunday-school Convention which followed this four days' session, represented 2,000,000 Sunday-schools and 18,000,000 scholars. The beautiful hall was decorated tastefully for the occasion. The stage had been extended over the orchestra pit for the additional accommodation of the speakers and distinguished guests of the convention. A large globe thirty feet in diameter, over the stage, was indicative of the universality of the Sunday-school work.

The number of delegates from each of the States and Territories was equal to four times the representation of both houses of Congress, or four delegates for each 150,000 of the population, with a corresponding number from the provinces and territories of Canada and Newfoundland. The number from foreign lands was not limited, but membership is restricted to such as bear credentials from national and international Sunday-school organizations. Mr. Edward Towers, of London, marshaled the foreign delegates, and the Rev. B. F. Jacobs, of Chicago, had charge of America's representatives.

ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION BUILDING.

The most distinguished men in the world's Sabbath work participated in this gathering. Our own country had a distinguished list of participants from every State. New York's delegates were headed by Dr. W. A. Duncan, of Syracuse; Pennsylvania sent J. R. Caldwell, of New Hamburg. The Rev. G. W. Smith, of Denver; William H. Hall, of Connecticut; Timothy Nicholson, of Indiana; the Hon. T. B. Sweet, of Topeka; the Rev. George R. Bird, of Nevada, and the Rev. J. H. Babbitt, of Vermont, are a few of the other well-known Sunday-school workers.

The subjects of international lessons, organization in the church, Christian literature and home influence were among those discussed. Representatives from Paris spoke in the interest of the McAll mission. Signor Charanti represented Italy, with numerous colleagues. Egypt and Palestine, Japan, China and Asia were also represented. The resolutions as adopted indorse training schools for teachers, favor the home department plan of bible instruction, urge more extended use of the bible as a text-book in Sunday schools, plead for wider co-operation of denominations, denounce the liquor traffic and plead for its abolition, and release the committee from all restrictions upon its work except that the action of the Pittsburg convention of 1890 upon temperance shall remain in force.

BISHOP VINCENT.

REV. DR. MASTERS.

Boston was chosen as the place of meeting of the convention in 1896. By voluntary contribution $5,000 was raised toward the indebtedness on the model Sunday-school building at the World's Fair.

GLADSTONE'S TRIUMPH.

Ireland's Cry for Justice Has at Last Been Heard.

The English House of Commons has listened to Ireland's cry for justice. Gladstone's splendid campaign against deep-rooted conservatism and ancient prejudice has ended in magnificent victory. The Irish home rule bill was adopted by the Commons by a vote of 301 to 267. The measure was hurried to the House of Lords, which gave it the first reading and adjourned.

The Home Rule movement is about twenty-one years old. It began to take form early in the '70's, when patriotic Irishmen realized that Fenianism could do their beloved country no good. The father of the Home Rule movement was Dr. Isaac Butt. He died in 1878. Before his death a new leader had arisen in the Home Rule party, Charles Stewart Parnell, who had been elected to Parliament as member for Meath in 1874. Parnell's methods were far different from those of Dr. Butt. He was essentially aggressive. English statesmen who looked at Ireland's grievances without without prejudice joined the Irish party in the Commons in calling for Ireland's relief.

WM. E. GLADSTONE.

When Gladstone pronounced in favor of home rule, the world instinctively felt that the success of home rule was assured. It is needless here to recall the vicissitudes of the home rule movement during the past five years. They are fresh in the public mind. The probability is that the bill which has passed the Commons will be defeated in the Lords at the present session, and that this Parliament will be dissolved, and a new Parliament elected in which the Liberal strength will be greater than before. In the face of repeated demands of the English people, says a correspondent, the peers will pass the bill. If the House of Lords should make stubborn and continued resistance, so much the worse for the House of Lords.

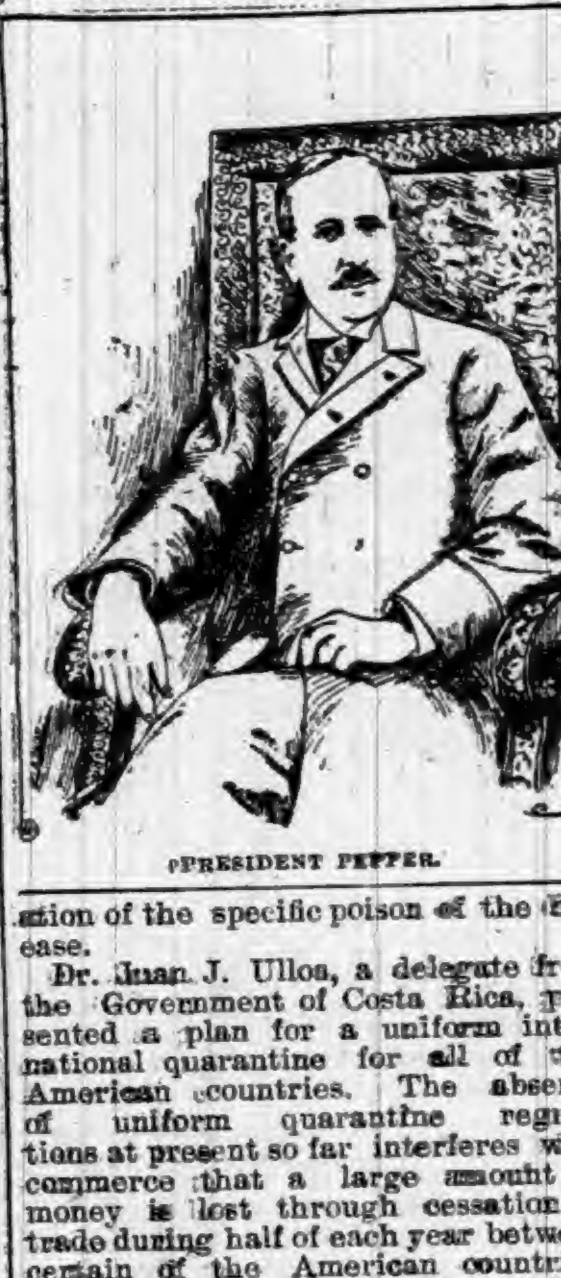
MEETING OF MEDICAL MEN.

North and South American Doctors in Convention at Washington.

SECRETARY REED.

The Pan American Medical Congress, held in Washington, brought together the greatest gathering of medical men this country has ever known. The congress was formally opened by President Cleveland and continued during the next three days. The President of the congress was Dr. William Pepper, Provost and Professor of Medicine at the Pennsylvania University, while the founder of the congress and its Secretary General was Dr. Charles A. Reed, Dean and Professor at the Cincinnati College of Medicine. The delegates assembled upon the invitation, first moved by Dr. Reed of the American Medical Association, seconded by an invitation from the President of the United States authorized by joint resolution of congress. All of the countries except Chili and the Argentine Republic were represented.

The congress was divided into twenty-two sections, each dealing with a particular department of medical science. Two sections of extreme interest were those on hygiene and on quarantine. Dr. Conegys, of Cincinnati, brought forward the proposition that, in view of the paramount importance of public health, there ought to be a Secretary of Public Health in the Cabinet of the Presidents of the different republics. This idea was enthusiastically supported by many of the delegates and was indorsed by vote. Quite a sensation was produced by Dr. Wolfred, of New York, who charged the United States of Colombia with propagating the great epidemics of the western hemisphere. His argument was based on the fact that those who die of yellow fever and other epidemics are permitted by the authorities at the Isthmus of Panama to decompose under circumstances that permit of the propagation and perpetuation of the specific poison of the disease.



PRESIDENT PEPPER.

Dr. Juan J. Ulloa, a delegate from the Government of Costa Rica, presented a plan for a uniform international quarantine for all of the American countries. The absence of uniform quarantine regulations at present so far interferes with commerce that a large amount of money is lost through cessation of trade during half of each year between certain of the American countries. The plan of Dr. Ulloa was received with much favor, and with some amendments was recommended to the various governments for adoption. There were interesting displays of cholera germs, but they were all caged on microscopical slides, and there were also exhibited yellow fever, dengue, and other germs that excited great interest.

There were in all about five hundred essays read before the congress, which was attended by about three thousand delegates. On final adjournment the South American visitors were taken on a free excursion to New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Niagra Falls, Detroit, St. Louis, and the World's Fair at Chicago.

GOLD ARRIVES IN NEW YORK.

$4,000,000 from San Francisco and $6,000,000 from Europe.

A sight to inspire confidence in the ability of the Government to pay its obligations was witnessed on the streets of New York recently. Three express wagons heavily loaded arrived at the United States sub-treasury. On each wagon sat men with loaded shot guns across their knees. In the three wagons were 100 coarse wooden boxes, fastened with bands of iron and big screws. Each box weighed 159½ pounds and contained $40,000 in gold coin, making a total of $4,000,000. This consignment of gold had been sent from the San Francisco mint a week before. A large crowd watched the unloading of the gold at the sub-treasury building. There was also received at the different banks from Europe gold amounting to $6,000,000, which had been brought by the steamships Campania, La Bourgone and New York.

JOEL BARNHARDT, in attempting to save the life of his 9-year-old daughter, at Peru, Ind., by jumping with her from a buggy when his horses were running away, was seriously injured and the child was instantly killed by striking against the iron girders of a bridge.

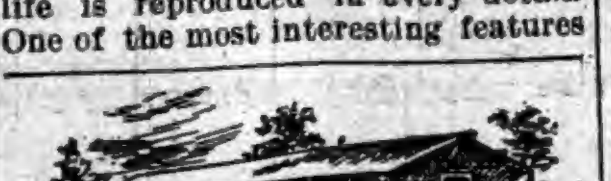
AN IROQUOIS VILLAGE.

An Interesting Exhibit of Indian Life at the World's Fair.

Part of the ethnological exhibit at the World's Fair and one on which peculiar pains have been bestowed is the Iroquois village. Here is a faithful representation of the life of the Six Nations, a confederacy of the tribes of New York State which showed the Indian at his best. Descendants of the great Indians of the past are there and bearers of names which are now historical. Indian life is reproduced in every detail. One of the most interesting features of the village is a reproduction of the famous "long house," a picture of which is herewith given, which was used as a meeting place for the chiefs of the confederacy, and where their deliberations were held. It was located in the lands of the Onondagas, near the present site of Syracuse. The separate wigwams and the stockades are also copies of similar structures when the aborigines ruled what is now the populous Empire State. The canoes which are drawn upon the bank of the pond or which may be occasionally seen spurting through the lagoon, propelled by an Indian in paint and feathers, are also faithful reproductions of the ancient dugouts. One of the really unique features of the exhibit is the performance of religious rites, games, dances, music, festivals and other ceremonial observances.



COUNCIL OR LONG HOUSE OF THE SIX NATIONS.

MARRIED, BUT MONEYLESS.

A Young Man in a Sad Plight Upon His Wedding Night.

Sergeant Egbert Conkling was scratching hieroglyphics on the blotter at the Cedar street station late the other night when a sprucely dressed youth sauntered in, says the Brooklyn Eagle. He was arrayed in a stylish cut suit of light gray, an immaculate shirt, a lofty collar and a four-in-hand tie of astounding pattern. On his head was a straw hat, excessively wide of brim. On his feet were russet shoes, highly polished.

"Sergeant," he began, "I want a night's lodging."

The sergeant was staggered, for the youth seemed perfectly sober.

"I got married to-day," the young man explained, "and the ceremony took all the money I had. My landlady turned me out of my apartments this afternoon. My wife's waiting outside now, but she will go to a friend's house as soon as I am disposed of. Say, can you put me up for the night?"

Sergeant Conkling tendered the unfortunate bridegroom the use of a cell, the only accommodation offered by the station. The offer was declined and the young man left without giving his name. When he reached the pavement the sergeant heard wafting through the screen door something which sounded like: "Oh! Charles, isn't it too bad? Ain't you sorry now?

Frozen Air.

The recent experiments in France in measuring the temperature of the higher regions of the atmosphere by means of balloons furnished with automatic recording instruments have suggested the question whether the air continues to be "air," in the sense in which we understand it, at a very great elevation from the earth. The diminution of temperature is so rapid as to indicate that in inter-stellar space it must sink at least as low as 450 degrees or 500 degrees Fahrenheit below zero, and perhaps much lower.

But at far less extreme degree of cold than these, oxygen and nitrogen, the principal constituents of air, have been experimentally liquefied and solidified. What then is the condition of the air at heights where the temperature is so low?

M. de Fouvielle answers that the air there "loses its gaseous condition and becomes changed into a series of minute crystals or drops which follow the earth in its motion through space, and are constantly vaporized when falling in regions where the temperature is somewhat above their point of liquefaction or evaporation."

What an astonishing thing, in its effects, is temperature. On the earth iron is a solid, in the sun it is a vapor; temperature makes the difference.

At the equator water is always a liquid, in the polar regions much of it is continually a solid—difference of temperature again.

The air we live in is gaseous at and near the surface of the globe, but if M. de Fouvielle is right, at an elevation of a few miles above the ground air is either liquid or solid, or both. And once again variation of temperature plays the chief part in producing differences of condition.

Great Is Chicago.

Can nothing of public moment be done in this town without reference first being had to a more or less stupid, dilatory, obfuscatory and chuckle-headed committee? The question of track elevation slumbers in the bosom of a council committee; the demolition of the Spectatorium—which task, by the way, has not yet been begun—had to be referred to another committee before anyone dared to think about it; and now the Chicago River is festering and putrefying because a committee of "experts" is figuring on the capacity of the new pumps. This committee expects to make a report "in a few days." Meantime the pumps are idle, awaiting the verdict of the experts, and the slime and filth in the river are sending forth such an odor that street-car conductors and drivers wear clothes-pins on their noses, and horses have to be muzzled before they will cross the bridges. It is about time for a real man to arise in these parts—a man who can think for himself without calling in a conclave of solemn donkeys to do his thinking for him. Such a man, if he can get into the city hall, may proclaim himself emperor of Cook County and maintain himself on the throne with the enthusiastic approval of the entire populace.—Chicago Herald.

"ENGLISH" USED FOR "BRITISH."

The Scotch Claim Equal Share in Great Britain's Glory.

The New York Daily American reproduces this article from Circular of Scottish Home Rule Union:

"Too great a tendency to self-esteem, too little disposition to regard the feelings, the habits, and the ideas of others" is essentially an English characteristic; an absolute disregard of the national sentiment of smaller nationalities is a part of their nature, and conciliation is not one of the arts for which Englishmen are famed. It is to these causes, and an ignorance of historical facts that this custom against which we protest has sprung up. We have no idea of relinquishing that which is our own, nor any idea of demanding a repeal of the union. On the contrary, our demand resolves itself into this, that the spirit of the treaty should be observed. We have therefore no intention of submitting to domineering pretensions which have not a shadow of a foundation to rest upon.

Scotland's claim to the honorable fulfillment by England of these treaty obligations becomes the stronger when Scotland's share in the work of the United Kingdom is considered. Who built up the British Empire? What was its condition at the time of the union? Save a few islands in the West Indies and the plantations in North America, which were afterward lost through criminal folly, there were few possessions. The rise of the Empire dates from the union. Our Highland regiments, which have fought so valiantly in every part of the world, did so to maintain the honor, not of England, but of the United Kingdom. Go where you may and you will find Scotchmen occupying foremost places and doing more than their proportionate share in adding to the dignity and lustre of the British name. Why, then, insult Scotland by speaking of Britain as England, ignoring Scotland and what she has done? No difficulty is experienced in using the proper names in all diplomatic correspondence. Why not in all references common to both? In all matters affecting the British Empire we acknowledge but one interest—and in regard to loyalty, we owe none to England, and never did. Our loyalty is due solely to the British Crown and the British Government.

Lately politician had the audacity to declare that Scottish nationality had ceased to exist. To declare that Scottish nationality had ceased to exist or is a mere dream without an object is to deny history and to fly in the face of fact. We possess and cherish glorious historical traditions unsurpassed by any nation on the face of this earth. We are bound together by a name with which are associated the stirring memories of a thousand years. For centuries the Scottish people maintained their individuality against powerful invasions from without and the efforts of kingcraft within, and they have retained that individuality after living for nearly two hundred years under the same government with another nation seven times as numerous and in spite of the influences of an absent court and legislature. Scotsmen are willing to unite with the other nationalities in constituting a larger nationality under the British name, but no more willing to be called English than the English would consent to be called Irish.

We further protest against another usurpation in being robbed of the fame of great names and the memory of brave deeds. Great Scotsmen—great in politics, in science, or in letters—are often classed as Englishmen. The leader of Her Majesty's Opposition (Mr. Gladstone) we are told is the greatest Englishman who ever lived. The leader of the House of Commons (Mr. Balfour) is the noblest Englishman of the present day. Instances innumerable might be multiplied. Scotsmen they are in the first place, Britons afterward—but Englishman never. The noble achievements of our Scottish regiments are often chronicled as the brave deeds of Englishmen done to maintain England's honor. What is England's honor to them but a name and nothing more? It is the stirring memories of unconquered ancestors that inspires them "to do the deed of deathless fame" which honor the British name.

The attempt to merge Scotland in England, which is repugnant to all the facts and associations of Scotland's past history, violates a solemn treaty and robs Scotsmen of a birthright of inestimable value. Every public man so acting, we declare stands self-convicted of a deliberate wrong. The union neither did nor could denationalize us.

Two Industries.

"Where is your husband this morning?" asked the mowing machine agent.

The farmer's wife wiped the dishwater from her hands, smoothed back her hair, and replied:

"Well, he got down the old shotgun this morning early and loaded her with buck and started out; but I don't know for certain whether he has gone a-white-cappin' or to meet a green-goods man."—The Indianapolis Journal.

Potato Talk.

This curious phrase used to be applied to the household gossip that was supposed to be indulged in at "five o'clock" teas in Germany. Ladies were wont to take their work to a friend's house, and enjoyed a little chit-chat over the tea and cake about their domestic affairs generally and cooking in particular. It must have been a stern and unsympathetic man who sneered at this conversation as "potato talk."

The tail of a once savage shark graces the bowsprit of the good ship Glenesslen, which arrived here after a five months, run from the distant Phillippine Islands. The shark was a famous man-eater which lay in the warm waters of New Anjier in wait for any unfortunate sailor who might fall into the sea and thus appease his voracious appetite. A big hook with a ham as a tender bait soon settled his fate and he was dragged on board where a sturdy sailor sent a sharp knife through him and cut off his tail as a trophy.—Philadelphia Record.

A Horse Story.

The Arab, a barbarian in our opinion, has the greatest contempt for the way in which Christians, as they call Europeans, treat and train horses. "Look at our horses and look at yours," say the horse-dealers of the desert. "What we do in a single day in distance you take five or six days to accomplish. Grand marches you Christians make with your horses! As far as from my nose to my ear."

A very amusing story is told of a learned man, Abou-Obeida, who was a contemporary of Mamoun, the son of the famous Haroun-al Raschid. Like other Arabians, he had written numerous volumes upon the qualities, colors, and virtues of the horse. One day, at the court of Mamoun, the grand vizier asked a celebrated Arab poet who was present how many books he had written upon the horse.

"Only one," replied the poet.

Then the vizier put the same question to Abou-Obeida.

"Fifty," was the answer.

"Rise, then," said the vizier. "Go up to that horse in his stall; repeat the name of every part of his frame, taking care to point out the position of each."

"I am not a veterinary surgeon, sir," answered Abou-Obeida.

"Rise, and do the same," said the vizier to the poet.

The poet rose from his seat, took the animal by the forelock and named each part as he placed his hand on it to indicate its position. At the same time he recited all the poetical allusions and the sayings and proverbs of the Arabs referring to it.

When he had finished, the vizier said to him: "Take the horse; he is yours."—Harper's Young People.

The Trolley.

A Rochester man has devised a plan by which a trolley street car can be stopped almost instantaneously, or within a space of three feet, while the car is going at full speed. His device is operated by a lever in the motorman's cab. It is, generally speaking, a steel shoe, upon which the rear wheels of the car ride, the under side of which is corrugated so as to produce great friction upon the rails of the track. On the top of the shoe is an arrangement which, as soon as the wheel rises upon the shoe, clamps the outer rim of the wheel and at the same time grasps the inner edge of the rail. The simple weight of the car crowds down the shoe upon the rail and at the same time clamps together, as in a vise, the rail; and all this by a single movement on the part of the motorman.

Combination of Colors.

In combining colors green appears as the all-important factor, as it is the one color that goes with everything, writes Emma M. Hooper in a helpful article on "The New Colors and Materials" in the Ladies' Home Journal. Green and brown, tan, black, gray, purple and even blue will be seen, but when undertaking combinations remember there are shades and shades, and where a yellowish green may jar, a grayish green may harmonize admirably. The new old rose shades will go with brown, gray, green, black, and purple.

Brilliant Whitewash.

To a half-bushel of best lime slacked in hot water add eight quarts of salt dissolved in hot water, two and a half pounds of ground rice, boiled to a thin paste, stirred in boiling hot, also one pound of clean glue dissolved in hot water, and half a pound of fine whiting, with hot water enough to make the whitewash spread properly with a brush. Let it lie for a day or two and then apply hot.

A Wise Resolution.

It was the solemn and deliberate resolution of a great and good man who has long been in the other world, "Resolved, that I will endeavor, in all things, so to live, as I shall wish I had done ten thousand ages hence." What a dignity does such a lofty and noble aim give to every-day life! What a safeguard against every form of temptation! What an impulse to all that is exalted and excellent in character and duty; and what a sure foundation for hopes and expectations that can never disappoint us whether in time or eternity.

An Accommodating Pawnshop in Rome.

The Monta di Pieta at Rome, which has existed ever since 1585, is probably the most lenient pawnbroker's shop in the world. Any person who brings a pledge may borrow from $15 to $25 without paying any interest, but all that is lent above that sum is paid for at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum. At the end of two years, if the pledge is not redeemed nor interest on the money paid, it is sold and the overplus of the debt laid by for the owner, who has it in his power to demand it within 100 years.—Yankee Blade.

Electrically-Welded Steel Barrels.

It is reported that a large industry is being built up at Barrow, England, in the production of steel barrels for the conveyance of petroleum. The barrels are made in halves by means of compression in a mold, when hot. Afterward they are welded together by means of electricity. The barrels are intended for use by the large oil-carrying companies engaged in the oil trade in the east, where the temperature has a great effect on wood casks and results in so much leakage.

DON'T TOUCH IT.

Among the many schemes that outside parties—sharpers usually—try to work on township trustees, we have been furnished this, which will be seen is in substance, a request to trustees to use the money in their hands to speculate in wheat, etc., in Chicago. It is a dangerous scheme, and no doubt some thoughtless trustee will get bit. We publish the letters received by Mr. Crooks, of Wilmington, but of course the others have received similar ones.

CHICAGO, May 2, 1893.

H. J. CROOKS, Butler, Ind:

Dear Sir:—As you will see from the enclosed circular, we are engaged in the grain and provision commission business on the Chicago Board of Trade, and we are desirous of securing some influential man to represent us in your part of the state.

Your position as township trustee assures us that you would be a desirable person for that position. Should you be willing to accept our proposition, you will find it profitable, and your duties will not interfere with your daily vocation.

We do not feel like making you any offer just now, but as you will doubtless be in Chicago during the World's Fair, we invite you to call on us, as we believe that business relations mutually pleasant and profitable will be the result. We trust that you will favor us with an early reply.

Your truly,
BATTEN, MORSE & Co.

The following is the circular spoken of in the letter.

CHICAGO, May 1, 1893.

GENTLEMEN:—As members of the Chicago Board of Trade, we take pleasure in soliciting your patronage, either for consignments of grain, or to execute orders for you on margins for future delivery.

The smallest investment that can be made on margins is 1,000 bushels in wheat, 5,000 bushels in corn and oats, 250 barrels of pork and 250 tierces of lard.

We make no investment for any one with a less margin than one cent per bushel on wheat, corn and oats, and one dollar per barrel on pork.

Should you wish to invest, forward the money to BATTEN, MORSE & Co.,
101 Rialto Building, Chicago.

Then, as Mr. Crooks did not notice their letter or circular, they write again, this time more urgently, claiming they "have met a friend" of his, etc.

CHICAGO, May 17, 1893.

H. J. CROOKS, Butler, Ind.

DEAR SIR:—Since writing you on the 2d inst., it has been our good fortune to meet an acquaintance of yours. We improved the opportunity by asking a few questions concerning your standing, etc. We are now doubly convinced that you are eminently fitted for the position we have in view. As a personal interview will be absolutely necessary to the consummation of our contemplated arrangement, we will agree to pay your railroad fare to Chicago and return, i. e., if you act for us in the capacity referred to in our previous letter.

For reference as to our standing you may write to the Globe Savings Bank of this city, of which the Governor of Illinois is Vice-President.

We had hoped to have received an answer to our last letter, but as we omitted to inclose stamped envelope, we probably ought not to have expected it. We have now remedied this omission, and from what we kow of you, we rest assured that your inbred sense of politeness will impel you to at least answer our communication, even if you do not think it advisable to act upon the same. Trusting that this time we will not have long to wait for a reply, we are,

Yours very truly,
BATTEN, MORSE & Co.
Per Batten.

We are glad to note that trustees are finding out these little schemes, or rather these big pieces of rascality, and have concluded not to trust them. They will find it safest to steer clear of spending any money that is not absolutely necessary.

Since writing the above we have received a marked copy of the Lagrange Democrat, calling attention to the same matter, and admitting that several trustees of that county had been approached in the same way by these parties, and nearly caught in a scheme to buy a lot of maps their people did not need. And some actually bought them. As was said at the start, "Don't touch any of these schemes."

The regular west bound afternoon train had twelve coaches. This gives an idea of the amount of travel over this road.

"I dreamed that Garrett won a game, I wonder if dreams come true." We can't say that dreams always come true, but they did on last Thursday, when the Defiance Foxes came to Garrett to play the Stars. The Foxes are a ball team (?) composed of boys and men, mostly men, while the Stars are a lot of little boys of this place whose ages run from 12 to 17 years. The Foxes were not in it at all. They couldn't touch Hardy Roan's balls, and when the game was finished the score stood 25 and 2 in favor of the Stars. Following is the position of the men and the tallies made:

A World's Fair Guide that "Guides."

We have just received "The Best Things to See and How to Find Them," by far the cleverest little guide to the great exposition that has been published. It is concise, practical and a great economizer of time—looking at the Fair with a due sense of proportion and giving readers an idea of what they should see and what they can best afford to overlook. It is a guide book that "guides," taking the visitor in charge and conducting him about the grounds and through the buildings, indicating the character of each display and mentioning specifically every feature and article that should be seen and where it is to be found. It is a book that it would be well for the visitor to read before going to the fair, and is a necessity to all who wish to see the exposition systematically. It should be in the pocket of every visitor—where it will easily go. The publishers (The White City Publishing Company, 571, The Rookery), to make it doubly convenient, have kept the left hand pages throughout the book blank, for memoranda, and have given a list of routes for one, three, six and twelve day visits. The price is but 25 cents.

It Should be in Every House.

J. B. Wilson, 371 Clay St., Sharpsburg, Pa., says he will not be without Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, that it cured his wife who was threatened with pneumonia after an attack of "LaGrippe," when various other remedies and several physicians had done her no good. Robert Barber, of Cooksport, Pa., claims Dr. King's New Discovery has done him more good than anything he ever used for lung trouble. Nothing like it. Chicago and the Fair

In the great "Transportation Building" one may see every sort of vehicle, carriage, boat or bicycle ever made—almost. After entering the fair about 64th street one easily reaches the display made by the great New York Central railway. Its location is indicated by a large arch, one of the most beautiful and ornamental in the grounds. Like the other ornamental work, it is cheap, being formed of "staff" plastered on over wood or boards, but it looks like white marble. We believe we have explained the new material "staff" in a former article. It is a soft material that can be worked into any shape or moulded to any form, while in the form of mortar. But when dry it becomes quite hard and white, looking like marble. It is said to last several years. All, or nearly all the buildings are covered with this especially the parts that are ornamented, and the statues and other figures are made of it entirely. This arch of the New York Central is very beautiful, but we can see little use for it except as a sign to guide up to its great exhibit. There, side by side, we can see the first locomotive and cars the road used, as well as the last and most complete. The little locomotive they used first is a queer little thing, very plain and with no style about it. Hitched behind it are a number of little cars, or coaches rather, for they are about the style and size of the coaches now used to carry passengers over land in the wild and mountainous parts of the far west. Each would hold four to six persons inside, and there were places for several more outside on the top. One could imagine what a train like that would be, going along at about ten miles an hour, running on a track made by putting down scantlings to which were fastened the "iron rails," which were nothing in the world but a flat bar of iron laid on the scantling. Near by, as we said, are some of the finest and largest, as well as most elegant of cars and locomotives, with all the latest improvements. But the greatest show in locomotive engines is made by the B. & O. by its agent, Major Pangborn of Baltimore. He has obtained here and in England, either the real and original old first locomotives of various inventors, or else has models of them, made exactly like the originals.

Great Britain shows an engine that has been exhibited at all the world's fairs since the first one at London, 1851. She shows also, a model of the fine war ship "Victoria" that was sunk in the east end of the Mediterranean Sea in July of this year, while her model was being shown to thousands. There are the carriages of Daniel Webster, President Polk, Queen Victoria, the Lord Mayor of London, all looking a little odd to us though they were costly. There is a model of the first steam carriage, built in 1759, one of a locomotive of 1803, and a steam carriage planned by Sir Isaac Newton in 1680. There are Sedan chairs like those now used by Turks etc., in the Midway Plaisance, a Venetian gondola, and one may take a ride on one in the lagoons not far from the building, with a real Venetian gondolier to row you. There is a steamboat built in 1804.

Besides this and many other displays of cars and carriages for railways, there are boats of all or nearly all nations, and boats for various purposes, canoes, fishing boats, punts, bark canoes, odd shaped vessels from early days, and from far off nations. There are boats from the various parts of the East Indias and from China, all of strange forms with strange looking sails and oddly put together. Some have the planking fastened to the frame without nails being tied on. Then there is the boat used by Grace Darling who many years ago rescued nine persons from drowning, at her father's light house station on the English coast. Everyone stops to look at it and admire the courage of the girl who could venture out on a wild sea in a little boat like that. Then there are all sorts of bicycles or velocipedes, beginning with one in England a couple of hundred years ago, when a man walked along with the bicycle to sit on, merely resting his body, while his feet kept moving and so pushed his machine along. From this to the old velocipede of twenty or more years ago, down to the finished present form of the "wheel," the improvement is marked and unbroken.

THE CARAVALS.

In the Lagoon at the east end of the Agricultural building lie the three "Caravals," the ships modeled after those in which Columbus made his first voyage, and should be mentioned at this point. They were made in Spain last year, but are exact copies, and were sailed just as they are, across the ocean to New York, then around through Canada, up the lakes to Chicago. They are manned by Spanish seamen. The largest, the Santa Maria, is 90 feet long, and is open at the middle, down to a low main deck, but at each end is a raised deck, the rear one being Columbus' cabin. On the railing at each end are mounted small breech loading cannon, real ones once used in Spain and Mexico, but which later went out of fashion, to be revived in this present day. They look small now, compared with the big guns in the buildings near by. Then there are other cannon on lower decks, though only a few. The sides of this boat are ornamented at the rear end, with much carved work and outside ribs, and painted on the square space at the stern is a very fair picture of the Virgin and Child, and just beneath is the name "Santa Maria." The Nina and Pinto are smaller and plainer vessels lying close by, but are built on the same plan. They give one a valuable lesson in ocean travel, and compared with the fair models of modern steamers in the Transportation building, one can see what a great risk Columbus took in starting with such little vessels, thousands of miles into an unknown sea.

This also bring us to speak of the "Progress," a real whaling vessel not far away in the Lagoon near the New York Indians. It has been on many a voyage for whales, before these great animals had to a great extent met the fate of the buffalo. They show all kinds of harpoons, lances and other devices, old and new for killing and "harvesting" whales and large fish of all sorts. One wonders how men can go off to sea and live in such a little ship for three or four years, without seeing home or friends. Truly "those who go down to the sea in great ships" do not always have a holiday.

MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

HEART DISEASE 20 YEARS.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

DEAR SIRS: For 20 years I was troubled with heart disease. Would frequently have falling spells and smothering at night. Had to sit up or get out of bed to breathe. Had pain in my left side and back most of the time; at last I became dropsical. I was very nervous and nearly worn out. The least excitement would cause me to faint. I was also much troubled with fluttering. For the last fifteen years I could not sleep on my left side or back until began taking your New Heart Cure. I had not taken it very long until I felt much better, and I can now sleep on either side or back without the least discomfort. I have no pain, smothering, dropsy, no wind on stomach or other disagreeable symptoms. I am able to do all my own housework without any trouble and consider myself cured.

Elkhart, Ind., 1888. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

It is now four years since I have taken any medicine. Am in better health than I have been in 40 years. I honestly believe that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure saved my life and made me a well woman. I am now 62 years of age, and am able to do a good day's work.

May 29th, 1892. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1872—Continued.

The growth of population and the spirit of business enterprise which have been suggested more than described as a feature of 1872 were accompanied by a corresponding activity on the part of the various religious denominations and was manifest in revivals accession to numbers and erection of buildings.

During January, the German Methodists came into notice as a society in their conduct of interesting and fruitful meetings in the Reformed church. Rev. A. W Lamport faithful as a pastor and popular from personal worth was assigned in conference to Angola circuit much to the disappointment of Auburn people and was replaced by Rev. A. Cone a scholarly and most deserving man. The Baptists had crowned their long and patient labors during summer and fall upon their beautiful meeting-house and found their reward in its dedication and occupancy early in December.

The Roman Catholic church is historic and has come down through the centuries reflecting the age, the times and the countries in which she has existed and in our great republic she adjusts herself to American institutions and advanced civilization. Her priesthood are active and potential in developing and strengthening the church, and that town is small indeed in which catholicism is not represented.

In cheerful response to a request for facts relative to founding and growth, there was prepared for the writer, the following excellent sketch of the development of the Catholic church in DeKalb county Indiana.

Rev. Augustus Young was appointed its first pastor by the Rt. Rev. Joseph Dwenger, the late deceased Bishop of Ft. Wayne, on the first day of August 1872. Previous to this appointment he was assistant pastor in St. Mary's church at Ft. Wayne. His field of labor in the vineyard of the Lord assigned to him, was the northern part of Allen county and the entire DeKalb and Steuben counties.

On the 5th day of August Rev. A. Young visited Auburn the first time. During the succeeding twenty years this noble-hearted apostle labored with untiring zeal and gratifying success in this portion of the vineyard of the Lord. He constantly traveled from place to place over his mission in search of the scattered members of the flock confided to his care; he gathered the faithful into congregations and encouraged them to build churches and schools. In places where he found the number of Chatholics small and poor, he assisted them out of his own scanty means. This good pastor, like a zealous missionary, loved to visit the remotest places, and to lend his service, when required for the purpose of instructing the ignorant, removing the prejudice of bigoted minds, strengthening the faithful in the pious practice of their holy religion, and exhorting to contribute cheerfully and liberally toward the building of churches. Thus did this good pastor lay the foundation for the present flourishing condition of the Catholic church in DeKalb county.

On his arriving at Auburn as above mentioned, eight Catholic families, or eighteen communicants were found. As there was no church edifice, Father Young assembled his little flock for two years in the family residence of E. Ashley on West Sixth street where he ministered to their spiritual welfare, but having in view the future growth of Auburn he began at once to make preparations to build a house of worship. The trustees E. Ashley. Jules Beuret and Charles Beugnot purchased a building site on the corner of Fourth and Railroad streets in the northwest part of the town, and on June 1, 1874 the foundation was laid for the present building, with an expense of $3000, and was dedicated for divine worship on the 18th of October the same year by Rt. Rev. Joseph Dwenger bishop of Ft. Wayne, and the next day a balance of $375.65 was paid as the last payment due on the church.

Next year, on the 15th day of April, the joining property, consisting of house and lot, of M. L. Duck was purchased for $1900 to be used as a pastoral residence, which has served as such ever since.

Under the prudent management of Father Young, his congregation increased in membership, numbering at present about 300 members and without any incumbrance on the property.

Rev. Father Young was a resident of here until the 10th day of November 1886 when he was ordered by his bishop to move to Garrett, but still had charge of Auburn until Nov. 1, 1891, when his health began to fail. Rev. R. Denk succeeded him, and was in charge but eight months, when he was called to be assistant in the St. Mary's church at Ft. Wayne. The present pastor is Rev. F. Faust, a graduate of Mount St. Mary's Seminary, Cincinnati, Ohio.

In the spring of 1876 a small frame building 26x46 was built at Garrett and opened for service on June 25, 1876. This little church was found too small, and an addition was added in 1886. The present edifice is built in cruciform 110x50 with seating capacity of 340, and is beautifully decorated in the interior, has three altars and a pulpit, stained glass windows, and a large bell, the total cost being 7000.00. It was dedicated on the 19th day of October, 1886 by Rt. Rev. Joseph Dwenger of Ft. Wayne. The same year the pastoral residence was built 22x30 and 16x28 two story, at a cost of $1,500. The present church is again too small, and three lots have been purchased on the corner of Peter and Harrison streets on which to build a fine brick, which will cost $40,000, in the near future.

THE SISTERS' SCHOOL.

In the spring of 1888 the present two story brick structure was put up by the present zealous pastor. It is situated 100 feet south of the church on Peter St., is 32x50 feet main building with a wing of 20x30, and contains four class rooms. The ample play ground and the handsome exterior of the edifice lead one to expect a comfortable interior, nor is the visitor of St. Joseph's school disappointed in his expectations for he finds in this small city, one of the most completely equipped schools in DeKalb county. At present 180 pupils are enrolled, and are taught by four sisters of the Precious Blood, whose mother house is at Maria Stein, Mercer county, Ohio. The estimated annual expense of the school including the salaries of the teachers is about $750. The value of the school ground and house with its furniture is $7,000, and the original cost of the sisters' residence $1,000. The seating capacity is for 240 children. The number of Catholic families attending the congregation at Garrett is 135 or about 450 communicants. Value of ground and premises about $20,000.

Garrett justly feels proud of her achievements in so short a time, but all this is due more or less to the zeal of her beloved pastor.

In the Spring of 1880 the present church, known as St. Michael's Church in Smithfield township was built, and the following year on August 14, it was dedicated for divine worship by the bishop of Ft. Wayne. The edifice is 30x40 and seats 180, and the cost of it was entirely secured and paid for at the time of its dedication. Father Young was relieved of this mission January 30, 1882 by Rev. F. Franzen, a young man but lately ordained, who died on May 26, of the same year at Waterloo, Ind. Father Young was appointed to attend St. Michael's until the arrival of the present pastor, Rev. Max. Benzinger, who took charge on July 4, 1883, and he has held the position ever since. The cost of the above was about $1,500. Two acres of land on which it stands was donated by John Mathias Schaudel, who died before it was dedicated, but his funeral was held in the church, being the first service ever held therein. The present pastors, zealous in the work for his people, built the present parsonage which was completed at a cost of $1,400 in the year 1885. The above named Mr. Schandel also donated an acre of ground for burial purposes, joining the church grounds and the first one that therein found a resting place.

On August 30, 1881, four acres and a half were purchased of Gust Helmuth, administrator of the estate of Charles F. Mader deceased, known as Mader's addition to the town of Auburn, for the sum of $543.54 for burial purposes and is known and recorded as the Catholic St. Mary's cemetery, Auburn, Ind., and serves the purpose for Auburn, Garrett, and missions.

(To be continued next week.)

Mrs. Samuel W. Ralston.

From her home in Auburn, Indiana, after a brief illness attended by great suffering, Mrs. Ralston's spirit quitted the earthly tabernacle which had been her dwelling for almost seventy-six years, and by the grace of God, through faith in His Son, our Savior, went to her final rest, there to await in peace the second coming of our blessed Lord.

Eliza Jane, eldest daughter of Abram and Catherine Brink, was born in Cayuga county, New York, Oct. 7, 1817. While she was still young her parents removed to Ohio, and from their home in Plymouth, Eliza Jane, married, Jan. 30, 1834, to Samuel Woodburn Ralston, went out with her husband to become the heads of another household. Eight years later, with three little children, Helen, Emily and Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Ralston came to Auburn. They arrived Dec. 12, 1842, on Mr. Ralston's thirty-fifth birthday. Mrs. Ralston was just past twenty-five. Most of the early settlers of this region were moral, intelligent, courageous and industrious. They came to hew their fortunes out of the mighty forest, to dig them from the virgin soil. Their lives were too serious, too full of earnest purpose, and real toil to leave them time or taste for empty trivialities. What hardships were to be endured, all suffered together at first in almost equal measure, but their sympathies were ardent, their hospitality unstinted, and if in those early days there was much plain living, there was also much high thinking and many happy homes. In September 1843, George came to complete Mrs. Ralston's family circle. In 1848 when he was about four years old, Mrs. Ralston met with an accident from which she never fully recovered. While returning from a visit to Ohio with Mrs. Ralston and their two sons, when about two miles east of Mr. Phillip B. Nimmon's, whose wife was Mrs. Ralston's sister, Mr. Ralston threw himself out of his buggy to catch a runaway team behind them. His own horse ran away; he, himself was knocked down and run over, suffering very serious injuries, and his wife had both legs broken. Two weeks later she was carried back to Auburn on a bier, by the strong hands of kindly neighbors, of whom James George, whose youngest daughter is now the wife of Jackson Ralston, was one. In her own home, Mrs. Ralston came slowly and painfully back to active life, but during the remaining forty-five years of her pilgrimage she was painfully reminded at times of that ill fated day.

In 1855 a great sorrow came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralston. Helen, the oldest child, who had just completed her twentieth year, and who was peculiarly the pride and joy of her parents, left this world and all its hopes and joys.

A long life like Mrs. Ralston's must of necessity be reached by much grief, by repeated sorrows. They came to her. Sisters, brother, parents, daughter and grand-children, one by one they fell by the wayside, last of all the husband of her youth, with whom she had walked in loving companionship for more than fifty-seven years, was stricken down by her side. Then her brave spirit faltered. She could no longer adjust her life to its surroundings. The mainspring of joy was gone and henceforth she failed rapidly.

She was a fond mother, and her children hoped that their love and care might prove a staff, which should support her tottering footsteps for years to come. Vain the effort.

She has gone, but she will not be forgotton. For more than fifty years she has been identified with Auburn and its interests. The prosperity of her church was dear to her. Hereafter old friends will recall her ministering visits to the sick and suffering, her sympathizing presence in the house of mourning, every kindly word she spoke, every loving act she did will do some thing to hallow her memory.

She has gone, but when the dead in Christ shall be raised incorruptible, her frail worn body shall come forth to newness of life, never more to suffer nor to die.

Obituary.

Albert P. Randle was born in Sedan, DeKalb county, Indiana, March 18, 1867, and died at the home of his parents in Waterloo, August 29, 1893, aged 26 years, 5 months and 11 days. On Nov. 7, 1891, while at work in the employ of the Lake Shore R. R., he received injuries from which he never recovered.

He was a kind and affectionate son and brother and endeared himself to all his friends by his kind ways. His last words were: "Mother—going—home—home." An infant brother and two sisters preceded him to his home. He leaves a father, mother, four brothers and three sisters and many other relatives to mourn his loss.

The funeral services were held in the U. B. church August 31st, at 3 p. m., by Rev. P. L. Browns, pastor of the Evangelical church, the choir furnishing excellent music. The remains were laid to rest by the side of his sisters in the beautiful cemetery of Waterloo. Relatives from a distance were his two sisters, Mrs. Ritchmondt, of Milwaukee, Wis, and Mrs. Myrtle, of Chicago, and Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Billman and family, of Ligonier.

Peaceful be thy silent slumber;
Peaceful in thy grave so low;
Thou no more wilt join our number,
Thou no more our sorrows know.
Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled;
And in Heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tears are shed

IT WAS A CRUDE JOB.

THE MINERAL RANGE TRAIN ROBBERY SOLVED.

Express Messenger Hogan Was Leader of the Gang and Handed Over the Money—Disastrous Fire Sweeps Over Patterson, Ohio—Seven Persons Killed in a Big Four Wreck—Nitro-Glycerine Lets Go and Plays Sad Havoc.

TRAINMEN IN IT.

Startling Developments in the Mineral Range Robbery.

Marquette (Mich.) special: All the men who had anything to do with the robbery of the Mineral Range express of $70,000, are in jail, or under esponage, and up to date $14,000 of their booty has been recovered. George LaLiberty, a former fireman on the Duluth, Lake Shore & Atlantic road, was arrested here by the police on the telegraphic order of the Sheriff of Houghton County. LaLiberty had lost his place in the recent reduction of hands on the railroad, and has been associating with some of the tough characters who had been suspected of the train robbery. He was taken to Houghton handcuffed, and after he had made a desperate attempt to get away and been successively held, he made a clean breast of the whole affair, and was brought back to Marquette.

The men now under arrest are A. S. Cannon, of Hancock, a young man of good family, whose trunk was used to carry away the money; John King, an athlete; Chellew, a saloon keeper, of Negaunee; Michael and John Shea, saloonists here; Tom Winters, baggage man; Moses Longtin, brakeman on the train robbed; D. W. Hogan, the messenger on the robbed car; Ed. Hogan, saloonist; W. Shoup, hack driver, and Tim Butler, an habitue of Chellew's place.

The officers refuse to give a formal statement of the LaLiberty confession, but the following are the details as they have come out:

LaLiberty, trained as a locomotive fireman, covered the engineer and fireman, while the others looted the train. King, an athlete, smashed the express car door with a sledge hammer. Chellew and Butler rifled the safe and the rest carried away the plunder.

Marshal Foley of Houghton, came here after LaLiberty, and LaLiberty, when caught, asked him to come to the hotel and he would then divulge the secret. Foley went with him and he made an attempt to get away, but was foiled. He asked to be taken to Marquette jail, and there told part of a story, implicating Express Messenger D. W. Hogan of the Mineral Range train which was robbed, whose arrest followed at Hancock. Then followed a detailed account of where the money was concealed.

Daring Mine Robbery.

Leadville (Col.) special: The most daring mine robbery ever committed in this vicinity occurred at the Little Johnnie mine. The plans were carefully laid, the telephone wires being cut and communication with the city being made impossible. Early in the morning Joseph Warren, night watchman, was surprised by two masked men who bound and gaged him. They then went to the shaft house and began carrying off the ore, which was in sacks, to a team in the neighborhood. They got away with fourteen sacks, valued at $1,500 per sack, or a total of over $20,000. There is not the slightest clue to the perpetrators.

Terrific Explosion.

Pittsburgh special: Four Oardale miners were experimenting with the contents of a can of nitro-glycerine. A terrific explosion occurred, in which one man was killed and the others seriously injured. It is supposed that the explosive was stolen from the High Explosive Company's magazine near by. There is considerable mystery concerning the affair and one of the injured men has been arrested. Stanley Boyer died a few minutes after his mangled body was found. William Styperk, Joseph Stanesrawski, and Ignatius Mistzak were terribly cut and bruised.

More Slaughter.

Menteno, (Ill.) special: The second section of Big Four passenger train No. 45 crashed into the rear of the first section that had stopped unexpectedly at a point ten miles north of Kankakee, telescoping one sleeper and two coaches, killing seven people and seriously injuring a large number. The rear cars of the first section were the Ohio & Mississippi sleeper and two chair cars, all fairly well filled with passengers.

Patterson, Ohio, Burned.

The flouring mills at Patterson, Hardin county, Ohio, caught fire and before the flames could be checked over a third of the town had been destroyed. Ten business blocks burned, six residences, the post office building and all its contents, the total loss being $60,000, with but $6,000 insurance. The town is a total ruin and one child is missing.

Cholera Epidemic.

Surgeon General Wyman, of the Marine Hospital service, has received a cablegram from Dr. White, at Hamburg, stating that there were nine cases of cholera there, five of which proved fatal.

Field Fire in Kankakee Region.

Sparks from an engine started a fire on the Kankakee marsh, just east of Union Center. The wind was blowing a gale, and the fire covered a wide area, destroying many tons of hay.

A Race for Homes.

Arkansas City (Kan.) special: One hundred thousand people settled upon the Cherokee strip Saturday. At noon the signal was given announcing the passing of the title of the land from the United States Government to the boomers, and a race such as was never witnessed before, and will probably never be seen again, was begun. On the lines in the vicinity of the various border towns the boomers had gathered in great numbers.

As far as the eye could reach in either direction could be seen men, mounted and in wagons and on foot, closely packed together, making a solid column 200 feet or more wide in the middle and tapering away to a mere streak of black in the distance. The scene when the column broke at the firing of the signal gun, and each individual entered the contest for a common prize, can be imagined better than described.

ANOTHER ONE!

A Mineral Range Express Train Held Up.

Calumet (Mich.) special: At 9:30 o'clock Saturday morning the passenger train on the Mineral Range Railroad, coming to Calumet, was held up by four highwaymen, about half way between Calumet and Hancock.

The engineer and fireman were covered with revolvers by two of the robbers, while the other two ordered the express messenger to put the contents of his safe in a bag which one of the robbers carried. The messenger immediately complied, and handed out some $75,000 consigned to the Calumet and Hecla Mine, and which was part of the money to be paid by the mine on its pay-roll.

After securing the booty the robbers fired a shot and ordered the engineer to go ahead d—d quick, which he did.

The whole affair was such a surprise that the passengers knew nothing of the trouble until after the train had started again. The train was crowded. Light guards and sheriffs are out scouring the country. It is thought that the robbers had horses conveniently near, and a boat ready at the lakes from which place they would make for Northern Canada.

Jack King, the great Cornish wrestler, John Kepa, and Jack Challew were seen driving very fast into town and persons near the Boston Station saw a horse, corresponding to their's tied up near the station. These men and a man named Gorman were thereupon arrested and the clew against them seems to be a very strong one.

The conductor of the train who saw the robbers walk away, thinks their gait and general appearance corresponds to these men. Jack Challew's wife attempted to leave by a train, but she was stopped and brought back. The prisoners were put under $10,000 bonds, in default of which they were placed in jail.

THE BOOMERS

Are Scorched by the Hot Winds of the Plains.

Guthrie (O. T.) special: Thousands upon thousands of people are still arriving daily to enter the promised land, and the situation is indeed getting serious all along the line. With from 4,000 to 12,000 people lined up at each registering booth and the clerks all tired out to start with, little headway is being made and the lines are longer than ever. The temperature 102 in the shade, hot winds blowing clouds of dust, with a scarcity of water and prospect of spending a long time in line have disgusted many and fully 500 people have boarded the trains and left for their homes. Two men died near Hennessy of prostration, and one poor old negro who came all the way from Georgia to get a home perished from hunger and thirst.

At Stillwater the crowd is getting unruly again and trouble is expected. A score of people are dangerously sick and one died. The fires which started in the Pawnee reservation have swept over a large section of country, burning off grass and destroying the improvements that Indians have made on their allotments.

A number of people are missing at Pawnee and it is feared that some of them have perished in the fires.

At Arkansas City 12,000 people are in line and registering proceeds slowly. Four persons died from the effects of exposure and twenty fainted in line.

At Orlando 8,000 people are in line and eight train loads of people are en-route from Kansas City and other points. People are dropping over by the score and hundreds leaving in disgust.

THE LATEST

Tale of Destruction from the Wisconsin Forest Fires.

Marsfield (Wis.) special: Parties who have returned from the burned district report that all along the road the carcases of horses, cows, oxen, and pigs can be seen. As far as heard from, between forty and fifty families are homeless in this vicinity, but the list will be swelled unless something transpires to stay the flames. Word from McMillan was received to the effect that all hope of saving the village is about given up. McMillan Bros.' plant at McMillan is valued at $150,000, insured for $65,000. Two hundred men are fighting the flames. At Morrill, Wis., reports are pouring in from all directions telling how the disastrous fires are leaving death and destruction in their wake. In the towns of Pine River and Scott eighteen families have been rendered homeless. Only two deaths have been reported so far. They are two children of Fred Wege, who, with their mother, were trying to save some of the household effects. They were suffocated in the smoke. Swope's saw mill, in the town of Pine River, was completely burned. It was valued at $25,000, and was insured for $17,000.

The Daltons Seen in Indiana.

Indianapolis special: Chief of Police Colbert received word that Bill Dalton, the notorious train robber from the West, and a gang of ten men were found in a box car at Romona, a small station on the Indianapolis and Vincennes Railroad, about forty-three miles southwest of the city. Posses were sent down the road but nothing further had been heard of the robbers. It is believed that after they were discovered they bolted south to the hills of Morgan or Brown County. This country is so wild that it will be as difficult to get the gang as it was when they left Kendallville, for it is supposed that Dalton's gang is the one that held up the Lake Shore express. It is said that Dalton originally came from the southern part of the State and it is believed that he is trying to reach friends or relatives in the southern hills.

The Michigan Train Robbery.

Hancock (Mich.) special: Jack Kehoe, one of the men arrested on suspicion of having been implicated in the Mineral Range express robbery, has just been released. He proved an alibi, and convinced the authorities that he was in Hancock at the time of the robbery. Lake Superior for the past few days has been so rough that a small boat could not live any length of time upon it. This would preclude the possibility of the robbers escaping that way. If the men in custody are not the culprits the real robbers will have a hard time evading justice, for the territory surrounding the scene of their robbery is a dreary waste, with no place where anybody could procure food. Nothing is yet known as to the whereabouts of the missing money.

More Than Fifty People Drowned in Caves.

Madrid special: Rain continues to pour down in New Castle, the floods growing more and more severe, much more damage being done and many more lives lost. In addition to Villa Canasa the villages of Tenbleque, Lillo, Romerat and other places were flooded. As in the case of the people of Villa Canasa the inhabitants fled to the heights. Some of them escaped, but a number were drowned.

The number of people drowned in the caves of Villa Canasa will reach more than fifty, which was the number at first reported to have been lost. The exact number of people who met with death like rats in holes will not be known until the caves have been pumped.

Against Holman.

Indianapolis special: The Lawrenceburg Register, which has been the staunch political friend of Congressman Holman for the past sixteen years, is now making a forcible opposition to Holman's longer continuance in Congress, upon the ground that he has not been true to his friends and because Dearborn County has been too long deprived of its share of joint officers because Holman lived within its borders.

Fire at Pittsburgh.

The wholesale grocery store of J. C. Hill & Co., running through from 62 Water street to 64 First avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., was completely destroyed by fire. The storage warehouse of Hostetter & Co., in an adjoining building, was damaged. J. C. Hill & Co., lose $20,000; D. H. Hostetter, owner of the building, loss, $6,000; Hostetter & Co., loss, $10,000. The losses are fully covered by insurance.

A $250,000 Blaze.

The worst fire that ever visited the town of Spencer, Mass., broke out the other afternoon and resulted in a total loss that will amount to $250,000. The fire originated at the freight depot of the Boston and Albany road and every building on either side of Wall street was destroyed, including planing mill, and factories and residences.

A Printer Killed.

William Cunningham, a printer, 40 years old, was assaulted and killed at Pittsburgh. Half an hour later Edward King, also a printer, who admitted having struck Cunningham, was arrested. Cunningham was well known in every printing office in the West, he having been on the road for a quarter of a century.

Set at Liberty.

Peter Zowar, who was sentenced to Joliet prison for life in 1868 for the murder of a girl because she refused to marry him, will regain his liberty in a few days, his term having been commuted by Governor Altgeld. Zowar has been in prison longer than any other convict ever confined in Illinois.

Refuses to Ratify.

The Canadian Government has refused to ratify the immigration agreement made with the New York Commissioners that all immigrants landing at Canadian ports, but destined for the United States, should be inspected at the port of entry by United States officers.

Wholesale Poisoning.

At Adrian, Mich., four members of the family of George F. Payne, father, mother, and two children, and over a score of other people are seriously ill from the effects of tyrotoxicon poison, caused by eating cheese. The cheese was eaten at a social entertainment.

The Government Mint Robbery.

The mystery over the singular disappearance of $134,000 in gold from the Philadelphia Mint has been cleared up. It was stolen by a trusted employe named Henry S. Cochran, and he has restored $100,000, with the promise of making good the deficit.

Dropped Dead.

Samuel Lamb, 74 years old, dropped dead at the home of his son-in-law, near Richmond, Ind. The deceased was at one time the Sheriff of the Indiana Supreme Court and later he was Sheriff of Howard County. He was well known throughout Indiana.

McBride Short $10,000.

The examination of the books of the Supreme Treasurer, McBride, of the Indiana Knights and Ladies of Honor, confirms the shortage of $10,000. Supreme officers do not believe him guilty, however, of stealing the amount.

Deafness Led to Death.

Samuel Morse, a huckster living near Carroll, Fairfield County, Ohio, was run over and killed by a Hocking Valley train while he was en route to Columbus. He was 70 years old and too deaf to hear the approach of the train.

Bombarding Rio.

The Exchange Telegram Company says private advices received from Brazil are to the effect that the insurgent fleet is bombarding Rio Janeiro and that one of the principal forts in the harbor sided with the rebels.

Wreck on the B. & O.

A Baltimore and Ohio freight train was wrecked near Dillon's Falls, about three miles west of Zanesville, Ohio. Engineer Tom Fisher of Newark, Ohio, was killed and twelve cars derailed and demolished.

Got the Papers for That?

Madden Valentine caught a catfish in the Ohio River at Gallipolis, Ohio, that weighed 108 pounds. It made a wheelbarrow full when chopped up.

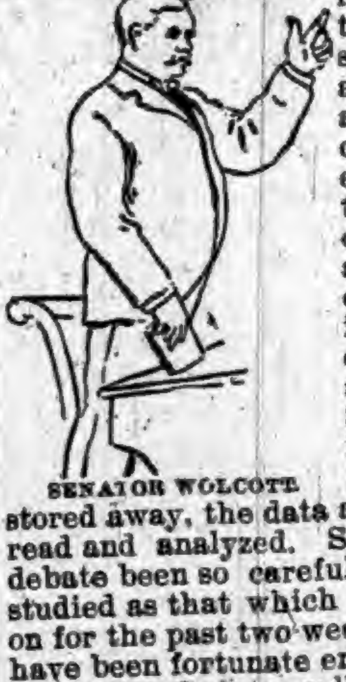
SCENES IN THE SENATE

SOME OF THE MEN WHO MAKE SPEECHES.

Leaders Engaged in Parliamentary Dueling—Debates Bristle with Sharp Repartee—Conferences that Indicate Silent Warfare.

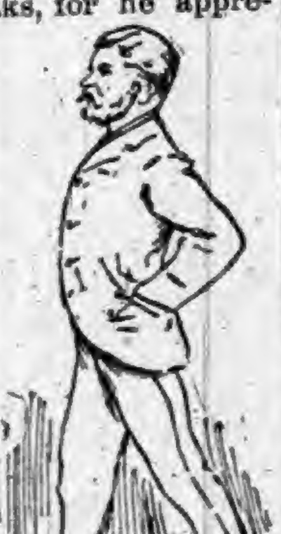
The Great Debate.

Washington correspondence:



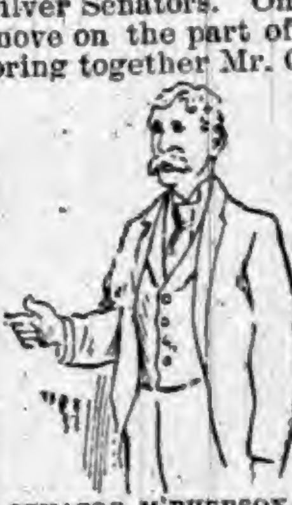
SENATOR WOLCOTT.

The scenes in the Senate since the opening of the extra session have been remarkable for the regular and steady attendance of the Senators, the sincere interest of each of them in the utterances of their associates, and the crowded galleries. Each speaker is given strict attention of the Senate. The logic of the speech is followed and stored away, the data and statistics are read and analyzed. Seldom has any debate been so carefully followed and studied as that which has been going on for the past two weeks. Those who have been fortunate enough to be present in the Senate galleries have seen and heard the men of the nation at their best. There has been a struggle on all sides to make for each party the most of the political capital that is certain to result when Congress legislates upon a subject of not national but international import. Every point, every word has its meaning, and before such a critical audience one is bound to think twice before he speaks, for he appreciates that should he make a misstep he would be at the mercy of those who are of a different belief, who are ever on the alert to make it embarrassing for him. The debates bristle with sharp repartee, and give to the sessions of the Senate a sharpness and brilliancy that is unusual.



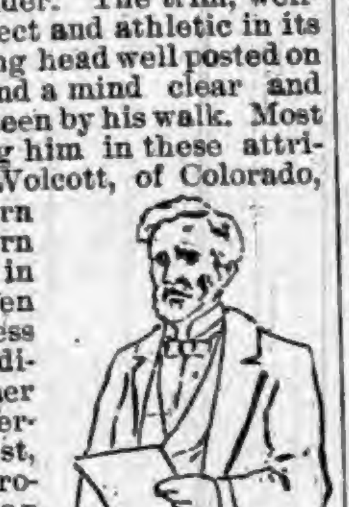
SENATOR LODGE.

The battle that is being waged on the floor is not apparent to the casual observer. In every motion that is made there is apt to be a hidden effort, and it takes the vigilance and quick insight of the leader to appreciate the meaning of his opponent and as quickly parry it with a motion that will benefit his side. The conferences that occur between these men are interesting and at the same time are indicative of the silent warfare that is going on. A motion or suggestion made by the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Voorhees) hurriedly calls together Mr. Teller, Mr. Stewart, Mr. Dubois, Mr. Peffer, Mr. Jones, and the other silver Senators. On the other hand, a move on the part of any of these will bring together Mr. Gorman, Mr. Voorhees and Mr. Faulkner, and with their heads together they will talk hurriedly, and as a result one of the latter two will make the motion, which will probably be carried out by the majority. It is very seldom that Mr. Gorman speaks to the Senate. He prefers to allow others to carry out his plans.



SENATOR M'PHERSON.

As a study of the aristocratic characters of the different sections of the country the Senate even affords better opportunities than the House. It would not be a difficult matter to analyze the temperaments of the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Lodge, or those of Mr. Peffer, from Kansas. Two men could hardly be more different in their tastes and habits. In Mr. Lodge there is the cut and dash of a college-bred New-Englander. The trim, well-dressed figure, erect and athletic in its build, a good strong head well posted on national affairs and a mind clear and independent are seen by his walk. Most closely resembling him in these attributes is Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, who is also Eastern born, but Western raised. His stay in the West has given him that boldness of speech and directness of manner which is characteristic of the West, while adding a robust constitution which allows of a powerful voice and force of gesture. For so young a man he attracts more attention to his speeches than is usual.



SENATOR SHERMAN.

Firmly identified with everything in the Senate that has a silver lining is Mr. Stewart of Nevada. He is known the world over as being for silver, free and unlimited as to its coinage, and in this respect he is one of the best-known characters in the Senate. He is one of the far Western self-made men, and though, perhaps, his power of oratory is not as magnetic as some of his fellow members, he is undoubtedly a thorn in the side of those who attempt to legislate against the white metal. He has an apparently everlasting fund of silver knowledge, and is ever prepared to stand for the rights of that metal.

Senator Sherman seems to have aged since the last session, but it was apparent from his recent speech that he has lost none of the fire and clear-headed manner of speech that has marked him as one of the most able men this country has produced. He is one of the parliamentarians in Congress, and is always ready to suggest the proper method of disposing of any question that comes before the body of which he is a member. Though he had a portion of his speech written out, he seldom referred to the notes, except for statistics or figures, and though he talked for nearly three hours he never hesitated or had to change his style of expression. He is seldom absent from the Senate, and is regarded as one of most valuable men that there are on the Republican side of the chamber for that party.

Perhaps, next to Senator Voorhees, the Democrat who is taking the most active part in the financial discussion is Senator McPherson of New Jersey. According to his own statement he appreciates that his party is now in control of the legislative branches of the country, and that it is responsible for all that is given to this country from Congress during this Congress at least. He has come forward as a strong friend of the administration in the present emergency, and on account of his experience and long service on the Finance Committee is one of Mr. Cleveland's most helpful lieutenants on the floor.

CORN CROP IS COOKED.

Great Maize Belt of the Country Much Affected by the Drought.

The September report of the statistician of the Department of Agriculture shows a decline in the condition of corn to 76.7 from 87 in the month of August and 93.2 in July, being a decline of more than 10 points from the August and over 16 from the July report. The change is marked in nearly all of the surplus corn States. The present condition is 75 in Kentucky, 64 in Ohio, 65 in Michigan, 59 in Indiana, 64 in Illinois, 96 in Iowa, 92 in Missouri, 74 in Kansas and 71 in Nebraska. In comparison with the September reports of the last ten years only three were lower—70.1 in 1890, 72.3 in 1887, and 76.6 in 1886. In the same month in 1882 the condition was 79.6 or nearly three points higher than the present month. There has been a general decline in the condition throughout the country due to the prevailing drought. The condition of wheat, considering both winter and spring varieties, when harvested was 74, against 85.3 in 1892. The general average is the lowest since 1885, when it was 72.

The reported conditions from correspondents in the principal wheat-growing States are as follows: Ohio, 98; Michigan, 80; Indiana, 88; Illinois, 60; Wisconsin, 80; Minnesota, 65; Iowa; 85; Missouri, 64; Kansas, 42; Nebraska, 55; South Dakota, 66; North Dakota, 67; Colorado, 89, and Oregon, 93. In the East, New York has 76; Pennsylvania, 93; Maryland, 98; Virginia, 96, and Texas, 68. In the New England, Eastern, and most of the Southern States the crop was harvested in good condition and the yield averaged well. The same can be said of Ohio. In Indiana the quality is good, but crop light, while in Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska the yield is small and of an inferior quality, much of it grading No. 3 and under, while in some places it is reported to be worthless. In the Dakotas the yield is light, while the quality is generally good. In Iowa and Wisconsin the winter variety yielded well and was of good quality, while the spring yield was poor and of an inferior quality. In Minnesota the yield has been poor and not up to expectations, the quality generally being good, with some complaint of shriveled grain. In California and Oregon the quality of the grain is good up to an average, and the yield has been good except on lowlands, where it was greatly damaged.

PEOPLE OF MANY CREEDS.

Nearly all the Great Religions Represented at Chicago.

Christians and Jews, Mohammedans, Buddhists, Brahmans and followers of about every religious creed in the civilized world met in one grand assembly in the Chicago Art Palace Monday morning for the first time in the history of the world. Time and again the greatest audience which has ever packed the Art Palace thundered its approval of the spirit of toleration and liberality which made possible the parliament of the religions of the world. The dark-skinned sectarians of the Oriental countries in their white and yellow robes and turbans sat side by side with the dark-gowned and hatted prelates of the Greek Church and a red cloaked and capped cardinal of the Church of Rome. Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Campbellites and Unitarians laid by their differences on baptism, eternal punishment, forordination and the vicarious atonement and joined hands with the followers of Confucius, Mahomet, Buddha and those of every sect. Nor was woman forgotten. She was given such recognition as would have been impossible a few decades ago.

Long before the hour for the opening of the session Columbus Hall was crowed with such an audience as was never within its doors before. Up stairs and down the aisles were filled with people and the passageways around the seats were packed with people five deep. Archbishop Feehan, the Rev. John H. Barrows, President Higinbotham and others delivered addresses of welcome and responses, and addresses to the occasion were delivered by Cardinal Gibbons; Archbishop Redwood, of New Zealand; Count A. Bernstorff, Berlin: the Most Rev. Dionysius Latas, Archbishop of Zante, Greece: Carl von Bergen, Sweden; Prof. C. N. Charkarar, H. Dharmapala and P. C. Mozoomdar, India; the Hon. Pung Quang Yu, China; Principal Grant, Canada; Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant, Rabbi E. G. Hirsch, Bishop B. W. Arnett, Miss Jeanne Serabji, Khersidji Laurasava, Bombay; and Mrs. Chapin.

Presiding Elder Shoots Himself.

The Rev. W. A. Amsbury, presiding elder of the North Platte, Neb., district, shot and almost instantly killed himself Monday afternoon. He was riding in a Union Pacific caboose on his way to keep an appointment, and for amusement had been shooting at telegraph poles as the train passed by. While the train was standing at a station the crew heard a shot and, entering the caboose, found Mr. Amsbury breathing his last. His friends scoffed the idea of suicide.

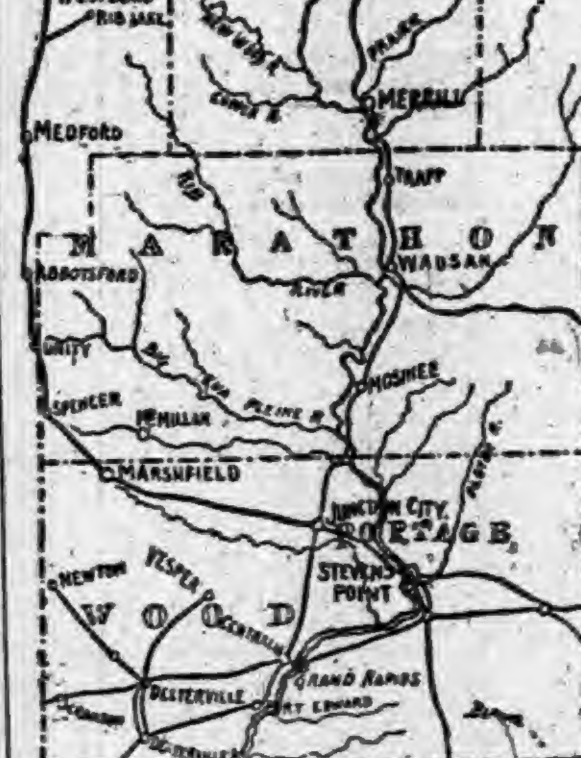
RAIN ALONE CAN SAVE.

WISCONSIN FIRES SWEEP NORTHWARD WITH DIRE EFFECTS.

Ashland and the Surrounding Towns Now Besieged—Settlers Flocking In from All Directions, Fleeing for Their Lives—High Winds Fan the Flames.

New Danger Center.

Pray for rain is the hopeless cry throughout Northern Wisconsin as the forest flames continue to devour everything before them. Settlers are coming into Ashland from all directions, running for their lives. At noon Sunday the people were called from worship by fire alarms. The cinders and smoke became almost blinding all over the city. Over 1,000 volunteers were added to the fire department to fight the flames, which rushed in on the city from the Odanah Indian Reservation. At 3 o'clock there was a wild cry of despair among the people living near the Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western Railroad shops. The waterworks had given out and there was no water. The chemical engines were brought, but it was useless to try to stop the flames, as a high gale of wind was blowing. There are but a very few wells in the city. The coal shops caught fire and the plucky engineers soon had the thirty dead locomotives fired up and running all rolling stock to the lake front. Household goods have been burned, and over 100 families are already homeless. The sight was almost obscured by the heavy clouds of smoke and cinders. Twenty men were overcome in fighting the flames and taken to the hospital. The timber and vegetation is like straw. No rain has fallen since July 10. Three families near Marengo have perished. There was no help to go to them. At Parishville the large iron plant burned. A large number of women and children who had rushed to the lake front were only saved by a desperate effort with patrol wagons.



WISCONSIN'S FIRE-SWEPT COUNTIES.

The fire is the same that has been raging further south all week. Settlers arriving have pitiful stories to tell and are being cared for by those who still have houses. One man named Egstrom was driven crazy by the loss of his wife and family of two children. His hair and eyelashes and clothes were burned from his body when discovered.

Covers Two Hundred Square Miles.

As near as can be estimated the fire now covers 200 square miles and is sweeping north. The damage to standing pine will be very heavy and approximates not less than $5,000,000. A woman and baby, supposed to be the wife of a settler, were picked up in an insensible condition near White River road. The child died soon after arriving. The mother is in a delirium, and it is supposed that her husband perished in the Odanah Reservation. Indians are camping on a raft in Bad River and are hemmed in with an archway of flames. All communication with Ashland was cut off from surrounding small towns. It is impossible to give details of holocausts and losses, but if rain does not soon come the death list will run up into the hundreds.

Fierce fires are raging between Iron River and Superior, and a great deal of damage to timber, railroad property and the property of homesteaders has been done. The trains on the Northern Pacific and Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic Railways were preceded by hand cars loaded with section men to repair the tracks for the trains to pass. Several bridges along the Northern Pacific have been destroyed and homesteaders in many cases have been entirely burned out.

For several days West Superior has been enveloped in dense smoke from numerous forest fires south of there, but no danger was anticipated until the fires approached the city, forced on by a strong wind. The fire departments were called out and the flames were fought off before they reached any of the buildings on the outskirts of the town. At Merrill the wind turned completely around, stopping the progress of the forest fire in that vicinity. The work of caring for destitute farmers has begun in earnest. Citizens are responding liberally, and the immediate wants of the people are looked after.

Milwaukee has been enveloped in smoke from the forest fires. About the towns within the burning district citizens are fighting the fires day and night to prevent the flames from reaching within the limits. The fires appear to be the worst along the line of the Wisconsin Central Railway. Through Wisconsin Central trains between Chicago and Minneapolis are running over the Omaha Road between Eau Claire and Marshfield on account of the burning of a bridge. The forest fires which are causing such widespread destruction through Wisconsin and the upper end of the Lower Michigan Peninsula have covered the lake with a thick pall of smoke and navigation has become decidedly dangerous. A half dozen wrecks have occurred the last few days, and the captains of incoming boats report that the smoke is becoming steadily worse.

AN IDYL OF HONOLULU.

A Bold Stroke for a Husband. Written for This Paper.

BY LEON LEWIS.

CHAPTER VI—Continued.

"And now for a serious word with you," said Bullet, as he drew his chair close to Alma's. "Has Benning proposed yet?"

"Not yet, father."

"Why don't you fetch him to the point?"

"I'm doing all I can."

"Well, you must do a little more," said Bullet, with unwonted gravity. "If this marriage does not soon take place, it will never take place at all. There seems to be a little leak somewhere. There are two or three sailors hanging around Honolulu who have seen the young man here, and who seem to know all about him. At least, they have a great deal to say, especially when they are in their cups, and I begin to fear that the secret may in some way reach Benning's ears, or at least the ears of some one who will comprehend the situation and come here and claim him. As the case stands, something must be done immediately. How can we contrive to give him a shock—an impetus in the right direction—an awakener?"

"I don't know, I'm sure," replied Alma, "unless I pretend to kill myself——"

"Hush! What if he should hear you? Try to think of something practical. By the way, can you account for his coldness?"

"Certainly. He's bound up in a desire to know who and what he formerly was, who are his relatives, and how he came here, and so on."

The old sailor looked startled.

"Things are getting to a very critical pass, I see," he whispered. "Try to think of something over night that will concentrate his thoughts upon you."

The "awakener" so ardently desired by Bullet and his daughter came sooner than it was expected.

Impelled by his unrest, our hero again rambled off into the hills early in the forenoon subsequent to the conversation we have just recorded, and was absent several hours—so long, in fact that Alma again went to look for him.

Following a trail which she supposed to be Ralph's she advanced into the heart of one of those great solitudes which characterize so much of the interior of the island, when the snapping of a twig at her side caused her to start and look up quickly.

Keeri was again beside her.

The Kanaka was smiling now, but it was a grim sort of smile—one that rather convulsed than relaxed his features.

"I am glad to see you again," he said, half mockingly. "I have just been selecting a snug retreat for you in one of the hills away here to the northward."

"For me?" cried Alma.

"Yes, for you. And as I know that you will not honor it with a visit of your own accord, I shall take you thither against your wishes."

"Villain! don't come a step nearer!"

"But I will, though!"

With this he seized her.

We need not relate the details of the struggle that followed. Suffice it to say that her hands being duly secured, and a gag placed in her mouth, the girl was led away in the direction indicated by her desperate admirer.

About an hour thereafter, having come home to dinner, and experienced the double shock of finding both his daughter and Ralph absent, the old sailor conceived a lively suspicion that something was wrong, and at once took down an old musket from a peg and started for the Creeka place, to learn if any one there knew anything of these unusual absences.

To his great surprise he found the premises in question utterly deserted.

This third absence was significant in the highest degree, and it was in a perfect whirlwind of apprehension that Bullet began scouring the adjacent hills and forests.

He had not gone far, however, when he beheld a sight that brought him to an abrupt halt—Ralph Kemplin leaning against a tree and engaged in such a profound revery as to be utterly unconscious of everything around him.

"Still thinking about his former self, I suppose," thought Bullet. "Wonder if I can't startle him into thinking of Alma?"

The case being at once stated to the young Chicagoan, he became as agitated as the old sailor cared to see him. The girl had not only been very kind to him, but had rendered him great services, especially in the matter of his new education—services for which he designed, as he had often assured himself, to always treat her as a sister.

"Yes, that cursed Kanaka has carried her off to some den in the mountains," was the assurance with which Bullet concluded his harrowing tale, "and all because she has refused his offer of marriage, and because he suspects her of being engaged to you."

This was certainly putting the case upon a footing that touched our hero closely, and the zeal with which he joined Bullet in a search for the missing girl can be imagined.

During the remainder of the day, and all the subsequent forenoon, the couple scoured the great solitudes of the interior for some trace of the missing girl and Keeri, but all in vain. It was not till the close of the second afternoon of their search that a clue was vouchsafed them, but it came at last. Just as the day was closing, and they were about to retreat from a narrow ravine into which they had descended, they saw a man emerge from a cave and look cautiously around. This man was Keeri, and the searchers at once comprehended the situation. They had traced the Kanaka to his lair.

CHAPTER VII.

MARRIAGE HER ONLY PROTECTION.

At sight of Keeri, so plainly revealed and so unsuspicious of any hostile presence, the old sailor smiled grimly, and his whole frame shook with a convulsion of joy and relief.

"Cautious!" was his warning whisper. "At last we have him! We've only to finish as cleverly as we have begun."

"His presence here is a sufficient indication of his business," returned Ralph. "He's not merely hiding, but is here as Miss Bullet's jailer."

"Of course—of course. The minute you set eyes on him you know that Alma is not far distant. I dare say we are within a few rods of her person. Take care that the infernal Kanaka does not see or hear us. He'd probably sooner murder the poor child than permit us to take her from him."

By this time the Kanaka had finished his keen survey of his surroundings, without detecting the presence of the two men, and commenced making his way down an abrupt declivity toward a small steam that wound its shining course along the bottom of the narrow valley. A pail he carried in his right hand indicated clearly enough that he was seeking a supply of water for himself or for his captive.

"We have him!" breathed Bullet in Ralph's ear, as his grim smile gave place to a look of the sternest resolve. "You see the point for which he is making? From our present position we can almost drop ourselves upon him at the instant he is filling his pail. Do not hurt him any more than is necessary. He's almost crazy, you know, with his love for Alma—and it's little to be wondered at, for she's a girl of a million."

The sternness of the old sailor's countenance showed that this suggestion was more designed to influence Ralph than to spare the Kanaka.

"Do just as you see me do, my dear Benning," added Bullet, when Keeri had nearly reached the brook, "and we shall have him safe and snug in less than a minute."

The event proved the justness of the old man's calculations. At the very instant Keeri stooped beside the stream to fill his pail, the two men hurled themselves upon him.

The contest that followed, however, was as desperate as it was short. The supple Kanaka exerted himself so violently that Ralph and Bullet had to set themselves earnestly to work before he was overpowered and bound securely.

"So you've gone to keeping house in the hills, have you?" sneered Bullet, when at last the Kanaka lay panting and helpless at his feet. "Where is my daughter?"

"Don't you wish you knew, old man?" was the spiteful answer.

"We shall have to extract the desired information from him, I think," suggested Ralph, quietly. "A good sousing in the nearest pool will probably loosen his tongue."

"I dare say. Let's try it."

The two men laid hold of the Kanaka immediately, with an air which showed how earnestly they were in quest of information.

"If the water don't fetch him, we'll tie him up by the thumbs, sailor fashion," muttered Bullet, as he and Ralph bore their prisoner toward a considerable pool, which had formed at a bend in the stream. "He must tell us where Alma is or we'll souse the breath out of his body."

The determination of his captors could hardly have failed to affect the Kanaka.

"Hold on!" he suddenly muttered.

The two men stopped.

"I'll tell you where the girl is," he said, "since I have been such a fool as to allow you to nab me. She is here with me—living in one of these caves. She is now my wife, Mr. Bullet. Partly by scaring her and partly by coaxing I have induced her to marry me."

"You had better tell that to the marines," said Bullet, coldly. "I know Alma too well to credit your impudent lies. Your coaxing and threats have been equally useless."

"You forget, old man, that Alma has been betrothed to me for years," said the unscrupulous wooer, as he turned his malignant glances upon Ralph. "She has always thought everything of me, and has long been deceiving you and the young American——"

"Shut up, or I'll throw you into the brook," interrupted Bullet, alarmed lest these falsehoods should have the effect intended: that of making trouble between Ralph and Alma. "All you have to do is to show us where the girl is, and we'll hear what she has to say about these matters. And the sooner you tell us where she is the better it will be for you."

Keeri bit his lips vengefully, but soon mastered his rage and mortification.

"She's up there," he muttered, jerking his head toward the spot where the two men had first seen him. "If you'll set me free I'll show you the way to our hiding-place."

Ralph and Bullet exchanged glances.

"I see no objections to setting him upon his pins," said the latter, "so long as we keep a sharp look-out upon him."

The feet of Keeri were accordingly free, and he was assisted to an upright position.

"This way," he enjoined. "If you leave me in this fix, however, you'll have to help me."

"Oh, we'll help you fast enough," returned Bullet. "Take hold of him, my dear Benning. Between us we shall be able to manage him."

The trio began the ascent of the declivity Keeri had so lately traversed, and were soon in a most difficult and dangerous spot—a narrow ledge upon the face of a precipice that towered fifty or sixty feet above the bottom of the valley we have mentioned. And then it was that the Kanaka suddenly precipitated himself against his captors with all his might, in an attempt to tumble them from this elevation into the rocky depths below. It was only by the watchfulness and vigorous dexterity of Ralph that this attempt was thwarted.

"The treacherous snake!" muttered Bullet, when he had recovered his foot. "If he does that again, tumble him down the rocks without any ceremony."

Keeri saw by the manner of Bullet that further violence would react upon himself, and that not the least credit would be given to any further falsehoods he might utter. He accordingly choked down his wrath, and assumed as resigned an air as possible.

"I've played and lost," he muttered. "But I dare say, old man, you won't kill me for thinking too much of Alma?"

"That depends upon how you have treated her," returned Bullet sternly. "Lead on to the cave."

The trio speedily reached the spot where the Kanaka had been discovered, and from this point a long and narrow opening into the rocky ledge became visible.

"This is the place," cried Bullet, after a single look around him.

His voice was followed by a scream that came, faint and echoing, from the depths of the rocky passage in question.

"It's Alma," added the old sailor, flushing with joy and relief. "We've found her."

Torches were hastily lighted, and the two men plunged into the rocky passage, which was visibly the entrance of a cavern, dragging their prisoner after them. Ere long they came to a stout door, locked and barred, which had been fitted into a casing of heavy timbers at the narrowest point of the entrance.

"Are you here, Alma?" demanded Bullet.

An inarticulate cry of joy was the first response to this query, but the words speedily followed:

"Yes, I am here."

"Safe and well?"

"Yes, safe and well."

The old sailor drew a long sigh of relief, as did Ralph. It occupied only a few moments to find the key of the door in Keeri's pocket and to use it, thus bringing the captive and her rescuers face to face.

The scene that followed was sufficiently emotional, the girl not only clinging sobbingly to her father's breast, but also throwing herself impulsively into the arms of Ralph, with joyous cries and tears. And it was not without an answering emotion that he received these grateful effusions for his share in the rescue. As he had long been oblivious of even Maida Stepp's existence, no former memory preserved him from the full effect of Alma's exaggerated gratitude. He did not love the wily girl, but he was grateful to her for all the interested kindnesses she had shown him, and he was neither so stony nor so wooden as to receive her demonstrations unmoved. To the contrary, as he found her arms thrown tightly around his neck, at that moment of joyous excitement, he became conscious of a deeper interest in her than he had ever before experienced. Even Keeri perceived that he had lost more by his violence than he had gained.

"How has the Kanaka treated you?" asked Bullet, as soon as Alma, with well-acted confusion, had withdrawn from the arms of the young Chicagoan.

"Oh, very well," replied Alma. "He has kept me a close prisoner and has tried to coax and scare me into marrying him, but he has not been particularly intrusive or dangerous."

"What shall be his punishment?"

"I think he'll be punished enough if you take good care that he does not get hold of me again," returned the scheming girl, with a stealthy glance at Ralph.

"I'll take good care for that—with Mr. Benning's aid," said Bullet. "But what a curious place the rascal fitted up for you here," he added, waving his torch around him and marking the extent and contents of the cavern. "Everything indicates that he has taken time to prepare for your long residence in this hiding-place."

"Certainly. He has been engaged for weeks in fitting up the place, and he has declared again and again that I should never leave it, unless under a solemn promise to marry him. But all his threats did not trouble me greatly, for I felt sure that Mr. Benning and you would find me."

"Touching faith!" muttered Bullet, as he drew the back of his hand across his eyes. "But in this case it was not fallacious. Mr. Benning and I have indeed found you, never again to lose sight of you in such a way as this, if human foresight can prevent it."

Leaving Keeri in the cave, so secured in well-knotted ropes that several hours would be consumed by him in setting himself free, the rescuers and Alma took their way homeward, Bullet leading the way, and the girl leaning heavily upon the arm of Ralph.

That she had suffered from her captivity was apparent at a glance, her features being much thinner and paler than usual, but the fresh air, coupled with the excitement of the hour, soon brought the color to her cheeks. An easy walk of a couple of hours brought the trio to Bullet's dwelling, where they proceeded to rest and recuperate from their fatigues and trials.

The Deadly Lockjaw.

One of the most violent diseases that we have, lockjaw, has at last been found to be curable, and where 99 per cent. of those who contracted the disease were before sure to die, we now can rely upon nearly as large a percentage of cures. This disease has been a mystery until quite recently. Why one should contract lockjaw by running a small tack, splinter or other substance into his body, and another escape all trouble, no one could understand. It was supposed for a long time that certain people had a predisposition to the disease, and the least wound inflicted this way would cause lockjaw. But now that the bacillus of lockjaw has been discovered we know differently. This bacillus is in the shape of a drum-stick and contains a deadly poison. The bacillus is found everywhere in the surface soil of the streets or fields, and every time we run any foreign substance into the body we run the risk of getting lockjaw. The germs are all around us in the dirt of streets, and this is why nails that are run into the feet when walking on the roads are apt to give the person lockjaw. The bacilli have congregated on the nail in great numbers, and when introduced into the system they get up a violent poison. A curious powder has now been obtained after a long series of experiments which will instantly kill the bacilli of lockjaw, and when patients are suffering from the dreaded disease an inoculation of the substance will generally cure the disease. The discovery of the cure quickly followed the discovery of the bacilli, and its habitation, and methods of growth.

How Do the Newsboys Manage?

The names of the Russian newspapers are noted for their brevity! and the ease with which English-speaking people may pronounce them. Here are a few specimens: Wjedomosty Gradonatshalstwa, Olonetzkija Goubernskija, Pskoffsky Gorodskoi Listok, Jekaterinoslawsky Listok, Wastotshuoje Objaaflenij, Estlandskija Goubernsk Wjedomosty. The tongue of the newsboy, which is seemingly capable of pronouncing almost everything unintelligible, would certainly require a great deal of twisting to shout the names and latest editions of these papers. Among the various periodicals all over the world there are papers devoted to no less than eighty-two separate and distinct trades, while of class papers and those devoted to religious dogmas, creeds and scientific theories, there are 253 distinct groups. It is an interesting fact, quite worthy of mention, that newspapers of the United States are printed in more languages than those of any other country, no less than twenty-one being used at the present time. In Austria-Hungary sixteen languages are used. In India sixteen, Russia ten, Germany four. The five principal languages used in the world's newspapers in the order of their importance are English, German, French, Spanish and Italian.—Providence Journal.

Why Not More?

There are, it seems, about 300 women undertakers in the United States.

THERE are 1,850 cities and towns in this country which have electric lights.

THE best rubies come from Burmah.

WHERE ARE THEY AT?

THERE'S MUCH WORRY IN THE REPUBLICAN CAMP.

The People Have Become Thoroughly Convinced that Republicans Have Foolish Ideas — Favorable Time to Revise the Tariff—The Pension Blight.

"Where Are They At?"

For four years the Republicans have been trying to convince the people that they were fools. Twice the people have become convinced that the Republicans were fools. The result of a third experiment is scarcely doubtful.

In 1890 the Republicans spent the two months after the passage of the McKinley bill and before the election, in telling the people that high prices was what were needed because "cheap coats made cheap men." The people said "nonsense," and voted accordingly. In 1892 the Republicans had found out to a certainty that protection cheapens goods and lowers prices, besides, of course, raising wages—which is always a part of the regular business of protection. Fearing that the people might be skeptical so soon after 1890, the Republicans got Labor Commissioner Peck of New York to make some brand-new statistics for their especial use. They also accused the foreigner of paying our tariff taxes. Aided by Davenport they supposed they had a "lead-pipe cinch" on New York State. But they didn't. Nor would New York have saved them.

Now, in 1893, with a financial panic on hand due to Republican compromise legislation they have concluded they have just what is needed to save them in 1894. They will call it "the Democratic panic of 1893 due to the fear of free trade."

But now, just as Republicans had come to the unanimous conclusion that this shall be their war cry for 1894, the panic begins to peter out, even while they are practicing up on their war cry, and substantial prosperity is again at hand. As the Democrats have not changed their position on the tariff question, the people have nothing else to credit the prosperity to except the practical certainty that the senate will pass the unconditional repeal bill. Consequently there is much worry in the Republican camp. They are wondering if they must return to the "British gold" and "bloody shirt" which did such effective work previous to 1890. They are undecided and are wondering "where they are at." Some have already taken to the woods; others are burrowing holes in the ground.

Favorable Time for Tariff Revision.

The principal remaining national question affecting business is tariff revision. A right attitude toward this whole subject on the part of manufacturers and all business classes, assumed at the outset of this discussion, would be a great preventive of friction in bringing trade under the new tariff conditions which 1894 will witness. In the first place it should be remembered that no question will remain settled until it is settled right. To aid in determining what a right settlement of this matter is, in the judgment of the American people, it must be kept in mind that the successful party in 1888 was elected upon a pledge of substantial reductions of tariff duties, and that these pledges were disregarded in the passage of the McKinley bill, the opposition party swept the country upon a platform of a revenue tariff.

It is settled, then, that tariff revision must come, and that it must be what we have not seen for more than a generation, to wit, a revision downward. There is no use in resisting this tendency. The most that could be done in that direction would be to obtain some delay in the enactment of the new law. But such delay would be a mistake, for the reason that the country has rarely, if ever before, been in as good shape as it is now for the change that is contemplated. We have just received a check in the matter of national and individual extravagance and in a movement towards financial unsoundness. As a result of this sudden holding up, manufacturing and importing have been reduced substantially to their lowest terms. Prices of all commodities are so low that further declines are hardly to be looked for under any circumstances. Stocks in hand, whether of domestic or imported goods, are below the normal, and everything is snug and ship-shape, and well prepared for any necessary changes. So far from resisting the change in the tariff, therefore, all interested should join in hastening it as much as is consistent with careful and intelligent legislation. — Day Goods Economist.

A Silly Outburst.

Because some producers of perishable Bermuda vegetables testified before the Ways and Means Committee that they had sometimes sold their produce here less the duties, the protection organs break out with the silly old claim that "the foreigner pays the duty." This is Gov. McKinley's favorite bit of demagogic dishonesty when he is on the backwoods stump, but for a newspaper printed within sight of the Custom House to repeat it is a poor tribute to the intelligence of its readers. It is only necessary to repeat the inquiries which we addressed in vain to the Republican speakers and journals last year:

Why, if the foreigner pays the duty, did your Fifty-first Congress stop at a billion dollars in appropriations? Why not spend a billion and a half and fructify the favored land with the tribute of effete despotism? If the foreigner pays the duty why not abolish the internal revenue taxes, which our own people indisputably pay, and raise all our revenues from the helpless producers of the Old World? The duty on pearl buttons is 146 per cent. Does the foreigner pay the duty—in other words, give us the buttons and 46 per cent. in addition in cash? The duty on some grades of cheap flannels is 107 per cent.; on cheap wool yarns 133 per cent.; on cheap blankets 104 per cent.; on cheap hats 105.

Does the foreigner pay the value of these goods and a bonus besides for the privilege of giving them away here? Why do the monopoly-defenders repeat this rubbish? Do they not know that the tariff fight is over, for three years at least, and that McKinleyism is bound to go?—New York World.

The Tariff Hearings Farce.

The ways and means committee granted a few days' hearings on the tariff, and the same old chestnut industries are on hand to tell the committee how necessary it is to continue protection, and what direful things would happen if protection should be abolished and their industries lost to the country.

A man up in Connecticut—Mr. W. O. Witcomb—became convinced, three years ago, that the increasing demand for metallic bedsteads would warrant their manufacture here. He formed a company and began to manufacture them. He tells the committee that he pays his workmen three or four times as much as the workmen are paid abroad and asks that McKinley protection be continued—not for his benefit, of course, but for the benefit of his workmen and of the people who purchase metallic bedsteads. His case is very plain. We can continue his protection and allow our poor people to sleep on the floor; or we can drop his protection and permit them to sleep on good and cheap beds.

Next comes a New York man, a manufacturer of macaroni. He wants the duty of 2 cents per pound to remain on macaroni so that he can continue to pay his sixteen men four times, and his twenty-three girls five and five-eighths times, as much as they would get in Italy. This all looks plausible and the committee doubtless appreciates the unselfish interest which he takes in his thirty-nine employes; though it may have some doubt as to the advisability of continuing to tax our poor people 40 per cent. on all of their macaroni for the benefit of these thirty-nine employes. Next!

The Pension Blight.

"There is one evil about the pension business that I have often noticed, but for which there is no legal remedy," remarked an old pension examiner. "That is that whole families often depend upon a small pension, received by some one in the family, for their entire support. Now pensions are not given to encourage idleness, and yet such seems to be the fact in many instances I have noticed myself, and in perhaps thousands of cases that I know nothing about. Widows receiving pensions struggle to support themselves and sons and daughters upon the meager income, when the latter ought to have employment. I have often seen a whole family go to draw the quarterly pension, showing the interest they take in the matter. I have often been amazed at the sight of boys and girls who are growing up in idleness, because their fathers are dead and their mothers are weak and indulgent and do not have the proper influence over them. You would be surprised to know how many families depend upon pensions, and how many members of families only seek work when the pension is withdrawn.

"I know of a particular case where an old soldier, with several sons and daughters, some time ago got a pension, and also about $2,000 back pension money. The family regarded that amount as a small fortune, and began to live at an extravagant rate. Three of the sons and one daughter lost their places on one pretense or another, and depended on their father for support. The two sons and the daughter at work married, and then the family was indeed in bad shape. The boys had grown to be lazy and trifling, and the daughter at home was not much better. When places were secured for them they would not hold on to them, and the consequence was a family of six persons lived on an income of not much over $20 a month. They lived in four small rooms, and from all accounts were continually quarreling and running in debt. When the boys were asked why they did not work more, they would remark that 'the old man drew a pension and kept the family.' This is only one instance of many. Now pensions are not given to encourage idleness, and there ought to be a remedy somewhere for such a condition of affairs. The legal remedy, if any, lies with the state, and yet it cannot interfere except in extreme cases."—Cincinnati Times Star (Rep.)

Pearl Button Men Active.

The fact that the Democratic party means business on the tariff question is coming home as never before to high protectionists. The "National Association of Pearl Button Manufacturers" is giving some strong advice to pearl button manufacturers. It tells them to "Prepare your figures," and adds:

"We have already stated, and we repeat, that a reasonable request for protection, sufficient to cover the difference between the cost of labor here and in Europe, will doubtless be listened to by the present Congress, but no excessive duties, the necessity for which is founded on careless and extravagant management of any industry, are likely to have a place in the new tariff. Any efforts to obtain such protective duties will be energy misdirected and time wasted, and the pearl button industry is in no condition to pay for indulgences in such costly mistakes."

We think they are right in regard to excessive duties, though they insult the Democrats by saying that a reasonable request for protection will be listened to, after that party has denounced protection as a fraud and robbery. If the Democrats fulfill their pledges, as is probable, the pearl button men may also waste time and misdirect their energies in the collection of figures relating to cost of production. The people don't ask, and don't care, what it costs to produce goods here or abroad. They ask for low prices, that is all.

To Increase Our Trade.

Senator Sherman says: "We ought to encourage in every possible way the exportation of our products, although I do not see precisely how it can be done." Two or three ways of increasing our foreign trade ought to be obvious. It is an old saying that "those who want friends must show themselves friendly." If we want more trade we must show a disposition to trade on fair terms. No nation in Europe will buy of us if it can get what it wants elsewhere on anything like as favorable terms. This disposition has been created by our hostile tariff laws, which were avowedly framed to keep out foreign products.

It takes two to trade. Commerce between countries is based on mutual advantage in the exchange of commodities. How can we expect to "increase the exportation of our products," except as foreign nations must have food, while we raise high the barriers of our prohibitory tariffs, based on the idea that "commerce is war"—that trade must be like a jug handle, "all on one side?" One other way to increase our exports is to untax the raw materials of our manufacturers, placing them on equal terms with their foreign competitors as to the cost of production. Unshackle commerce and it will take care of itself.—New York World.

McKinley's Neglect.

It is quite evident that McKinley has failed to take advantage of experience. He is still prating of the tax-paying foreigner, who ought to be sued, if the McKinley theory is correct, for permitting our customs revenues to fall off.

Can Cullom Explain?

Senator Cullom says the McKinley law is a prosperity producer, but neglects to state why it is not doing business at the present time. It is still on the statute books, and is sure to be there for nearly a year to come.

A BUSINESS man of Colfax, Wash., proposes to stock that country with Chinese pheasants. A large poultry house has been built at his home and he has hatched out forty young birds on the place. Many more eggs are now in his incubator. His hens have laid over 300 eggs since last fall, but none of them has yet offered to sit.

DIOCLETIAN, after his abdication, spent his leisure in gardening. "If you could see the cabbages I raise," he said to a deputation, "you would not ask me to resume the crown."

BOOMERS rushed into the Cherokee strip last Saturday at noon, at the firing of a gun. But many have come back as they could not find homes to suit, the land being dry. They suffered a good deal.

INDIANA Day of the fair is set for Sept. 27. Chicago papers say we had to wait till the pawpaws were ripe. Chicago papers may be smart, and smart people would know it takes frosts—several of them to ripen that uninviting fruit.

THERE was a train robbery in Michigan last Friday, in the mining country near Houghton, at about ten in the forenoon. The express car was robbed of about $75,000 that was being taken up to the Calumet & Hecla mines to pay off the miners.

DR. KEELEY was at Chicago last week on Friday, that being "Keeley Day." About 10,000 Keeley graduates met there and had a grand reunion, and listened to a short speech by Dr Keeley. People are only beginning to realize the priceless value of his discovery.

WILD-EYED yawpers who have been stirring the people up to make war on the banks, are to a great extent to blame for the scarcity of money. People thus frightened took their deposits out of the banks, and that made the banks nervous, and they did not dare to loan any more money. In this way alone nearly half a million dollars in ready cash, was suddenly taken out of circulation in this one county (DeKalb) alone.

ELECTIONS will be held in thirteen states this fall—Iowa, Kentucky, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Maryland, Massachusetts, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Virginia and Wisconsin, all Nov, 7. Iowa, Massachusetts, Ohio, Wisconsin and Virginia alone will elect full tickets. New York elects both branches of the legislature and all the state officers with exception of governor, and also delegates to the constitutional convention. The remaining eight states will choose judges or legislatures. Only three of these legislatures will elect United States senators —Iowa, a successor to James F. Wilson; Kentucky, a successor to William Lindsay, and Virginia, a successor to Eppa Hunton, appointed to fill out the unexpired term left vacant by the death of Senator Barbour.

D. A. FAWCETT, of the Lagrange Democrat, was last week arrested on a charge of criminal libel, preferred by Mr. Machan, county superintendent. Mr. Fawcett had published an article in the Democrat. charging Mr. Machan with writing a letter of recommendation for Mr. Morse, of the firm of Batten & Morse, the men spoken of in the COURIER last week, as trying to rope in the trustees and induce them to buy apparatus, etc. The Democrat claimed that this letter of introduction was the means of getting three trustees to buy a set of maps. Just what the merits of this case may be the COURIER cannot say. We have always been on friendly terms with Mr. Fawcett, but have often felt that he was taking great risks in various controversies he has had. If, in this case, he made a statement he cannot sustain, it is liable to make a bad case for him. He gave bonds for appearance at court, and so was in custody of the sheriff but a few hours.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our many thanks to our kind neighbors and friends who so willingly assisted us during the long suffering and final sickness, death and burial of our beloved son Albert. Also for the many beautiful floral pieces.

How to woo Sleep on Hot Nights.

Those annoyed and wearied by insomnia these hot summer nights can relieve their sufferings by following a few simple instructions. First of all, go to bed clean. No dirty face, hands or feet. Wet the top of the head with cold water; wet the wrists and bathe the feet in warm or tepid water, in which some salt has been mixed. Dampen a handkerchief or small piece of linen, fold lengthwise and place over the eyes when reposing. Don't think of business or household cares. Leave thoughts of notes, mortgages, soups, puddings, etc., on the outside of the mosquito net, and sleep will come without any wooing. Try it and be convinced.—Ex.

The County Debt.

DeKalb county has no bonded debt and pays no tribute to untaxed eastern capitalists. Her indebtedness is in the form of county orders varying in amount from $6 to $900, and is mainly held by her own citizens.

The sum is somewhat in excess of $60,000 and the oldest order dates from March, 1892, or nearly nineteen months. No interest is paid till the order is called and redeemed.

For more than five years no warrant had been sold for less than par and not until the last three months, which have been marked by a marvelous financial depression, have orders been obtainable at a discount.

Even now, there are not $1,500 for sale, and of this sum, not one-third can be bought at one cent off. Several orders have been bought of strangers and contractors who were ignorant of their status and conceded to an extortion of 5 per cent discount. Possibly $1,000 have been sold at 98c. and the rest have been taken as issued, at par.

On or before Oct. 15 a call will be made by the county treasurer which will redeem up to 15 months, pay off $10,000, and make a strong demand for beyond the supply at par value.

Censure of commissioners for existence of the debt is unjust. People cannot have stone abutments, iron bridges, cement sidewalks and steam heating apparatus without paying for them. Comparatively little of county expense is actually within control of the Board, and of this portion their action has been marked by economy and prudence. No one can imagine the pressure brought to bear to induce contracts and few imagine the skill shown in trying to beat the county.

The heavy expense of courts, criminals, salaries and ditches cannot be reduced one cent by the Board, and every effort to cut extortion is met by a howl of complaint and fault-finding.

The levy has been raised to 55c, per $100, township trustees have carefully reduced their levies, and with the lessened expenditure, actual and prospective, the debt a year from now will be greatly reduced, and there will be no chance for the speculator to discount the short time orders.

Give the commissioners their due for conscientious discharge of duty. You in their place would probably do no better. Second the effort to meet present demands with present payments, since the future will have its own demands. Do not ask expensive improvements and then denounce the Board for the debt, and in good time the former will be made and the latter extinguished.

In this connection, we wish to refer to the efforts of the Dispatch to discredit the county and cause loss to it and the holders of orders. It last week took great pains to say, "orders are worth only 95 cents," a statement it knows to be false, as only one or two men, who were in sore need of money, took that price A few took 98, and the others sold at par.

Water from the Jordan River

Of all strange articles that pass through the U. S. custom houses from time to time, perhaps none has, of late years, attracted so much attention as seven barrels of water from the baptismal pool of the Jordan river. This remarkable shipment was consigned by United States Consul at Jerusalem to the Jerusalem and the Crucifixion Panorama, on Wabash Avenue, Chicago, where it has just been delivered.

Eight large casks were started by camel train overland from the Jordan to Joppa, the Joppa of Bible days, but one camel with its burden was lost by falling over a rocky precipice, so but seven barrels reached their destination. The announcement of the arrival of this shipment by the New York and Chicago papers brought scores of people to the great panorama, all anxious to procure some of this remarkable liquid; some wanted it for healing purposes, some as souvenirs, others for baptismal ceremonies. Mr. Gross, the manager of this remarkable and enterprising religious exhibition, said the idea of the importation was to present at a stated time small bottles of this water to visitors to this magnificent religious exhibition which comprises not only the panorama of Jerusalem and the Crucifixion, but also the world-famous painting, "Christ's Triumphal Entry into Jerusalem."

Died.

William Ray, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Marvin, Tuesday Sept. 19, '93, at the age of 19 months. The funeral was Wednesday forenoon at the residence conducted by Rev. J. N. Wilson. His remains were laid to rest in Woodlawn cemetery.

And now farewell our little Ray,
From this vain earth now passed away.
On snowy wings you take your flight,
To that bright shore where comes no night,

Butler's Columbian Day.

On a World's Fair Drunk.

Hank Little, who has for years been the editor of the Garrett Clipper, and as such been posing among the fraternity as a newspaper man, had continued this latest drunk up to some time last week. On Friday we saw him in disgusting shape, sitting near one of the saloons and playing the statesman to a few listeners who were trying to get onto his thick articulation. And it was noticed also that the men he has been boasting of in the Clipper, as his "friends," and as "Brandon democrats," were not in sight. They should have hustled for a stretcher, on which to carry "their friend" to his home. And this is the fellow that claims he has the democracy in the hollow of his hand. They ought to see him when he is on these bums. It was a regular World's fair drunk, "a jag of all nations."

Among the incidents of childhood that stand out in bold relief, as our memory reverts to the days when we were young, none are more prominent than severe sickness. A little boy of Mrs. McDonald's living near here, fell against a red hot stove and was fearfully burned. It soon removed all the fire and eased the pain, and in ten days the boy was well, no trace of the scar remaining. J. D. McLaren, Keysport, Clinton county, Ill. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Date of Waterloo Indiana District Fair, Obtober 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13, 1893.

J. R. Steves went up to Angola Tuesday, taking Mr. Purington's little boy home.

This week the days and nights become equal again. The days have already shortened very plainly.

Mrs. Elza Shaffer, of Albion, is here visiting C. C. Shaffer's family. She reports the people at Albion all right.

Dr. Johnston, dentist, has the new method of filling teeth without pain, as well as painless extraction of teeth.

Willie and Johnnie Coffinberry went to Chicago Tuesday, where they will be met by their father and go to see the fair.

Mathew Kline and Minnie E Searfoss were united in marriage by Rev. A. S. Wooton at the M. E. parsonage on the evening of Sept. 19.

Mr. Stoner and wife have returned to their home in Colorado, after a visit of some weeks with his mother, Mrs. J. R. Moody, and other friends.

Ernest Sheets and wife are at the fair now, as are also John Hebel and wife, Hugh Culbertson and wife and Mrs. GeorgeGrund. They will remain a week or two.

L. J. Miller, the veteran wheat buyer was paying 62 cents for wheat Tuesday. That shows some improvement. He believes wheat will not again be so low as it has been.

Mr. and Mrs. Durrie of Bryan, Ohio, are in the city, the guests of Mr. Hartman's family. They are here to be present at the wedding of Mabel Hartman and David Hodge.

Dr. George Murphy, of Leo, did the handsome thing by the COURIER cash box last Thureday. He has the reputation, too, of being one of the best physician in that part of the country.

J. R Duncan and sons moved this week to Elkhart, where he expects to take charge of a large planing mill. The sons will probably be in the employ of the Hornberger Brothers in their factory. We regret to see them leave Auburn but hope they will be prosperous where they go.

Bernie Trentman and Miss Jennie Girardot were married last week, Tuesday evening, at the home of Mr and Mrs. Justin Girardo, the parents of the bride. We believe they will go to housekeeping in Hartford, where he is at present employed. The COURIER sends its best wishes for their future.

The First National Bank is making some valuable improvements on its building. The south interior wall will be removed and the stairway taken out, and the west front will have a beautiful and expensive decorated plate glass front. That prominent front will be greatly improved and beautified.

We are under obligations to some friend in Ashley for an invitation to attend the opening ball of the Terpsichorean Club of that place next Monday evening, Sept. 25. They will have the Italian orchestra from Ft. Wayne, and take supper at the Windsor Hotel. We have no doubt they will have a pleasant evening.

We place this week on our exchange list, the Bryan Press, a paper we used to know some years ago, and are glad to find it improves with age. It is a nine column folio and well printed and evidently well patronized. But for its good looks we suppose we must credit Harry Hallam, who is now in charge, and we must say, it does him credit.

James Gilliland we are glad to state, is improving finely, being now able to sit up. It will be remembered that Dr. Buchtel amputated his foot for necrosis of bone and gangrene. This had troubled Mr. Gilliland for years, and the perfect cure, that is now assured will be a great relief to him. He will probably be able to use a cork foot and get around better than hehas for many years.

John Leasure and family, of Angola, came down Sunday to spend the day with his mother. He says the hard times have not been felt up there as they have here. At this place, of course, there was a greater difference, for when factories had to reduce their force because orders came slower and smaller, many were thrown out of employment, and of course they felt the stress of hard times.

John Stahl and wife and his sister Ida of Chicago were here a few days this week. Sunday they had a family reunion at the home of T. J. Cuppy and their father G. W. Stahl, at which were also present Mrs. Cuppy, and Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Urie of Butler, and Mrs. Belle Humphreys of Portland, Oregon. All the family were there except Jack who resides in the south and Emma whose home is at Portland, Oregon. And by the heartiness of the laughing, we know they enjoyed the meeting.

The Hudson World is now divided between Hudson and Ashley, giving each town a half interest in its columns. As it has but two pages printed at home, this arrangement gives one page to each, and seems like a very fair thing to do. But the best thing of all would have been a consolidation of the two towns from the start, under one corporation and one name. Thousands of dollars in extra expenses of many kinds would have been saved for each town, and property would have risen faster, for all the energy now used on two towns, would have been used for the benefit of one. The people up there will see this some day.

We have often advised the Clipper to use only its old method of getting items, that is, re-write them from other county papers and give out to their readers the next week as original matter. Whenever they leave this old reliable plan, they get wild. Last week's report of the train robbery is to the point. They had it that the robbery occurred "about two miles west of Kendallville," "where the train slowed up for the Grand Rapids crossing," "the engineer was shot dead in his tracks," "the robbers went through the express car, securing about $30,000." "Next they made a circuit of the coaches, terrifying the passengers, securing money and valuables to the amount of $30,000 more." To give an idea how wild the above is, we need only say that the Grand Rapids road makes its crossing right in the town of Kendallville, not far from its main street. The other items are about as sensible. As we have often said, Garrett needs a newspaper, and needs it bad. Who will be the lucky man to give the only full fledged city in this county, a newspaper?

A. B. Richards and wife and wife visited her father, Wm. Buss, in Fairfield yesterday.

George Lee, the Chinese laundryman, South Main, will do you good work. Try him. 37 38

Miss Emma Groscop is back from her Chicago trip. She found the fair a wonderful display.

Charles Marvin's little child that has been sick some time, died Tuesday, and was buried Wednesday.

Chas. Schnell is repapering and refitted his grocery store thoroughly, and will soon have it as neat as can be.

Only a few sewing machines left. The price moved them. Secure a bargain.

W. H. KIBLINGER.

August Bartels, superintendent of the County Home has been quite sick, something like typhoid fever, but is now improving.

Mr. Caruth's two sisters from Pennsylvania, who have been here a few weeks, have gone up to Chicago to see the great fair.

If you appreciate a strictly square exhibition without gambling devices to trick the people out of their money, go to the Kendallville fair.

Samuel Jones, of Butler, accompanied by Mrs. Jones, drove through here last Saturday. He had been delivering books, and came this way home.

The Glazier Hotel will put up an extensive and beautiful veranda at the front adding to the comfort of the guests, and the beauty of the building.

MARRIED: At the residence of the officiating minister, Rev. W. L. Meese, Sept. 13, 1893, Wilber Hawver to Cora Houser, daughter of Henry Houser of Butler township.

Mrs. Delameter and daughter, Emma, have been here for a few days, visiting the Ralston families, she being a sister of the late Mrs. S. W. Ralston. Their home is at Fishkill on the Hudson.

The Postal Telegraph poles are to be changed in town from Seventh street to Sixth, the next street north. Seventh has so many trees and they are getting so tall, that they interfere with the line.

Rain began gently again Monday morning. And then come to think of it, this was the week for the Angola fair. It is pretty sure to rain that week. Yet they manage to have a good fair in spite of bad weather.

Mrs. Martin Reinhart of Waterloo was here Tuesday. Her husband has the cider mill at their home at the south edge of town, but they find fruit rather scarce this year. She will also be remembered as Ida Rohm, formerly a pupil in the Waterloo schools.

Trustee Joseph Walters reports a big amount of ditch repairing done in his township this season. They never had so much done, nor so well done. And the farmers did their own work, each in general digging, his own share, a plan that always insures better and more prompt results.

A picnic, to which all persons who are interested in the subject of Divine Healing, are cordially invited, will be held at the fair ground east of Auburn, on Saturday, Sept. 23, beginning at 10 a. m. Mr. and Mrs. Dudley, evangelists from Grand Rapids, Mich., will be present and address the meeting. Bring your dinners.

Mr. Merica informs us that his daughter, Stella, is now in Chicago, where she will remain some time, under the instruction of Prof. Jacobsohn, probably the best violin instructor in this country. She was so fortunate as to pass an examination by him so as to enter the class under his instruction. This is of itself an honor, and we feel like congratulating her on her good fortune.

The band came out last Thursday evening and gave an open air concert at several important corners and business points—including of course, the COURIER office and Kiblinger corner. Their big band wagon seems to be very handy for them, though to an outsider it looks a little awkward. If the horses should run away the boys would have a lively time "getting out of the band-box."

Hundreds of teams in town Saturday. We counted 71 on the two sides of the public square, and there would have been more had the square been larger. The horses stood dry shod on the heavy stone pavement made for them by the commissioners. We still insist we have many good things in the way of improvements in this county, which, while they cost money, we would hate to do without.

A letter from Geo. A. Kraus, one of our old Auburn boys, leaves him in a pleasant location in Chicago, in the part near the World's fair grounds, where he is furnishing rooms to fair visitors. This is at 1246, Sixtieth street, one block from the State street cable line, so that it is easy to get to the fair or up town. Sixtieth street is one of the streets that runs east and stops at the fair ground. His rooms, he says, have been occupied right along. We are glad to hear that he is succeding so well.

R. B. McCann of Ligonier, last week bought out Thomas Brother's Bakery, taking possession Thursday evening. The business of course goes right on as before. Phin Gibson, the veteran baker. is employed there now, which insures good work always. Mr. McCann comes well reccommended, and we have no doubt he will make the business prosper from the start. He is a gentleman of pleasant address and high character and will make his business prosperous. He asks the people to try him.

Charlie Comeeky brought us a nice lot of his choice potatoes. a week or two ogo, and we were not to say a word till we could "boil some with the hides on," that being the highest test of the cooking quality of a potato, at least that is the Irish Idea, and Charlie somehow noticed that the editor was "part Irish too." Well, we have tested them, and "they grade up to 100 in the shade," or in any other way. They are an excellent kind—the "Freeman," that took the prize at the Auburn fair a year ago. He will sell them for seed.

The races at the Kendallville fair will be honest trials of speed. The public will not be disappointed.

Miss Stella Hague and Miss Mary Teeters were home over Sunday. They are both teaching in the public schools of Garrett.

Mr. Russell, the new proprietor at the Salyer restaurant, is taking to business like a veteran. We hope to see him prosper.

The Gastown electric light is a "sooner." It goes out sooner than people out that way desire, very frequently before nine o'clock.

The Viennese fill their cigars with wool, hair, etc. Kessler Bros. fill the Young America with pure Havana.

A meeting of the stockholders of the fair is called for Saturday of this week, Sept 23, at Gandy's Hall at 1 p. m. to see about the affairs of the society. All should come.

M. E. Griswold, of Montpelier, is now receiver of the Monitor Co., instead of Mr. McKay, whose poor health compelled him to retire. They are finishing up uncompleted jobs now.

Here is a rare chance to make money. The Auburn Laundry is for sale. Whoever buys it can make money. If you do not understand the business, you can get expert help. Call at laundry. 36-8.

Amos Walsworth is at the Hicksville fair this week showing his fine sheep. He will likely attend a number of fairs, as he generally does, for he has been very successful in taking good premiums.

A crowd of horsemen attending the Cook & Whitby's circus at Louisville recently, declared the English Derby races that they give, the most exciting they ever saw, being absolutely true to life—something never attempted before under canvas.

A letter from W. H. Bacher, brings word that he has moved to Mt. Pleasant, Isabella Co., Mich., where he has a good position. We are glad to hear this, as he has had nothing but bad luck since leaving Auburn. In fact he now wishes he had staid here.

Mr. J. Freeland of Washington, D. C., has been visiting the family of W. H. Kiblinger this week, he being a relative. Mr. Freeland has been employed in the pension department some years, and is in that division that has the work of looking over cases that are of doubtful legality. He says much careless work has been permitted under the act of '90 which the Department is trying to get into better shape.

Rev. Mr. Vipper of Boston, has been speaking here in the interest of the W. C. T. U. He spoke Thursday evening at the Baptist church; Friday evening at the Lutheran church; Saturday evening and also Sunday forenoon at the Presbyterian church. Sunday he spoke on the public square at 5 p. m., and that evening again at the Baptist church. The meetings continued in about this way all the week making about twenty speeches in all.

John Weimer, who resides northeast of here, in Grant township, was here last Friday with potatoes on sale. He makes that his special business. Last year he raised 1,500 bushels, and this year will have at least 2,000 bushels. As the price has been good both seasons it will be seen that Mr. Weimer has made farming a success. He was selling that day at 60 cents. His farm was at first, a poor one, but he has it all right now.

Laparte Argus—Mr. Riddell, the man who handles grains at the New Carlisle freight house, met with a singular and painful accident last Thursday. He was moving some wheat in a hand cart when the cart became over balanced and as the handle flew up it struck him in the mouth. It tore his cheeks loose from the bones and broke both his jaws. The force lifted him to the ceiling where his head struck a nail, but it bent and followed the outside of the skull bone and thereby saved his life.

A peculiar circumstance is reported in connection with the Lake Shore stock train which went into Toledo the other day. When the cargo was counted one car was found to be two steers short. A couple of messages were sent back inquiring about them, and section men were started out to look for the steers. One was found grazing along the track near New Carlisle, and the other near Terre Coupee. They had jumped from the train while it was going at a high speed, but were not injured.—Ex.

A hearty welcome should be extended to the famous Dr. Wau-Ke-Maugh, the Indian Doctor, who will be at the Hotel Swineford Thursday, Sept. 28, where he will be prepared to heal the sick. The Doctor has become the most popular and successful specialist in the state, through curing cases given up by others. He can locate diseases and tell how one feels without asking questions, and one who can do this can cure, as he never treats the wrong disease. Another reason he is more successful than others is that he only uses the roots, barks, herbs, etc. placed in the ground by an all-wise Providence for the benefit of suffering humanity. Terms, $3 to $5 per month.

UNCLE SAM mentally declares that the next World's Fair shall have no Board of Lady Managers.

THE Bermuda onion is all right, but when it comes to the Bermuda storms—well, they're rather strong.

CHICAGO NEWS: With the cholera in New York and the yellow fever in Florida, Chicago should put up with its attack of lady managers.

IF there are lady bank cashiers in Finland it must be an awful scandal when the cashier elopes with a needy young man and a part of the deposits.

ONE of the carrier pigeons released at the World's Fair fluttered into a South Side chimney and down into an unused cooking-stove. It was perhaps making a wild effort to make a pigeon pie of itself.

DEHORNING cattle seems to have become a permanent institution. One man is engaged in breeding the horns off, and now the United States Bureau of Animal Industry promulgates a formula for altogether preventing their growth.

AMERICAN FARMER: It does not need a very keen vision to see that the result of the present low prices for wheat means that the American farmer will in the future put in more corn and less wheat. We are competing with the round world in producing wheat; not so with corn.

AN exchange publishes the astonishing information that a stupendous group of black spots on the sun is "easily visible to the naked eye when the latter is protected by a dark glass." With such protection the eye would no more be "naked" than if the observer were looking through a magnifying glass.

A ONE-HORSE craze has taken hold of those of a speculative turn in New York, on the hay exportation question. They got the idea that heavy profits were made in exporting this article, and all sorts of people, doctors, lawyers, preachers, etc., became amateur exporters. Now a few figures and the exercise of a little common sense would have shown them that there could be no great thing in it, but they took a reporter's theory instead of practical figures and facts.

THE Louisiana Experiment Station has been devoting itself to a careful trial and analysis of peas. It has long been known that peas were valuable as revivifiers of the soil and would do excellent work where clover was, for some reason, impracticable. The result arrived at, however, is likely to cause peas to be raised more generally than ever before. It would be a good plan for each farmer to try a small patch and satisfy himself that peas are suitable for his particular soil.

WE cannot approve of this Midway Plaisance method of collecting back salaries from a theatrical manager. The story is that a lot of Bedouins, who had received no salaries for three weeks for their highly interesting performances, repaired on horseback to the tent of Manager Hastab Abaled and, fastening a rope about his body, dragged him at a gallop about the Plaisance until he was lacerated and bleeding and badly used up. He pleaded the stringency of money and the general scarcity of currency, but all to no avail. In behalf of theatrical managers we must insist that the Bedouin method shall not be adopted in this country.

SIOUX CITY JOURNAL: By no possibility can prices of farm produce go so low that the farmers will not this year make profit. The farmers will this year be the most prosperous class in the community. They are so today. The banks are making no profits now. Most of them are actually losing money. The sky is dark over manufacturers. They are compelled to stop work, throwing multitudes of employed out of wages. Simply to stop operations for a short period means great loss to many manufacturers. The farmers, as a class, are getting the best of it. Even if prices of their staple crops should go a good deal lower than they are now, the fact remains that the prices of most of the wares for which the crops will be exchanged must also go lower. The farmer is the man to be envied.

AN Australian communistic society has secured some land in Paraguay, in South America, where the plan of holding all things in common will be tried. This idea is in most cases the result of sheer laziness. Men who get to thinking how easily with very little work they could get all the necessaries of eating and drinking and lodging fail to remember that men and women content merely with these revert quickly to barbarism and savagery. The uplifting of mankind comes from larger rather than restricted wants, and is best gained by each man working with his fellows mainly for his own advantage. As he becomes more civilized he finds his own happiness involved in the advancement of those associated with him. Communism tries to reverse this process. It would begin by striking out the selfishness that has given mankind most of its advancement in civilization.

TO ALLOW Mrs. Rice to be mobbed without interference and to arrest her the next night when she attempted to preach is a fair specimen of police methods in Chicago. Mrs. Rice and her husband probably did more harm than good by their out-door revivals. Their meetings were usually wound up in a row. But if the Rices were to be arrested for disturbing the peace why were not the hoodlums, thugs and toughs who pelted them with decayed fruit taken into custody? Why does an inspector of police laugh at a citizen demanding protection from mob violence? What is he paid for? Have the police of Chicago falllen so low in their own estimation that the idea of applying to them for protection strikes them as ridiculous? If this man Lewis, who disgraces the star he wears, would pay some attention to the thug whisky shops, crap games and skin gambling houses within a stone's throw of the Desplaines street station—all of which institutions are reported to be suitably "protected"—he might change the public belief as to the length of his ears and as to his general worthlessness as a police officer.

WHILE the fireworks displays at the Fair are an attractive feature of the Exposition there are disquieting rumors that they do not put much money in the treasury. On the contrary, it is said that they have a directly opposite effect. The best view of the pyrotechnics is to be had from the lake, and the thrifty owners of excursion boats have taken advantage of the fact to draw crowds to their vessels. Passengers pay for the boat ride, and get the fireworks display free. The boats steam down to a point opposite the Exposition grounds and there anchor, while from their decks the excursionists view pleasantly and economically the flight of the rockets, the bursting of the bombs and the glories of the set pieces. When the show is over they are carried back to the city comfortably and expeditiously, without having to scramble for seats in the Illinois Central cars or on the elevated road. They have had the whole entertainment free without any of the discomforts attendant upon a visit to the grounds. In view of these facts the Council of Administration might well consider the advisability of discontinuing the fireworks. It is well enough to furnish entertainment for those who pay for it, but the Fair is not a purely philanthropic institution, and the propriety of giving free shows for the benefit of the owners of excursion boats and their patrons is open to discussion.

ONE of the most discouraging features of modern civilization is the tendency of the vulgar mob to hoot at and deride the efforts of advanced minds in the direction of higher culture. This disposition was manifested at Roby, Ind., recently, where an assemblage had gathered to assist at a discussion between Profs. Creedon and Greggains. "It was," says a writer describing the gathering, "the most refined audience that has been seen at Roby." The surroundings were intellectual and æsthetic. We are assured by the writer referred to that "the rough-tough element was conspicuous by its absence," and, further, that such noted scientists and literati as Evan Lewis the strangler, the redoubtable Parson Davies, Joe. Choynski, and Mose Gunst, of San Francisco, each with a party of friends, occupied boxes. It might reasonably have been expected that in the presence of such a gathering the hoodlum element would have shrunk away abashed. But was it so? On the contrary, we read that while preparations for the debate were in progress the natives of the vicinity manifested their disapproval by "a vigorous fusillade of rocks that rattled against the walls," and that during the discussion of the ninth proposition, during which Prof. Creedon was most forcible and convincing, "another gang of interlopers was caught and expelled, creating considerable uproar." Not satisfied with these disorderly proceedings, the sans culottes on the outside attempted to batter down the doors, to the consternation of the seekers after truth gathered inside, and the debate, which terminated in favor of Prof. Creedon, closed amid a tumult of whoops, howls, and unseemly personal encounters. Such an incident is most discouraging to those who have entertained the belief that the race was steadily advancing and warrants a repetition of the historic query of Truthful James: "Is our civilization a failure and is the Caucasian played out?" with a strong presumption in favor of the affirmative.

Telephones in a Storm.

A celebrated English oculist warns the public against the use of the telephone during a thunderstorm, and relates an incident that occurred to a friend of his who went to the telephone for the purpose of acquainting the central exchange at a distant city that a storm was approaching and the instrument would not be available until it was over. The moment he put his ear to the telephone a flash occurred, and he received a blow of such severity that he was sent across the small chamber against the opposite wall. Otherwise—beyond the temporary but very rude shock, which he described as "a severe box on the ear"—he was unhurt. In this respect he was more fortunate than an artilleryman who, while using the telephone in the field during some recent military maneuvers, was struck dead by a powerful current of electricity which passed over the telephone.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

WILD RUSH FOR LAND.

CHEROKEE STRIP BESIEGED BY THOUSANDS.

Unrivalled Scenes Before the Opening—Lines of Applicants Numbering Thousands—Characteristics of Their Future Home—Fair as the Garden of the Lord.

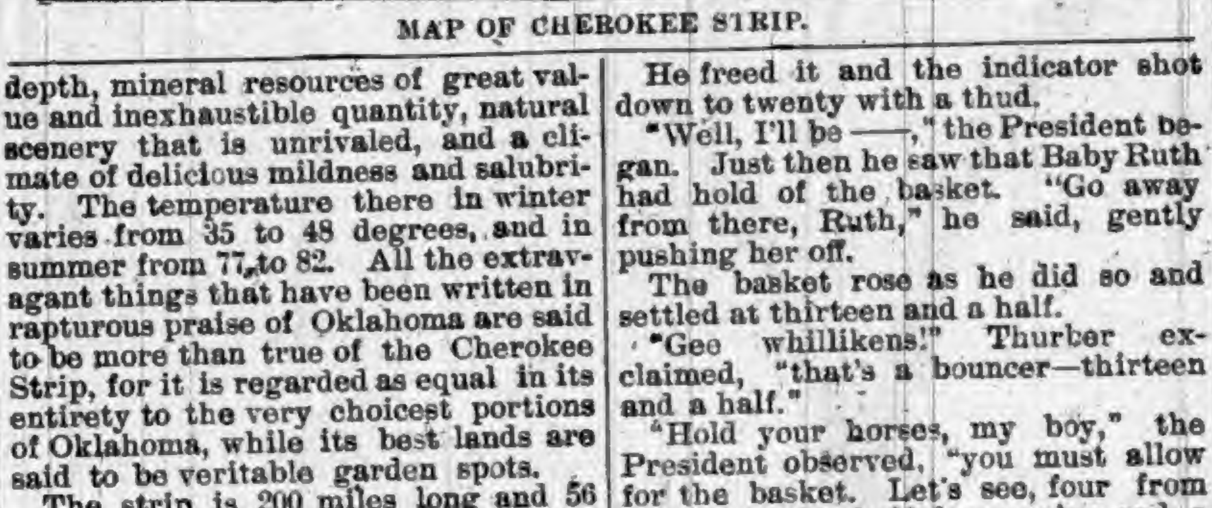
Any Way to Get There.

Talk about "rushes" for free land! The scenes just enacted at the opening of the Cherokee Strip surpassed anything of the kind ever known. For a week a constantly growing crowd surged about the registration booths; for no one could secure land without having first registered. Men, women and children, to the number of 20,000 or 25,000, formed in lines and remained there day and night; many were overcome by the heat and dust; some died from exhaustion. Anything eatable commanded World's Fair prices, and water was 10 cents per cup. Still the mass of humanity waited and grew, restrained from premature encroachment by United States marshals and cordons of soldiers. There were half a dozen places for registration along the northern boundary of the Strip, and the scene at one was but a duplicate of the others.

When the last moment arrived, and the word "Go" was given, with a yell that tore a hole in the heavens the crowd started. Some on horseback, some afoot, some with wheelbarrows loaded with goods, some on bicycles, and thousands in the picturesque prairie schooners.

Flowing with Milk and Honey.

Comparatively little is known of the Cherokee Strip or "Outlet" by the average American, despite the fact that it lies almost in the very midst of the nation, at the thresholds of five great States of the Union—Missouri Kansas, Arkansas, Colorado, and Texas. And yet it is pronounced by experienced judges to be the finest body of land of its size on the whole American continent, with soil of surpassing richness and depth, mineral resources of great value and inexhaustible quantity, natural scenery that is unrivaled, and a climate of delicious mildness and salubrity. The temperature there in winter varies from 35 to 48 degrees, and in summer from 77 to 82. All the extravagant things that have been written in rapturous praise of Oklahoma are said to be more than true of the Cherokee Strip, for it is regarded as equal in its entirety to the very choicest portions of Oklahoma, while its best lands are said to be veritable garden spots.



MAP OF CHEROKEE STRIP.

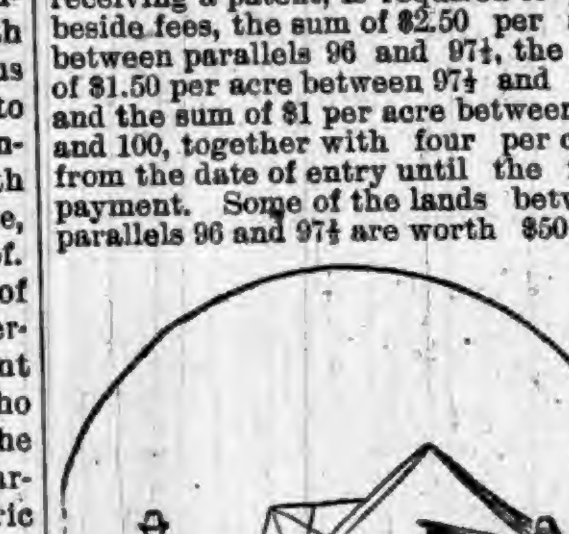
The strip is 200 miles long and 56 miles wide. It lies between the 96th and 100th parallels of west longitude, with the southern border line of Kansas as its northern boundary and the Creek country and the Territory of Oklahoma as its southern. Topographically it is rolling, broken by hills and uplands and interspersed with valleys and Eden-like bottoms. Its many water courses are skirted with fine timber, oak, walnut, cedar, ash, beech, and hickory. The soil of the bottom lands and prairies is soft and loamy, black as ink, and of marvelous fertility. Upon the ridges and divides the land is not so well adapted to agriculture, but as the forest growth is slight they furnish splendid grazing pastures for sheep and cattle, being profusely clothed with succulent "bunch grass." Owing to this self-cured "bunch grass" and to the mildness of the climate and the abundance of water, the hilly regions are claimed by old sheep-growers to afford the best sheep country in the world.

Indian Neighbors.

Prospective settlers in the strip may now prepare to get acquainted with the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws and other tribes or nations of Indians in the Territory, who, with the white homesteaders of Oklahoma, will be their nearest neighbors. They are as tribes exceedingly wealthy, and are now rapidly adopting American manners, customs, usages and garments. The Cherokees number about 20,000, the Choctaws 16,000, the Creeks 15,000 and the Cheyennes and Arapahoes 7,000, and all the other tribes 22,000, making altogether 80,000 Indians resident in the Indian Territory.

The price to be paid the Cherokees by the government is $8,595,736. There being 8,144,682 acres of the land, the net price per acre is $1.05.

Each settler on the new lands, before receiving a patent, is required to pay, beside fees, the sum of $2.50 per acre between parallels 96 and 97½, the sum of $1.50 per acre between 97½ and 98½, and the sum of $1 per acre between 98½ and 100, together with four per cent. from the date of entry until the final payment. Some of the lands between parallels 96 and 97½ are worth $50 per acre in the wild state. They are splendidly watered and within easy distance of several thriving towns in Kansas and Arkansas, and every foot of it is capable of cultivation.



LAND OFFICE.

PITIABLE SCENES.

Good Work of the Children's Aid Society—Help It Along.

One of the most touching sights on the streets of Chicago is the too common one of a poor woman with her little one in her arms, hungry, but unable to buy food, and without any prospect of work. The office of the Children's Aid Society at room 510, 167 Dearborn street, presented a few days ago, a much similar scene. A German woman carrying her little baby, applied for work. She could not speak a word of English, and while she sat waiting for an interpreter to come the tears rolled down her cheeks and fell on the baby's little hands.

No money, no work. It was the same story. During the month just passed there were more than fifty mothers who were willing to go anywhere if they could only find a home for themselves and their children. Many are able to cook excellently; some have had homes of their own; all are anxious to provide against the winter soon to come and the suffering that otherwise must be their's at that time. The Society is looking for families in the country needing domestics or second girls, and willing to take a woman with a child. High wages are not asked; only kindness and charity, in view of the needs of the servants, and a home, with its protection against the threatening winter.

BABY ON THE SCALES.

Interesting Ceremony in the White House—Grover Makes a Close Guess.

Baby Ruth's sister was weighed the other day. Dr. Bryant held the scales, and lifted the precious weight, but he set it down at a sign from the President, who said:

"Wait a minute. Let's guess her weight."

"Ten pounds," said Mrs. Cleveland.

"Eleven," Mrs. Perrine said.

Dr. Bryant looked at the youngster critically, and said: "Nine and a half."

"I should say," Thurber remarked, with the air of a connoisseur, "I should say, well, now——"

"Oh, guess, Thurber," the President interrupted. "It's not a matter of life or death."

"Twenty pounds," Thurber said, somewhat rattled, and he blushed like a girl who had just been kissed and caught at it.

Then the President, who had insisted on having the last guess, put on his glasses and bent over the basket. With the air of a man who hasn't been catching and weighing bass all summer for nothing, he said:

"That's a nine-and-a-quarter pounder or there's something wrong with the scales."

The Doctor then lifted the basket once more. The indicator stopped short at the figure 8.

"Good heavens!" the President exclaimed, in a frightened tone. "Only four pounds. Why, Doctor!"

"It's all right," the Doctor said. "The basket got caught on my arm."

He freed it and the indicator shot down to twenty with a thud.

"Well, I'll be ——," the President began. Just then he saw that Baby Ruth had hold of the basket. "Go away from there, Ruth," he said, gently pushing her off.

The basket rose as he did so and settled at thirteen and a half.

"Gee whillikens!" Thurber exclaimed, "that's a bouncer—thirteen and a half."

"Hold your horses, my boy," the President observed, "you must allow for the basket. Let's see, four from thirteen and a half leaves nine and a half."

"Just my guess," Dr. Bryant observed.

"Yes," the President replied, "but you haven't allowed for her breakfast.

STEWART ROUSES 'EM

HIS CURIOSITY CAUSES GREAT EXCITEMENT.

Wants to Know How Many Senators Own National Bank Stock—Says He Doesn't Own Any Silver Mines—Crossed Swords with Hill.

A Monkey and Parrot Time.

Washington correspondence:

THAT gay but balky band of patriots, the Senate, has been the center of interest for some time now, and occasionally in its silver debate sparks fly as from flint and steel. The other day Senator Stewart, of Nevada, started the fun. With a manner indicating that he was loaded for bear and ready to kick, when the Senate chamber was unusually full, he offered a resolution that a committee be appointed to discover how many Senators owned stock in national banks. This resolution was a tremendous success in the line intended by its author. It was about such a success as one might expect in pulling out the insides of a piano with a garden rake. Before the general grasp for breath had subsided, Mr. Stewart proceeded to rub salt on the wound he had caused by saying he was sick and tired of Wall street men and New York papers charging that the silver advocates owned stock in silver mines. He himself hadn't owned any in fifteen years. But he had an awakening suspicion that a good many Senatorial opponents of silver owned stock in national banks, which would be benefited by repeal, and he thought what was sauce for the goose was just as good a dressing for duck. He had discovered in some musty old tome a long-forgotten law that no person who owned stock in the United States bank, which Jackson broke up, could hold a seat in Congress. If the principle of this law was good then, it was good now; and he wanted to know just how many Senators' interests were hampered by this silver legislation.

If the number whose faces showed astonishment, chagrin, or alarm was any indication, Mr. Stewart's shot had winged about four-fifths of his colleagues. Senator Hill was the first to line up in battle array. With a flush that crept up over the bald spot until it disappeared in the fringe of hair behind his ears, the New-Yorker, shaking what the Honorable Tim Campbell called his "long, acquitive finger" at Stewart who glared truculently, denounced the resolution as an outrage, and demanded that the heel of senaterial disapproval crush and bruise its head. "Whose business is it," Mr. Hill asked, "what Senator or who owns any investment, provided he is lucky enough to have it and come by it honestly." He could not believe that Mr. Stewart offered that in good faith.

Mr. Stewart beat a tattoo on his desk with his fingers and was visibly disturbed at the tone and vigor of Hill's remarks. He was just coming down the main aisle to make a furious reply when Mr. Hawley, who had been all the while writing a letter, suddenly shouted, "I object!" Stewart turned in his testy way and glared, but Mr. Hawley said he objected to further discussion. "Well, object," said the man from Nevada, "but I give notice that I will have all the time I want tomorrow." And so the matter drags.

Routine Proceedings.

The house Tuesday transacted only routine business. A letter from the postmaster-general relative to valueless papers which have accumulated was referred to a special committee. Mr. Hepburn, of Iowa, attempted to secure consideration of a resolution calling on the secretary of the treasury for information as to the amount of merchandise transported from one United States port to another over Canadian territory. Mr. Geary, of California, objected, and the resolution was referred.

In the Senate Wednesday the resolution of Mr. Stewart for a committee to ascertain whether Senators were interested in national bank was then laid before the Senate and that Senator addressed the Senate in advocacy of it. After a few moments he diverged into a general discussion of the silver question. It being apparent that the House would adjourn again without transacting any business, Mr. Talbert, of South Carolina, offered a resolution that the banking and currency committee be instructed to immediately report the bill introduced by Mr. McLaurin, of South Carolina, providing for the issue of $125,000,000 in treasury notes for the relief of the people. A chorus of objections went up from all parts of the House. The House then went into the committee of the whole for the consideration of the public printing bill.

The Federal election law caused a skirmish in the House Thursday, but no action was taken. Senator Daniel, of West Virginia, occupied the time of the Senate in a carefully prepared argument against the repeal of the Sherman law; he spoke to crowded galleries and a good Senatorial audience. During the course of his speech many members of the House came into the chamber and took seats in the rear of Senators' chairs, or stood against the wall. When the routine morning business was concluded Mr. Stewart, of Nevada, moved to take up his resolution for a committee to investigate whether Senators were interested in national banks. Mr. Voorhees' counter-motion to proceed to the consideration of the repeal bill was agreed to on a viva voce vote which was quite unanimous, and Mr. Stewart sat down.

Friday in the Senate was occupied by the advocates of the repeal of the Sherman law. The speech of Senator Lindsay of Kentucky, which was his maiden effort in the Senate, and his defense of Secretary Carlisle, whose successor in the Senate he is, was received most attentively. The deadlock in the affairs of the House in order to prevent Mr. Tucker from reporting the bill repealing the Federal election laws to the House continues.

A Saffron-colored Index

Of the condition of a bilious stomach and sluggish liver is the human countenance. Not only the skin, but the eyeballs, are tinged with the yellow hue when the bile gets into the blood. Besides this, sick headaches ensue, the tongue becomes furred, pains are felt in the liver and through the right shoulder blade, and dizziness is experienced upon rising from a sitting or recumbent posture by the bilious invalid. For these and other indications of biliousness, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a sovereign remedy. It is also efficacious in chills and fever, dumb ague, ague cake, inactivity of the kidneys and bladder, rheumatism and nervousness. It stimulates, restores digestion and sleep, and tends greatly to mitigate the infirmities of age.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

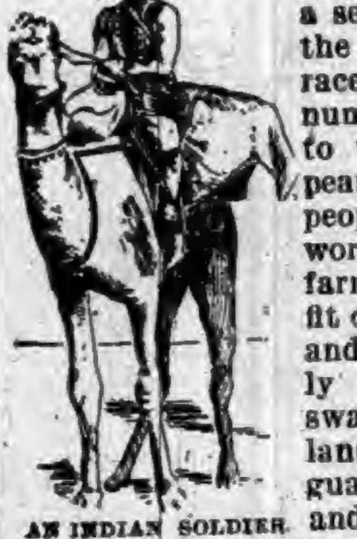
ENGLAND IN INDIA.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S BIG FARM IN THE ORIENT.

Vast Wealth Squeezed Out of the Natives, Who Live in the Most Abject Poverty—Half the Size of the United States—Fat Salaries for Higher Officials.

Result of British Rule.

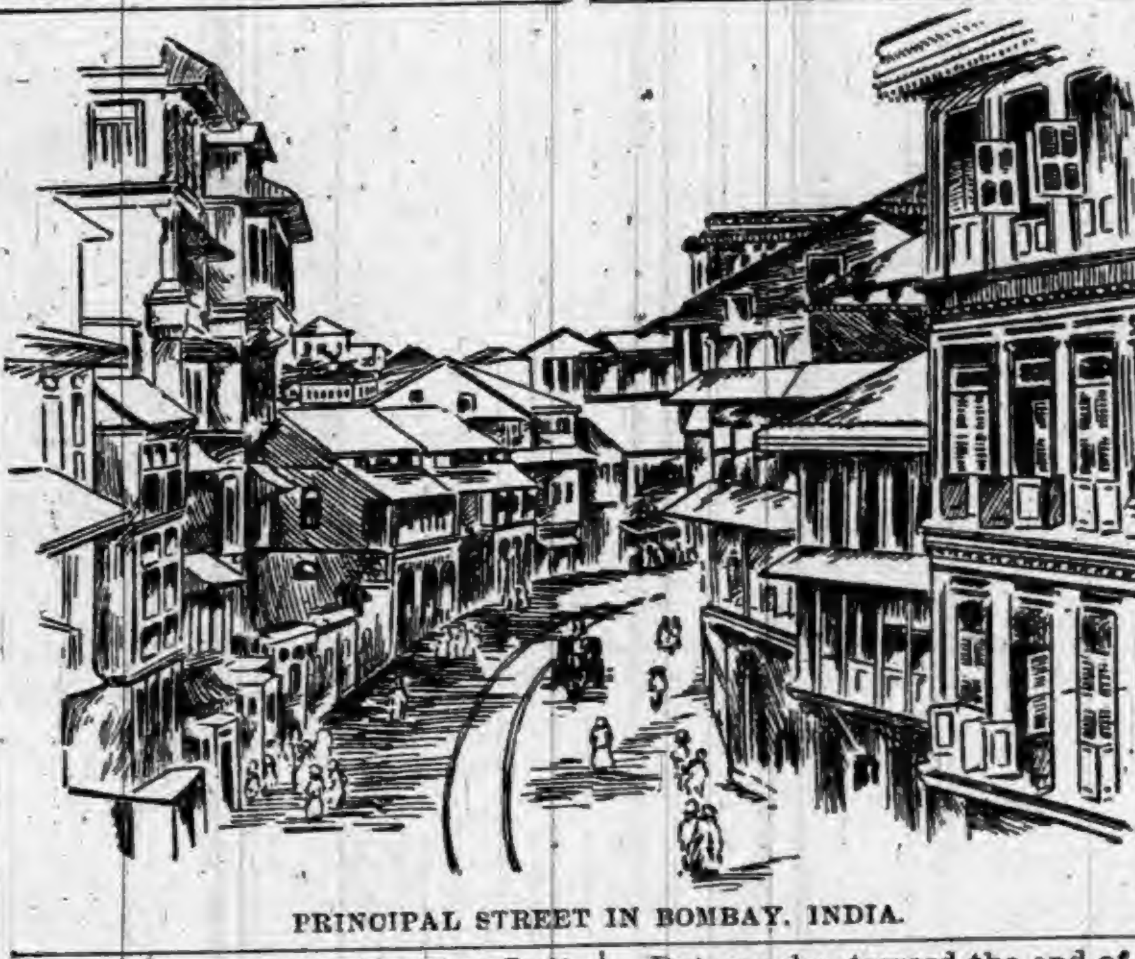
The recent disturbances in Bombay, one of the greatest commercial cities in India, make pertinent an account of that vast Oriental possession over which Queen Victoria reigns as Empress. The history of the world has among the real estate records of the transfer of nations no other piece of property like India. It is half the size of the United States, and contains the most fertile lands in the world. Its population comprises a seventh part of the entire human race, and although numbering 3,500 to the one European, the native people merely work the great farm for the benefit of Englishmen, and are completely under British sway. India is a land of many languages and races, and in religions it has representatives of nearly every creed on the face of the globe. There are more Mohammedans in it than in Turkey, and the Hindoos number nearly 200,000,000. It has 1,300 towns of from 10,000 to 50,000 people, and of its great cities Bombay is as large as Philadelphia, Calcutta as great as Chicago, Madras surpasses St. Louis, and the native city of Hyderabad exceeds Baltimore.



AN INDIAN SOLDIER.

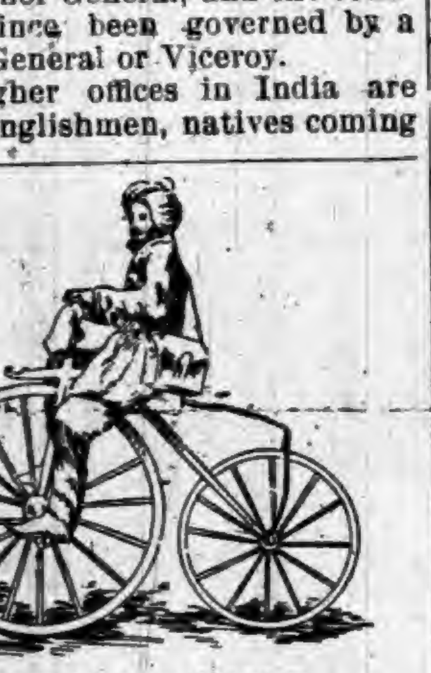
How England Obtained India.

England obtained control of this mighty land by a pinch of pepper. In the days of "good Queen Bess" the Dutch had a monopoly of the trade of the Orient, and they supplied Europe with its spices. One of the great articles of shipment was pepper, and like some of our own business men the Dutch cornered the market and forced the price of pepper from 75 cents to $1.50 a pound. English merchants kicked, and as a result of the agitation the East India Company was formed and was soon capitalized at $2,000,000. The East India Company soon got a footing in India and began ousting the Dutch traders. They first bought the island of Bombay, and by the time that President Buchanan was presiding at the head of this Republic the East India Company practically controlled the whole country. The British Government took the country off the hands of the East India Company, and ultimately, after successful wars and the natural operations of trade British power in India went on consolidating and increasing until India became a dependency of the crown. In 1774 Warren Hastings became the first Governor General, and the country has since been governed by a Governor General or Viceroy.



PRINCIPAL STREET IN BOMBAY, INDIA.

The higher offices in India are filled by Englishmen, natives coming in for inferior offices. The salaries paid are very large. Thus the Governor General receives a salary of $100,000 a year, while $60,000 is given him for entertainment. Under British control India has prospered—in English interests; thus the annual exports of the country, which amounted to $5,000,000 when British citizens obtained control, are now over $300,000,000. But the condition of the natives is painful to dwell upon. Out of every 1,000 natives 999 live in huts of mud, and a majority of them have not the necessaries of life. The huts are so small that the beds have to be put out of doors during the daytime in order to give room for the family. These beds are rude frames of wood covered with a network of rope the size of a clothes line. The sleeper uses neither sheets nor pillow. He sleeps in the clothes which he wears during the day, and the beds are so short that he must double himself up on them. The huts are unfloored and destitute of furniture. The family squat on their heels or sit crosslegged on benches. The kitchen utensils are a few pots and kettles, and the eating is done with the fingers. The floor is often the dining table. The fuel is the droppings of the cattle, which are gathered up by the women, mixed and patted into cakes and laid in the sun to dry.



AN INDIAN MAIL CARRIER.

Benefits of British Rule.

Thus do the natives live while earning taxes for the British, but it must be said that a good deal of the money returns for investment in the soil. There are good roads, many irrigating canals and numerous hospitals and schools in the country. The postal service of the country is not inferior to ours, and yearly the natives are using the mails more and more. There are now over 50,000 miles of rail routes in India and the postoffices almost pay for themselves. India has over 100,000 miles of telegraph wire and the English Government owns all. It is the same way with the railroads. The British Government owns most of the iron highways and is continually building more. Almost 16,000 miles of track now belong to England. At Bombay, Madras, and Calcutta there are great universities on the model of the University of London; there are ninety-six colleges and the whole of the country is dotted with schools.

The people of India are said to be greatly dissatisfied with British rule, but lack the courage and cohesion to throw off the yoke. The Mussulmans are divided against the Hindoos, and even the latter are divided among themselves. Bombay, the seat of the disturbances, contains 200,000 Mohammedans and 500,000 Hindoos. The European quarter of the city is second to none in the world in point of beautiful buildings. The materials used in their construction are mostly olive-tinted granite, light colored sandstone and dark brick. The native quarters, however, are wretched.

Repaid with Interest.

Dignity is associated with honest poverty as often, beyond a doubt, as it is with wealth; and it is not always safe or wise for those who are better-to-do to affront the self-respect of the poor. A story is told of the youth of a woman who died in old age in Paris lately which illustrates this fact. When she was a poor girl, working for her living, she took her dinner each day in a restaurant kept by a woman named Clemence—a well-known place in Paris, where people of limited incomes were in the habit of eating.

The young woman, whose name was Theresa, received her salary monthly, and it was so small that it was often spent a day or two before pay-day came around again. On such occasions Madame Clemence generally gave Theresa credit until pay-day, although she regarded her with suspicion. Theresa always paid her debt when she received her salary.

But one day toward the end of the month, when Theresa had been particularly unfortunate in her affairs, she presumed too far on Madame Clemence's generosity. The customary patrons of the restaurant had gathered preparatory to the meal. Theresa, who had eaten but a scrap of bread that day, was among them, and very hungry. Madame Clemence came up to her and said, roughly:

"What do you want here?"

"My dinner," Theresa answered meekly.

"Well, you can't have it here," the woman said. "You owe me nine francs already, and that's quite enough for you to owe."

The poor girl arose in burning humiliaton, and was about to go when she heard a low and very kind voice near her.

"Pay the woman right off," it said. She felt a ten-franc piece slipped into her hand, and saw that the person who had spoken to her was M. Dumaine, a gentleman whom she knew by sight. She hesitated a moment but some generosities are not to be lightly refused, even by persons of pride. She paid Madame Clemence her debt out of the money. Then M. Dumaine arose and said aloud to the people in the room.

"My friends, one of us here, a poor girl, has been publicly insulted without good cause. Evidently Madame Clemence needs a little admonition. Let us leave her alone for a fortnight. I know a little restaurant in Belleville where we can do very well. Let us go there."

"Bravo, Dumaine," the people called. They all arose and followed Dumaine to Belleville, leaving Madame Clemence aghast.

The crowd dined merrily in the new place—all except Theresa, who had lost her appetite as the result of the extraordinary incident, and had grown very pensive.

She did not repay M. Dumaine's ten francs; she feared to offend him. But she "paid it back," as she called it, with large interest, for through all her long subsequent life—during which she often had considerable sums to dispense—she never hesitated to assist a struggling artist or any necessitous young person who presented himself.

"It is M. Dumaine's ten francs," she would say as she assisted these needy persons in their battle with the world.—Youth's Companion.

Hog with a Wooden Leg.

Recently a train cut off one of the rear legs of a hog at Penn Manor, Bucks County, Pennsylvania. A veterinary surgeon was summoned and a wooden leg was strapped tightly to the stump of the natural one, and now the grateful swine is able to run about much as his brothers do.

More Deadly.

It has been decided that hereafter, in the offensive equipment of British war vessels the Maxim gun shall take the place of the five-barrel Nordenfeldt Gardner guns.

Only a few words were exchanged when they commenced firing. Shortly Johnson fell mortally wounded, with two charges of shot in his body. The affair has created intense excitement and every effort is being made to capture Valvan, who quickly made his escape after emptying his gun.

"Me's Papa's Boy."

Mr. Robert Martindale relates an unusual small boy story which came under his observation while riding to this city on the Cleveland division of the Big Four Road. While the train was standing at Anderson, a little fellow not over 4 years of age mounted it and took a seat with such an air of being in the right place that the occurrence attracted no attention, and the train started with him a passenger. He was so small that the conductor did not notice him until the train stopped at Pendleton, the first station this side of Anderson. The conductor then made some inquiry about him, but could find nobody who laid a claim to him.

"Whose boy are you?" asked the conductor, approaching him.

"Me's papa's boy," was the reply, with wide open blue eyes.

"Where do you live?" he then asked.

"In Anderson," was the answer.

"Who is with you?"

"Me's by m'self."

"Where do you want to go?" The conductor was getting worried. The answer was so blurred in baby talk that no one in the crowd of passengers who had become interested could make out whether the little fellow said "Dunkirk" or "Dunreith." Neither could the boy speak his destination plain enough to make it known.

"But who is going to pay your fare?" asked the conductor.

"Me; here's the money."

The youngster fished in his waist pocket and brought out a cent, which he put into the conductor's hand.

"Well, my boy," said the latter, smiling at the situation, "I guess you will have to go home again. Your mamma will want you and you have ridden as far as you can for a cent. You may keep it and pay the man on the train going home."

The boy was put on the first train for his home and once at the station he was safe.—Indianapolis Journal.

Value of the Search Light.

Search lights have become indispensable to steamers of all classes and in military and naval operations. By their use objects miles away can be revealed and illumined in the darkest night, and their powerful beams of light can be thrown in any direction. One of the earliest applications of the search light in marine work was to vessels passing through Suez Canal. Formerly the passage could only be made in daylight, and was very tedious and costly; now the electric light is at the service of every ship as it enters the canal, and the journey is, in nearly every case, pursued uninterruptedly. A most welcome innovation has been made by the Suez Canal authorities, who have pronounced that it shall be obligatory after Oct. 1 next on all vessels passing through the canal by light to employ an apparatus for dividing the light of the projector into two divergent rays. Approaching vessels may, by this means, travel right up to each other without their respective helmsmen being blinded. The diverging apparatus which is to be used has been divised by one of the agents of the company.

English Prison Punishment.

The only instrument used purely for punishment in English jails nowadays is a crank handle weighted heavily with lead and working heavily inside a box, an indicator, at a slit recording the number of revolutions made—8,000 to 11,000 constituting a day's work. Among the purely mechanical labor is included the working at the crank handles of the huge water pump and by cranks, too, all the meal used in the prison is ground, but in the case of the corn-grinding the prisoner may rest as often as he likes provided he gets through his allotted task.

Charm Against Cholera.

The Persians resort to curious rites for the purpose of averting the attacks of the cholera. One of the most widely practiced of these is that of passing under the Koran. Two elders stand opposite each other, holding between them a scroll of the Koran, wrapped in a silken scarf. Under this swinging talisman the peasants pass one by one, and then go home, convinced that the cholera will not be able to touch them. The Persians stick to these ancient ceremonies in spite of the fact that the epidemic is working sad havoc among them.

Hand in Hand.

As Milton pictures Adam and Eve departing from Eden hand in hand, so, if ever they return to Eden, they will do so hand in hand. Man and woman together build the home. Man and woman together can possibly build a better state than the world has yet seen. The broader the suffrage, other things being equal, the less easily it is corrupted as a whole.—Joseph Cook.

The Chance of the Jack Rabbit.

The inadvisableness of disturbing the balance of nature in the relationship of wild animals is well illustrated by what is passing in San Bernardino County, California. A State bounty of $5 was placed on coyotes, and this prowler of the foothills and plains was then worth powder and shot. So coyote scalps were collected to such an extent in San Bernardino County and elsewhere that the jackass rabbit had the restraints upon his existence very much slackened and increased in great numbers. It is hardly doubtful that thousands of rabbits are worse depredators upon the farmer's thrift than scores of coyotes, which do not trouble the crops, but only seize a few lambs or sheep when they get the chance. San Bernardino is now so pestered with rabbits that the supervisors have passed an ordinance voting 20 cents per pair of ears for their slaughter. There is money in this, too, and it will be well if the County Treasury is not bankrupted.

Chinese Surgery.

Like most things in China, the practice of surgery differs considerably from that in vogue in less enlightened western countries. Bone setting in the celestial empire is a complicated affair, and doubtless much more efficacious than European methods. In setting a fractured limb the surgeon does not attempt to bring the bones together, but merely wraps the limb in red clay, inserting some strips of bamboo into the clay. These strips are swathed in bandages, and in the outer bandage the head of a live chicken is placed. Here comes in the superior science of the celestial. After the bandage has been secured the fowl is beheaded and its blood is allowed to penetrate the fracture, for it nourishes the fractured limb and it "heap good medicine."

Mirrors.

Ladies will be interested as to the subject of mirrors, and the first record concerning them dates back to the days of the venerable Moses and they were made of brass. When the Spaniards landed in South America they found mirrors of polished black stone in use among the natives. In the fifteenth century the first glass mirrors were made in Germany by a blowpipe and were convex. The first manufactory of glass mirrors for sale was established in Venice early in the sixteenth century. In the reign of James I., men, women, and children wore looking glasses publicly, the men as brooches or ornaments in their hats and the women at their girdles or on their bosoms.

Crosses of the Present.

The crosses of the present moment always bring their own special grace and consequent comfort with them; we see the hand of God in them when it is laid upon us. But the crosses of anxious foreboding are seen out of the dispensation of God; we see them without grace to bear them; we see them, indeed, through a faithless spirit which banishes grace. So everything in them is bitter and unendurable; all seem dark and helpless. Let us throw self aside; no more self interest, and then God's will, unfolding every moment in everything, will console us also every moment for all that He shall do around us, or within us, for our discipline.

Stuttering Teutons.

There are over 80,000 stuttering children in the schools of Germany. The increase has been so great during the past four years that the defect is considered contagious. The Famous Dr. Gutzman is authority for the statement that the increase is due to mimicry—that the young mimics who imitate stutterers soon become involuntary stutterers. The schools of the City of Breslau have a total of 2,400 stuttering children.

Parisian Custom.

On the stairway landings of almost every Parisian chateau there are small tables designed to hold candles. When guests are saying good-night this table presents a pretty picture. The candles are of varied colors, the candlesticks of odd designs and the lights are pleasantly softened by colored shades. A green candle in a silver candlestick, with a perfectly formed pond lily for the shade, is but one of the many novelties.

The Summer Complexion.

Girls take more interest in tanning themselves than men do in getting a fine tone on a pipe. The girl who colors evenly in the sun's rays is very vain of it, and you may see her sitting on the rocks reading, with one hand spread in the sun, or notice her on the piazza comparing browns with the other girls.—Boston Journal.

In Memoriam.

In memory of Minnie S. Stonebraker, born at Corunna, Ind., July 1, 1874, departed this life Sept. 11, 1893, aged 19 years, 2 months and 11 days.

Another sweet, pure young life has been called home; another lovely christian young lady has been laid to rest to await the resurrection of the just. She was baptized in the Christian church at Kendallville June 10, 1892, by Rev. Moot, at which time she became a member of church. She always loved the church and Sabbath school and only when compelled by failing health was her place vacant. She was always kind to her father and mother, brother and sister, and had a kind word and smile for every one she met and was loved by all who knew her. Her health was quite good until two years ago when she was taken ill with measles and from that time she continued to fail, and for the last five months was confined to her bed with that fatal disease, consumption, the cause of her death. Minnie was very ambitious doing whatever her hands could find to do. She was proficient in art and music, painting being her forte. The walls of her home are lined with paintings which her dear fingers have made. A beautiful crazy quilt is also left as one of the mementos of her work. During the weeks of suffering she was patient, calmly awaiting the Master's call. For the past four weeks her prayer had been that she might soon be taken from her suffering, and on the day of her death she called her friends to her bedside, bade them all good bye and bade them meet her in Heaven. She quietly passed away in the triumphs of the Christian faith, and the blessed hope of immortal glory. She leaves a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her loss, but their loss is her gain. The funeral was held at the Christian church at Corunna, Wednesday Sept. 13, at 2 p. m conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. N. Scholes, assisted by the M. E. pastor, Rev. J. A. Sumwalt.

The lesson read was the twenty-third Psalm, a favorite of the deceased. The sermon was preached from the twenty-second chapter of Revelation and fourteenth verse; "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter through the gates into the city." Sleep on, sweetly sleep until the summons shall call thee to arise. Flowers planted by loving ones left behind shall deck thy grave, and the birds of heaven shall sing requiems o'er thy slumbering head.

MINNIE'S REST.

"He giveth his beloved sleep."

Minnie was tired and weary,
Weary with suffering and pain,
Put by the paint and the brushes
She will not use them again.
Into sweet rest she hath entered
No more to suffer or weep,
After her long painful illness
Minnie has fallen asleep.

Hills that she loved now enfold her,
Hid in their bosom she lies,
Heeds not the song of the robin.
Beauty of blossom or skies.
Over her bed the green grasses
Will ever so lovingly creep,
Out mid the daises and clover
Minnie is lying asleep.

Rest the dear feet now forever,
Her beautiful hands are so still,
Pulseless the heart that no longer
Sorrow can quicken or thrill.
Years will glide o'er her gently,
Fading the shadow land deep,
Drive back thy tears, would you wake her?
Minnie has fallen asleep.

Oh beautiful rest for the weary,
Beautiful sleep for the true,
Lying so peacefully ever
Under the sunlight and dew.
Floats through our heart strings a quiver
Like breath of a whisper sweet,
"He giveth—to his beloved—"
And Minnie has fallen asleep

A wreck occurred at LaPaz Junction last Sunday morning in which Schuyler Darling formerly of this city, but now of Chicago, lost his life The facts, as far as we can learn, are as follows; Freight trains No 20 and 93 were pulling into the station when the engine of 93 ran into the rear end of the other freight, demolishing the caboose and several cars. Schuyler Darling, who was on his way to Chicago, was killed almost instantly. No employes were injured The accident is a very sad one and Mr D's mother and brothers have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community. He came home to attend his father's funeral, a notice of whose death occurred in these columns last week, and was returning to his home as above stated. Fred Darling, his brother, came down from Albion to attend the funeral and almost immediately after his arrival here received a telegram from his home announcing the death of his baby daughter, The family have surely had their share of trouble.

The M. E. friends after erecting their present elegant house of worship, purchased a very fine organ at a cost of nearly $800. Recently the Epworth League not satisfied with this organ, placed an expensive piano in the church and we are now regaled with piano music which many regard as altogether inferior to that of the organ. Give us the organ music for church purposes.

Chicago and the Fair

Since writing about the Columbus caravels, Santa Maria, Pinta and Nina, in our last, the Spanish government has presented the Santa Maria to our government, and we presume this gift will include all three. Just what our government will do with them we cannot say, but wherever they remain, they will be a great curiosity, especially the little old cannons.

COLUMBUS RELICS.

Across the lagoon from the caravels is the building known as the "Convent of Rabida." It is a copy of the convent where Columbus, when discouraged, went and staid awhile and got the head priest to help him to secure the Royal permit and assistance. In this old building we find hundreds of relics, the most noted of which is the original commission given to Columbus by the sovereigns of Spain, Ferdinand and Isabella. It is in writing and signed by their majesties, who by the way, do not seem to have been very expert with the pen. But stained and faded as it is, it is still plainly read by those who can understand the language, and there is an eager crowd before it all day long. It is the most important and valuable written document in the world, having been instrumental in producing the greatest change ever known in the world's history. It is the property of Columbus' direct descendant, the Duke de Veragua, who was at the fair in the spring. A railing protects it from the crowd, and a soldier with a gun stands inside by it all the time. The building has many rooms on two floors, with an enclosed court full of flowers and plants. It must have been a comfortable place to live. All these rooms are full of documents, pictures and relics. There is the chart by which Columbus sailed, and other charts used by early voyagers. Maps made by him and others, giving their idea of the lay of the newly discovered lands, look queer now, and yet it shows they had a very good general idea. One old document given by Spain exempts from taxes all supplies to be furnished to Columbus, and directs the people of Palos to furnish all he needed. There was a big paper, which was the original will of Isabella. It is finely written by a master hand and has lovely illuminated letters at important points. Her signatures are never very plain, are rather large and coarse, but always have the same "flourish" under it, and the King had a different "flourish," but no matter where you find these names, the flourish is the same for each. It seems to have been the valuable part of all the signatures, the part that would be the most important to prove their genuineness. Her will began with a beautiful cross in colored pen work.

COLUMBUS' SIGNATURE.

The oddest signature shown on these old documents, is that of Columbus himself. While he evidently had a "flourish" of his own, he had a still more remarkable way of signing his name, especially to documents of great value or formality. We give the plainest one, though the others are in substance the same. In a letter to the Bank of St. George at Genoa, written in 1502, he signs thus:

S.
S. A. S.
X M Y
XPOFERENS

We have no means of knowing what the single letters or their odd arrangement meant, but the signature proper, we suppose, was the form of letters then used, and the form of his name at that time, making something like "Christoferens." If anyone has a better explanation, we would like to hear it. Also, we cannot say why a part of those letters have a period after them, while others had none. Yet we have copied accurately. It will pay our readers to study these things, whether they see the original at the fair or not. No more important signature than that of Columbus will ever be seen. There were wooden doors, lintels, shutters, beams and thresholds, taken from this old convent in Spain and from other places where Columbus had lived. There were pieces from his old dwelling at Porto Santo in St. Domingo, a house built, we believe, by his father-in-law. Some old doors were hung by having a round projecting piece of wood fit into a hole above and below, and on these pins, each half of the door would swing. A strong bar of iron fastened them at the middle, though some have a lock and key. The wood is in some cases carved very nicely or paneled like our doors, and seems of cedar wood. Many early pictures of Columbus give one a queer idea of him. Some show him old, some young, and some with beard, some without, and some with fine curly hair. Then there are early pictures—some made on his return from his voyages, showing the savages and their dress and habits. Several show them eating human flesh, and in others offering their prisoners as sacrifices first, to be eaten later. In all cases, there were armed Spaniards coming to the rescue. There were strange battle scenes, where natives are up in trees throwing stones and water down on the heads of the whites below, who are attacking them and have board frames like shutters held up over their heads for protection, while a man or two uses an ax to cut down the tree. Some of these pictures are of English or Portugese origin. There is a fair sort of map of the new world made by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1585. There is a copy of the oldest map of the new world, made in 1500, the original being in the Royal Museum at Madrid. One of these old maps shows the plan of water, harbor, etc, around "Novum Amsterdam," now New York, and, queer to state, has a rude picture of a ship going onto the rocks at that point in the East River known as "Hell Gate," on which we have lately spent such a vast sum in blasting out the rocks under water. Some of the maps take in the old world, each country's location being shown by a picture, as of black people in some places, people on horses in another, at another point are people in tents, at others, people in houses; in some, the nation is marked by a flag, etc. There is also shown a piece of the beam, with a link or two of the chain attached, to which he was chained in prison. There is also a small locket hung up out of reach of visitors, that contains a small portion of the great discoverer's dust. What a change it is from prison chains to the veneration now shown for even a thimbleful of the dust to which his mortal body turned after death. A picture, "Columbus Dreaming of his First Colony," is a masterpiece. One can see the agony of his face as he dreams of the cruelties and tortures to which the savages he had discovered were afterwards treated by the no less savage Spaniards. The picture shows natives being tortured and killed and buildings torn down and destroyed—just what too often happened. Porto Santo, where he made a settlement and a home is now no more. This is also illustrated by a display of a few rough building stones, all that is left of the town of "Isabella," the first white settlement in the new world. Many of the earliest colonies, both on the islands, and later, on the mainland, have nothing but the sites left, like our own Jamestown, the very site of which has been partly washed away by the river. With the other pictures here are photos of the Duke of Veragua and his wife, who have now returned to Spain, where he found himself nearly bankrupt by bad speculations, some of which had gone wrong while he was in Chicago. There are also photo views of the streets in various Spanish towns that held celebrations last year, when the people marched along the very streets through which Columbus passed while making his triumphal tour. There are skulls and shells picked up at the point on Watling's Island, now known to be the first land he stepped on in the new world. From these earliest sites are many curious things; old cannon such as were used by the old Spanise Buccaneers—little short, rusty things, about 2 or 3-pounders, mounted on low iron wheels, each wheel being half of a lion, the lion showing on the outside of the wheel. There were cannon balls of stone and of iron, and rude utensils by which the natives and first settlers got gold out of the sand and stones in early days, and which they still do in these same islands. Many of these curious things came from settlements on Santa Domingo, destroyed 300 or more years ago, the ruins having been lately hunted over to get such relics as could be secured for the great fair in Columbus' honor. In other buildings and in other parts of the grounds, one continually finds reminders of Columbus, showing that he is the leading figure in this great show that is to commemorate the 400 years that have passed since his great work was fairly begun. There is the great Columbus fountain near the Administration building, though usually spoken of as the "McMonnies fountain," and near by, in the grand court, is a large statue of him. Then on the "Peristyle," the grand colonnade between the grand basin and the lake, is a great group of figures called the "Columbus Quadriga" and everywhere one sees something to remind him of the great man who was so fortunate as to discover the most valuable part of the world.

SIX SPASMS A DAY.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I never lose an opportunity to recommend Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine to any one afflicted with nervous complaints with the assurance that it will not disappoint them. When our boy was eighteen months old he was attacked with violent spasms. Sometimes he would have five or six spasms in a single day. WE TRIED MANY PHYSICIANS WITHOUT BENEFIT; finally our druggist recommended Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. We tried a bottle, and could see that he WAS BENEFITED FROM THE FIRST DOSE. We used three bottles, and I am happy to say the child was ENTIRELY CURED. We used no other remedy, and his cure is complete. He is now three years old and perfectly healthy. You are at liberty to use my name in SOUNDING THE PRAISE OF THIS WONDERFUL REMEDY.

A Good Thing to Keep at Hand.

From the Troy (Kansas) Chief.

Some years ago we were very much subject to severe spells of cholera morbus; and now when we feel any of the symptoms that usually proceed that ailment, such as sickness at the stomach, diarrhoea, etc., we become scared. We have found Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy the very thing to straighten one out in such cases, and always keep it about. We are not writing this for a pay testimonial, but to let our readers know what is a good thing to keep handy in the house. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of Its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1873.

Auburn, in 1873, was on the highway of prosperity. A large number of buildings had been completed and business had greatly revived. To those actively engaged in various avocations, there came success or failure, proportioned to the possession or want, of experience and good management. The fortunes of the town at this crisis in its existence were being more speedily advanced by ambitious aspirants for popular recognition whose inherent qualities added to the general grounds for confidence and whose optimism increased the reputation of the place to the measure of its full deserving.

Mills and factories at long intervals, had slowly come into operation under the influence of an extreme conservatism, but they had utilized surplus timber, manufactured wool, floured wheat, and forming a nucleus for future segregation of like interests, had demonstrated the favorable possibilities awaiting judicious investment.

The well-won railroad had facilitated shipment of produce and import of merchandise. At its depot had been created a market for grain which insured cash sales for the farmer, whose money expended with Auburn's grocers, storekeepers and other supply agencies, promoted a reciprocal trade with mutual benefit.

Gaining confidence with growing numbers, in the security of local birthright as the permanent countyseat, business men with fresh ardor entered boldly into competition with alert rivals elsewhere to regain and hold the domestic traffic which, properly tributary to Auburn, had been alienated by adverse conditions no longer existing. Changes were frequent, but each had its lesson and advantage. Close succeeding firms that failed or dissolved, dissatisfied with returns on capital and personal management, came other firms hopeful to win where these had lost, confident of their better judgment and reckless of costly experience realized in sacrificial sale to them of stocks on hand.

New teachers from abroad took the place of those living in the town, hired by a school board mainly constituted from the ranks of recent arrivals, and with increase of population, came accessions of church members of the different denominations, encouraging and strengthening the established societies, giving strength for organization of others, and stimulating the love of novelty by frequent changes in ministers.

In a spirit of self-sacrifice carried to unjust extreme, the desire to welcome the stranger was shown in at once and without question admitting him into social and business relations, encouraging him to take the lead in conduct of affairs and landing enterprises inspired solely by hopes of personal proof and reputation,

Thomas C. Mays, himself in a degree visionary, through his organ, impatiently denounced such as did not rush into every chimerical scheme broached by moneyless adventurers, and seemed unable or unwilling to understand the reluctance of conservative men to invest their savings in glittering ventures of whose workings they were practically ignorant.

Old and honorable residents who had staid in Auburn when left by others, were named in terms of obloquy because they did not choose to part with their real estate nor build beyond their needs, and prudent citizens were influenced against their better judgment by an outcry against "Fogyism" to contribute to the stock of a manufactory of great possibilities, only to see it wrecked and ruined by wholesale return to the works of condemned and worthless products due solely to hurried, inexperienced and defective workmanship.

Later, a startling illustration of the folly and danger of sudden and unquestioning confidence in adventurous strangers was afforded when imperative and increasing demand for local banking facilities for accommodation of financial and business interests, attracted the Hazzard brothers, George and James, to Auburn, where they were accorded a hearty welcome and given practically the freedom of the town.

Our people, looking so much more to the establishment of a bank than to the character of its founders, forthwith and freely deposited with them their money to such extent that a time came when their swindling propensities well-nigh hopelessly crippled the institution and, despite energetic effort, mulcted our wealthier citizens of a comparatively large amount of capital.

Responding to popular clamor for premature and ill advised improvements, adroit schemers outlined and urged various projects whose primary purpose was personal notoriety and the acquisition and control of capital with the object of profiting by it. They were of that undesirable class of people who, severally, or associated in what are now termed "syndicates," which is but a high sounding name for "land speculators," acquire tracts of land in vicinity to a town, plat it and sell the lots for all they are worth.

Under guise of public spirit, costly public measures are carried through, involving extensive taxation; the unfortunate town is boomed years ahead of natural growth, then crippled in finances and depressed in trade is left to recover as best it can, while the syndicate divide up or repeat their profitable investment elsewhere.

The errors of 1873 were not without compensation, inasmuch as they checked undue growth, taught salutary lessons of experience and prepared Auburn for much of the solid and lasting growth which has added so greatly to her resources and population.

The great and important fact rising out of the sudden activity was that the long period of inaction had ended and, with the operation of the Eel River railroad was begun the Auburn of the present day. What has followed have been stages of progress wherein we have learned to wisely bring into activity the strong latent possibilities of this municipality and to measurably adapt our circumstances to the varying conditions of these stirring and eventful times.

THINGS WORTH SEEING AT THE WORLD,S FAIR.

Where to Eat, etc.

(Special Correspondence.)

Between the Live Stock pavillion and the windmills, south of the great Agricultural building and overlooking the lagoon, stands a large rectangular structure called the French Bakery. Here are exhibited wonderful bread-machines, one of which is capable of furnishing the staff of life to 500,000 people each day, and ovens of French manufacture, which are a revelation to our bakers.

"The proof of the pudding is the eating," as the old saw has it, and the proof of machinery is the quality of the articles produced; therefore the exhibitors are manufacturing bread and pastry of every description before the eyes of the spectators. They sell these goods at a normal rate, and serve you the best coffee on the ground for a nickel. Not satisfied with this liberality, considering they have to pay 45 per cent blood money to the Exposition, they offer a free ride on the Intramural railway to every one of their patrons spending thirty cents at the bakery. In other words a person gets thirty cents worth of the finest French bakery goods for twenty cents, which is the best argument why visitors should by all means patronize this, the fairest and squarest of all eating places at the Fair.

Using the Intramural ticket thus provided by the liberal management of the French Bakery, and taking a north bound train, one should stop at the Midway station. Passing many interesting shows previously described in these columns, we come to a circular edifice, ornamented with a delicately carved wooden fascade, the famous Panorama of the Swiss Alps. It took thirty months and twenty-five eminent artists to paint this huge canvas, which measures 500 feet in diameter and stands sixty-five feet high, making it the largest painting ever conceived and accomplished. So faultless is this magnificent reproduction of the wonderful Bernese Alps, that one can readily transport oneself to Switzerland, away from the din and noise of Midway Plaisance. A delightful Swiss trio of Alpine singers and genuine Alpenhorn artists add yet to the illusion. This stupendous work was executed purposely for the World's fair, and is the only exhibit at the Midway Plaisance that has obtained a medal from the jury of fine arts. This very fact is sufficient proof that the Swiss Alps panorama is one of the best exhibits on the grounds and should not be missed by any visitor to the fair.

Leaving the panorama in a westerly direction and to the right of the great Ferris wheel, we come to another marvel of French skill, the Effel tower exhibit. The great success of the Paris exposition in 1889 (which numbered a total attendance of 44,000,000) was due, in a large measure, to the celebrated Eiffel tower, nearly 1,000 feet high. A French engineer, Mr. C. Du Pasquier, exhibits here an absolutely correct reproduction of this gigantic tower. This miniature copy cost $100,000, is composed of over 600,000 pieces of bronze, and is justly considered the most complete and most artistic reproduction known. There can be seen elevators running to the several platforms, a revolving search light on top of the tower, over 1,000 of the smallest incandescent electric lamps ever made, living gardens crowded with pigmy people, and better yet, an electric fountain spouting several hundred fancy colored water jets. This work is so astounding in its scope that it is impossible to describe it adequately either with tongue or pen. To add to the comfort of the spectator, the management has establish a cafe in Parisian style where the inner-man can be accommodated and from which a magnificent view of the Ferris wheel and Midway Plaisance is obtained.

W. C. T. U. Meeting.

The third annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of DeKalb county was held in the Lutheran church at Spencerville last Friday Sept. 22, 1893.

A very interesting program had been prepared and was carried out successfully, with the excepting of those who were absent. However their places were filled very acceptably, Mrs. Jones, of Garrett, doing good work in that line, as well as performing her part on the printed program. Papers, discussions and reports were the order of the day, aside from the devotional half hour in the forenoon and afternoon session. The delegates from the various unions were hospitably entertained in the homes of the Spencerville people. The annual election of officers was held, which resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Jones, of Garrett; corresponding sec'y, Mrs, Kate Leighty, of St. Joe; recording sec'y, Mrs. Bertha Olds, of Auburn; treasurer, Mrs. Alice Lewis, of Auburn.

GOLD MEDAL CONTEST.

In the evening the second gold medal contest took place. The house was crowded, and all enjoyed the efforts of the young contestants.

The exercises commenced with music by Miss Lena Tustison to the strains of which the six contestants marched in. The opening song was a duet by Mrs. Emma Allen and Miss Louie Rummel. The first speaker was Miss Jennie Shutt, whose pleasing stage presence won her many compliments. No. 2 was Miss Ella Rhodes, whose subject, "A Vigorous Warfare Needed," was well and ably handled. No. 3 was Miss Maud Culbertson, of St. Joe, the smallest and youngest of the number, in a clear sweet voice gave "A Vivid Illustration" in a forcible manner. No 4, Miss May Rose, of Auburn, gave "Boys of America" in an especially pleasing way, and was much admired for her easy graceful manners. No. 5, Mr. Otto Widney, the only young man of the number, had as a subject the only comic one on the list, and being in the German dialect, it was very hard for the judges to grade. He did it exceedingly well however. It was entitled "My little Boy Fritz." No. 6, Miss Frankie Allen had for a subject, "A Majestic Reform," She did remarkably well and was especially graceful in her manner and gestures.

The judges then retired to the lecture room to compare notes, while the audience were entertained by music and a comic recitation entitled "How Rube Played" by C. A. Woodcox. The judges who were a gentleman from St. Joe, A. C. Kœppe, of Spencerville and Mrs. J. A. Barns, of Auburn, then gave their report and the medal was awarded to No. 3, Miss Maud Culbertson, of St. Joe.

Isaac Farver.

Isaac Farver was born in Ashland county, Ohio, March 28, 1827, and died Sept. 11, 1893 at the age of 66 years, 5 months and 13 days. The funeral was at Rehoboth church near his home, at 10 a. m., of Sept. 14, and the interment was in the cemetery at Spencerville. The services were conducted be Rev. W. W. Lineberry, of the M. P. church.

The circumstances of Mr. Farver's death were briefly these: He went up to visit a nephew, Isaac Farver, in the northeast part of Steuben county, on the 7th, and the next evening while unharnessing the horse, was kicked, the blow being in the bowels, and it is supposed there was serious internal injury, though at first he did not think his injuries serious. But he soon grew worse, and in spite of all attempts at relief, died on the 11th. He was brought back home for burial. Mr. Farver was married in Ashland county to Miss Mary A. Myers, July 29, 1851. In 1855 they came to DeKalb county, and settled at Spencerville, where he worked at shoemaking till 1867, when he moved to the farm in Jackson township, that has since been his home. He leaves a wife and three sons and two daughters to mourn for him.

Mr. Farver was a man who commanded universal respect, was a worthy citizen and good neighbor. His death leaves a marked gap in the neighborhod that has known him so long.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to thank the kind friends and neighbors who so heartily assisted and cheered us during the sad hours of our recent bereavement, the death of husband and father. It will never be forgotten.

Obituary.

Hannah (Gillespie) Dirrim was born in Pennsylvania January 28, 1815, and died Sept. 21, 1893, at the age of 78 years, 7 months and 23 days. At an early age, she removed with her parents to Carroll county, Ohio. April 16, 1835, she was married to James Dirrim and in 1845, they came to DeKalb county and settled on a farm in Franklin township. That place has been their home ever since, except the past three months, when she and her aged husband staid with their son, Isaac Dirrim, in Butler. The funeral was at Hamilton, at noon of Saturday, Sept. 23, and the interment was in the cemetery there. The services were conducted by Rev. A. H. McKee, pastor of the M. E. church at that place, she having been a member of that church since the age of fifteen. She was a lifelong and faithful christian woman, and her face will be missed at church, as she will be from all good works. She leaves a bereaved husband, family and many friends to mourn her loss.

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Prince Bismarck a Mere Shadow—A Pittsburgh Man Kills His Sleeping Wife—Crowned Monarchs of Austria and Germany Meet—Tragedy at Crestline, Ohio.

SHOT HIS WIFE.

Religious Differences and Financial Difficulties the Cause.

Samuel G. Stodhart, a car accountant at the Carnegie Steel Company, Pittsburgh, shot his wife in the heart while she was sleeping, and then placing the muzzle of the revolver into his mouth, sent a bullet crashing into his own brain. Insanity, caused by religious differences and despondency over business troubles, are the causes which led to the awful deed.

Stodhart was 45 years of age, and his wife two years his junior. The couple have been married sixteen years and had seven children, the eldest being a girl 15 years old.

Mrs. Stodhart was a Catholic, and the two frequently quarreled over the education of the children. Recently Stodhart's salary was reduced 15 per cent., and this also preyed on his mind.

He arose about 5 o'clock in the morning, and after smoking a cigar, took a bull-dog revolver and fired at his sleeping wife. The first shot killed her. He then turned the weapon upon himself and ended his miserable existence.

Prince Bismarck in a Precarious Condition.

Berlin special: Herr Alers, an artist, who is a close friend of the Bismarck family, arrived here from Kissingen recently. He gives an unexpectedly discouraging report of the Prince's condition. The most formidable of Bismarck's maladies he says has been acute pneumonia. The disease was not discovered by the physicians until Bismarck's condition had become critical. The physicians and family are exceedingly anxious and watch Bismarck constantly, as, although convalescing, he is very weak and quite liable to a relapse which must prove fatal. According to Herr Alers' report the old man seems like a wreck. His splendid frame has shrunk and his flesh has fallen off until his clothes hang in folds. He appears as if fully a head shorter than before his illness. The princess is strongly opposed to removing him to Friedericksruhe. He, however, is anxious to go home.

Two Emperors Meet.

Vienna special: Emperor William of Germany arrived at Hetzendorf, where one of the Austrian imperial chateaux is situated, and was received at the Southern railway station in a down-pour of rain, by Emperor Francis Joseph, who wore the uniform of a Prussian general. The two Emperors kissed each other twice, in the most cordial manner possible. In spite of the rain after arriving at Schoonbrun, the Emperors proceeded to Laiz and Thiegarten on deer-shooting expeditions.

In a Receiver's Hands.

The Tiffin Agricultural Works, one of the largest manufacturing industries in Tiffin, Ohio, has gone into the hands of a receiver, Charles J. Yingling, a prominent dry goods merchant, being appointed. The company has a large amount of manufactured stock on hand, which it could not turn into money, but is otherwise in a good financial condition. No statement of assets and liabilities has yet been given out.

Discovery of a Conspiracy.

Denison (Texas) special: The United States officers have been informed of a plot to rescue Henry Starr and "Kid" Wilson, members of the Starr gang now confined at Fort Smith for robbery, murder, and other crimes. It is said that Mrs. Starr has offered the Dyer gang a handsome reward if they will rescue her son.

Tragedy at Crestline.

Daniel Hartman, Marshal of Crestline, Ohio, was shot by one of a party of three tramps. Hartman approached the tramps, asking them what they were doing. Without answering, the tramps opened fire, shooting Hartman in the creast, and escaped. Hartman is still unconscious.

Non-Union Men.

Two car loads of non-union men from New York and vicinity passed through Pittsburgh recently to Louisville, where they will take the places of striking shopmen on the Louisville & Nashville road. The cars were guarded and no one permitted to enter or leave them.

Applied for Pardon.

Applications have been made to the Pennsylvania Board of Pardons for the release of Hugh Dempsey and Robert Beatty, imprisoned as leaders of the poisoners of non-union workmen at Homestead.

Many Deaths From Cholera.

Teheran special: Asiatic cholera, which has been prevalent in the Persian gulf for the last fortnight, has now appeared at Kazerumand, near Shiraz, where there are many deaths daily.

Nine Men Killed.

In a wreck on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway, near Hillsboro, Texas, nine men of the bridge constructing gang were killed.

Will Pay His Debts.

J. N. Free, better known as the "Immortal J. N.," who sprung into prominence by his reported drowning in the west, and later through the suit entered by Assignee Gormicy, of the Foster estate, to collect $800 lent Free by the ex-Governor twenty years ago, now comes to the front with the statement that he will pay his debts. J. N. has written a letter to the press in which he sincerely thanks Mr. Foster for his kindness, which he says was prompted by the same large, generous heart which gave of his means to secure the five railroads for Fostoria and keep her many factories running to furnish labor for her laboring men. J. N. goes on to say that he will soon issue a short biography of himself, through the sale of which he hopes to be able to pay his debts and "reward every person who has assisted in the battle for disinterested truth which has been enshrouded for so long a time."

HANGED AND BURNED.

The Mob Finally Got Possession of the Negro Smith and Hung Him.

Roanoke (Va.) special: Robert Smith, a negro, assaulted and nearly killed Mrs. Henry Bishop, wife of a well-to-do farmer of Botecourt County. Mrs. Bishop was at the market with a load of produce and Smith bought a box of grapes. He asked her to go with him to get the money, and taking her to a house near by, locked the door and bound her. Then drawing a razor he demanded her money. She gave it up and while doing so, jerked the razor from his hand. The negro choked her, threw her down, and pounded her head with a brick leaving her for dead. Mrs. Bishop shortly afterwards regained consciousness and returning to the market told of the outrage. Detective Baldwin soon arrested the negro. The excited crowd attempted to take Smith away from the officer and lynch him but Baldwin with the prisoner on a horse dashed at full speed in face of the crowd and soon had him behind the bars.

An immense crowd gathered around the jail and kept increasing as night approached. At 5 o'clock the Roanoke Light Infantry marched to the jail by orders of Mayor Trout. Guards were posted and the streets in the immediate vicinity cleared. About dark the crowd increased by a hundred men from the vicinity of the woman's home, headed by Mrs. Bishop's son, a fireman on the Norfold & Western Railroad. Portious of the mob battered at a side door of the jail where the militia and Mayor Trout had retired. The shooting was commenced by the mob and the Mayor was shot in the foot. The militia were then ordered to return the fire and a volley from about twenty-five were poured into the mob. Seven men were killed and eleven injured, some of them fatally. During the excitement caused by the volley, the negro was taken from the jail by an officer and secreted. The dead and wounded were removed to a drug store and to the offices of the near-by physicians.

Roanoke (Va.) special: A squad of twenty men took the negro Smith from the police just before 5 o'clock Friday morning, and hanged him to a hickory limb on Ninth Avenue, in the residence section of the city. They riddled his body with bullets, and left a placard on it saying: "This is Mayor Trout's Friend." A coroner's jury of business men was summoned and viewed the body of the negro, and rendered a verdict of death at the hands of unknown men. Thousands of people visited the scene of the lynching between daylight and 8:50 o'clock, when the body was cut down. After the jury completed its work the body was placed in the hands of officers who were unable to keep back the mob. Three hundred men tried to drag the man through the streets, but Rev. Dr. Campbell, of the First Presbyterian Church, and Capt. R. B. Moorman, with pleas and by force of strength, prevented them. Capt. Moorman hired a wagon and the body was put in it. It was then conveyed to the banks of the Roanoke, about one mile from the scene of the lynching. Here the body was dragged from the wagon and burned. Piles of dry brush wood were brought and the body was placed on it and more brushwood then piled on, leaving only the head bare. The pile was saturated with coal oil and a match applied. The body was consumed within an hour. The cremation was witnessed by several thousand people. At one time the mob threatened to bury the negro in Mayor Trout's yard.

There is much indignation against Mayor Trout and the militia, and many threats of vengeance have been openly made. Capt. Bird, the commander of the militia, has left town. Mayor Trout has also disappeared, and President Bucknot, of the City Council, is acting mayor. Excitement is running high now. The citizens are now talking of holding an indignation meeting, and it is rumored on the streets that threats are being made to burn the town unless satisfaction of some sort is rendered. Crowds throng the streets and all the public places. There is an immense crowd in front of Oakey & Woolwine's, the undertakers, where seven of the dead bodies lie.

RIOT AT KAKSAS CITY.

Catholics and A. P. A's Engage in a Disgraceful Row—Fist Fights the Order.

The third riot between the A. P. A., an anti-Catholic society and a crowd of Catholics occurred at Kansas City. An Irishman named O'Connor was shot through the hand and many men received broken heads and bruised faces. The meeting was held at a hall at Twenty-fourth and Bellevue streets. The A. P. A. anticipating trouble called upon Chief of Police Speers, for protection. The A. P. A. members began gathering about the hall. They found Sergeant McVeigh and a squad of twenty policemen and probably 500 Catholics awaiting them. As each A. P. A. walked into the hall he was hooted. One delegation of ten men, each carrying a revolver in his hand was led by a man who carried a shot gun. They were not molested. The rioters outside did not attempt to enter the hall but waited until the meeting was over. Then the row started. The A. P. A. members left the hall two by two. As they got to the door the policemen began stopping and disarming them. Then the crowd outside began throwing rocks and bricks, and a general fight ensued. C. M. Reed, a Santa Fe Railroad man was struck over the right eye and badly cut, while under arrest. Officer Ready was struck on the left shoulder by a heavy rock. James Brown saw O'Conner in the act of throwing a rock and shot at him, the ball taking effect in the man's hand. Brown was arrested but broke away, fired two more shots and escaped. Six shots in all were fired. Many hand to hand fights occurred but no one was dangerously hurt so far as known.

A SETTLEMENT

Demanded of England for an Attack on a French Explorer.

A Paris special to the Cincinnati Enquirer says: England will have to settle with France the question of Lieut. Mizon and the Royal Niger Company. As the foreign office declined to be responsible for the British Company's attack on the French explorer, it is proposed to send an expeditionary force to punish the British raiders as the Dahomeyans and other savages have been punished. This would bring the British Government to a sense of its responsibility. Under the Anglo-French Convention in 1890 the British Company claims all the territory behind its station. The Colonial party in France demands that this shall be abrogated, as it is contrary to the act of Berlin, which guarantees the free navigation of the Niger.

A correspondent of the French Central African Society writes describing a wholesale slaughter of negro employes of the Niger Company. The French public is treated at the same time to an account of how Captain Lugard, in Unganda, piously armed the Protestant natives and enabled them to slaughter 3,000 Catholics.

BLEW THEM TO ATOMS.

Union Sailors Employ Dynamite at San Francisco.

Six men were blown up with dynamite the other morning, on the water front, San Francisco. Two were killed outright, three died in the city receiving hospital after a few hours of agony horrible to behold, and the sixth still lives, with the prospect of ultimate recovery, but he will be only a shattered and broken wreck of a man.

The explosion was the result of a deliberate and diabolical crime, meant to do far deadlier work than the snuffing out of five lives. It is charged directly to the Coast Seamen's Union, a strong and lawless organization that has ruled 'Frisco's water front for four years and more.

The Curtin House has for years been known as a non-union or "scab" sailors' boarding house, and attacks of more or less brutality have from time to time been made by union sailors both upon John Curtin and the men he housed. Three times has Curtin been brutally beaten in the past two years. Only two or three days ago a trap was set on the sidewalk so Curtin could fall in it, and as a result of the injury thus received he was lying in bed when the explosion occurred.

Muncie Must Pay Her Expense.

Governor Matthews decided that he would not draw upon the cholera epidemic fund for the relief of Muncie, and that city will have to continue the the battle against small-pox without assistance from the State. When the State Board of Health returned from its visit of inspection President Boots addressed a letter to the Governor saying, in effect, that the city ought to take care of itself and that the small-pox epidemic is not an "invasion of the State by a contagious disease" within the meaning of the law making the appropriation and it would not be advisable to use it in that way. The cost to the city in maintaining the quarantine and caring for the indigent who have the disease is between $2,000 and $3,000 a week.

A Noble Reserve Fund.

New York special: From the financial point of view the International Cigarmakers' Union stands at the head of the labor organizations of the country. It has a reserve fnud of over half a million dollars, a snug enough fortune when you come to think of it. The method of accumulating the big reserve fund of the Union is practically the same as that employed by other labor organizations. Among the achievements of the Union were the adoption of an admirable financial system and the payment of high dues, the shortening of the hours of labor and a benefit system. These regulations have caused the organization to grow, and the reserve fund has steadily increased.

A Million Dollar Fire.

A square and a half of buildings were laid in ruins and a million dollars' worth of property went up in smoke at St. Joseph, Mo. The cause of all the loss was the stub of a lighted cigarette thrown carelessly on the floor of a store room, on the fifth floor of the big department store of Townsend, Wyatt & Emery. The loss so far as known, $712,000; insurance, $650,000.

Smith Arrested.

Hardly had the battle ended at Coney Island, and just as the participants of the contest were donning their citizen clothes, Smith was put under arrest by a Sheriff of Roby, Ind., for being a principal in a prize fight recently with Johnny Griffin, which took place before the defunct Columbian Club. The official who made the arrest is not known

Picture of His Dead Bride.

A bride of only three weeks, Mrs. Harvey Stork, of Adamstown, Pa., died several days ago. Before the ceremonies began the grief-stricken husband had the body of his bride dressed in her wedding gown and placed in a rocking-chair. A photographer had been engaged previously, and he took her picture.

The Wisconsin Central Mast Go It Alone.

Milwaukee special: Judge Jenkins has handed down his decision in the Northern Pacific case. The decision terminates the lease of the Wisconsin Central road by the Northern Pacific and gives the property back into the hands of the Central Company.

Robbers Left One Solitary Penny.

An express package supposed to contain $500 when opened at Trinity, Tex., was found to contain only 1 cent and a lot of brown paper. The case is mysterious. Detectives are at work on the case.

Aid for the Needy.

Evansville, Ind., through the Business Men's Association, will send a car of provisions to Brunswick, Ga., to yellow fever sufferers, besides a large sum of money.

DEATH'S SCYTHE SUPPLANTED BY THE RAILROAD FLAG AND LANTERN.

—From the Chicago Times.

BANDITS WERE FOILED.

Met by Blue Coats and Loaded Revolvers on an Express Car.

Joy reins unconfined in railroad circles at St. Joseph, Mo., over the clever ruse of the Kansas City, St. Joe and Council Bluffs Railroad officials, which resulted in the death of two and capture of three express train robbers a mile and a half from that city.

Information came to the officials late at night that train No. 3 would be held up near Francis, a village in the midst of a desolate waste. Action was immediately taken and a dummy train exactly like No. 3 was made up. The chief of police and sixteen officers were put aboard and the train pulled out. When two miles out the engineer saw a lantern signalling the train to stop. He immediately slowed up and when the train was brought to a standstill a masked man jumped aboard the engine and held revolvers at the heads of the engineer and fireman. Five others ran to the express car and demanded admittance. The door was opened and, two guarding without, three of the bandits jumped into the car with revolvers drawn. When fairly within the police stepped out of concealment and called upon the robbers to surrender. They were taken by surprise but opened fire. A fusillade of shots was exchanged and when the smoke cleared away Ed Kohler and Higo Indall were lying dead upon the floor of the car. Fredericks, Hersh, and Harvey were placed under arrest and a posse started in pursuit of the robber who was in the engine.

Not an officer was hurt, and the train returned at once to the city, where the three prisoners were locked up and the two dead men taken to the undertaker's. It was the most successful rout the officers have ever given a band of robbers, and there is great rejoicing over the result. All of the train robbers lived in St. Joseph.

SHOT THE ROBBER DEAD.

Masked Men Attempt to Rob the Valparaiso, Ind., Normal School.

The sensational attempt at robbery at the banking department of the Northern Indiana Normal School at Valparaiso by two masked men, which resulted in the killing of Frank Robinson, one of the robbers, and the wounding of his companion, Claire Mcody, as he gave his name, is still the main topic of talk in the vicinity. It was one of the boldest acts ever attempted in the northern part of the State, and was in a place surrounded by hundreds of boarding houses, where over 2,500 students were within a stone's throw. Two masked men armed to the teeth came into the banking office of the college shortly after 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The only occupants of the room were the Secretary, Miss Kate Corboy, and her assistant, Miss Emma Jones. The women, although covered by the robbers' revolvers, screamed and fled. One of the men fired point blank at Miss Jones, the bullet missing the girl by only a few inches. Realizing that their plans were frustrated and that any efforts to force the huge safe would now be useless, with the alarm given, the two desperadoes walked coolly out of the office and down the steps, revolvers in either hand. They were confronted by Mail Carrier Arnold, whom they covered with their weapons. Unabashed the latter began to yell fire in a stentorian voice, while students poured out of the college buildings and the big boarding houses and dormitories, which cluster all about. At the first shout the burglars wheeled without firing and ran to the fence, which they leaped. They ran through the campus, and started down the track of the Fort Wayne Road toward the east, while behind them followed a yelling and constantly growing mob of students. The crowd of pursuers must have numbered 1,000.

The students were generally unarmed as to fire arms, but carried club and stones which they had picked up on the way. The robbers answered with shots. The other pursuing party now came near enough to open fire, and a regular fusillade followed. Nathan O. Howe, of Michigan City, Ind., was driving along the road with a wagon load of peaches, and was fired at by one of the twain. He alighted from his vehicle, deliberately sighted his Winchester across the fence, and brought Robinson to the ground with a horrible wound in the breast. The man expired instantly. His companion knelt over him and took his revolver, throwing away his empty weapons. But before he could use it he was shot by Howe from the roadside. He was then captured and locked up.

Frank Robinson entered the school Nov. 8, 1892, registering from Cincinnati. He returned there about three weeks ago and again registered from Cincinnati. Claire arrived a few days ago and inquired for Frank, and is now believed to be his brother. In an interview Claire said they expected to get about $30,000, as they supposed Brown & Kinney kept all their money in the safe.

Howe, who brought the robbers down, was released on bail and is the hero of the city. His entire load of peaches were sold on the streets and over $1,000 was realized.

BOMBS IN BARCELONA.

An Anarchist Hurls a Deadly Missile Among Spanish Soldiers.

An anarchist tried to kill Captain General Martinez de Campos at Barcelona with a bomb. There had been a review of all the troops in the district early in the morning. Shortly before noon the captain general and his staff took their places on one side of the large square near the middle of the city and the march past began. The head of the column had hardly passed the captain general when a bomb was thrown from the crowd. It struck among the staff officers and exploded almost directly under the captain general's horse. The captain general was thrown to the ground and his horse, with its legs shattered, rolled over beside him. General Castellvi, chief of staff, also fell wounded from his horse. A soldier of the civic guard was killed instantly, and five others were injured so severely by pieces of shell that they probably will die. The name of the anarchist who threw the bomb is Pallas. He glories in his deed. He says he intended to kill Martinez de Campos and his whole staff. He will be court-martialed at once. In his house the police found, that night, a great quantity of the most violent revolutionary literature.

HUNDRED AND SIXTY DROWNED.

Russian War Ship Pousalka Founders in the Gulf of Finland.

Fragments of woodwork, coats and other wreckage have floated ashore in the Gulf of Finland, showing that the Russian war ship Pousalka, with ten officers and 150 seamen, has foundered, and that all hands are lost. She sailed from Revel, in the Gulf of Finland, for Helingsport, in the same gulf, and has not been heard from since. The Pousalka had four and one-half inches of armor, carried four nine-inch guns, was of 2,000 tons displacement, had 786 indicated horse-power, and was classed as having a speed of twenty-eight knots. She was built in 1867. The body of a sailor who is supposed to have belonged to the crew has been washed ashore in the Gulf of Finland. It is known that severe gales swept over those waters soon after she left port. There is no doubt, as the admiralty states, that the Pousalka has foundered.

AN IDYL OF HONOLULU.

A Bold Stroke for a Husband. Written for This Paper.

BY LEON LEWIS.

CHAPTER VII—Continued.

The following day Ralph made a long visit to Honolulu, but returned unusually serious and dejected, having failed again to find any clew to the secrets by which he was continually haunted—his real place in the world, his name, his kindred and his history.

"I may as well make up my mind to remain contentedly in my present situation," he said to Alma Bullet, after he had briefly sketched the day's pilgrimage. "It seems that I am never to learn anything about myself, and that you and your father are the only friends I am likely to encounter."

"Well, what other friends do you want?" demanded Bullet, smilingly, he having drawn near the couple in time to hear Ralph's gloomy observation. "In doing what we could for you have we not made you a pleasant home, and provided you with every necessary of existence, just as you in return have filled our hearts with happiness we never should have experienced without you? It seems to me——"

The snapping of a dry twig in some bushes near the cottage announced an intruder in that quarter, and Bullet suddenly paused and listened.

"Caution!" he whispered. "Some one is hidden there. Probably Keeri."

He bounded in the direction indicated, but soon returned flushed and panting.

"It was Keeri," he reported. "Alma will never be rid of the danger and annoyance of that fellow until she is married. I must look after him further." And he again vanished.

"Your father is right," said Ralph, with a sigh. "In marriage is your only protection from Keeri's persecutions. I owe you a great debt, Alma, and the least I can do is to become your protector. Will you marry me?"

The abruptness of the long wished for proposal prevented Alma from replying verbally, but it was with a visible delight that she crept into Ralph's arms and nestled her head in his bosom.

CHAPTER VIII.

ROSEATE VIEWS OF THE FUTURE.

The silence was soon broken by Ralph.

"You will name an early day?" he queried, in the same voice with which he would have asked the price of a bushel of potatoes.

"Yes—of course," simpered Alma as she raised herself up and looked sharply around to see if her father were sharing her joyous triumph, or if the prowling Kanaka were threatening to disturb it. "We island girls, you know, are simple in our tastes, and I shall not want a great deal of time to get ready. My wardrobe will be simplicity itself, of course, although I shall endeavor to make it worthy of us. Suppose," and she dropped her head upon Ralph's breast, and inserted one of her forefingers into her mouth, "suppose we say to weeks from to-morrow?"

"Just as you choose, love."

"Then it is settled," breathed Alma, more simperingly than before, "that we will be married two weeks from to-morrow. Would you prefer to be married in the morning or in the evening?"

"I shall leave you to arrange all that just as you please, love."

"Then we'll say in the evening; no, in the morning; at eight o'clock—no, at ten o'clock in the morning. Had I better be married at home, or shall I say at the missionary rooms or the church at Honolulu?

"It's all for you to decide, dearest."

"Then perhaps the church is the best place," mused Alma aloud. "It's too public on some accounts, to be sure; but then no girl of spirit likes to be married in an out-of-the-way corner. I think we may decide upon being married at our church in Honolulu, and that father will approve of our decision. I want all the girls to envy me, you see, and being married at home is out of the question. But you don't seem to be interested—delighted?"

"Oh, yes, I am—perfectly charmed," returned Ralph, with a sigh like that of a force-pump. "I was merely thinking—taking leave of my bachelorship, you know," and he smiled gloomily and distractedly. "As to all the details of our wedding, it is your privilege to arrange them to suit yourself, and in case of any doubt upon any point you can refer to your father."

"It is all settled, then," cried Alma, joyfully; "two weeks from to-morrow, in our church at Honolulu, at 10 o'clock in the morning."

Here Bullet popped upon the scene as suddenly as he had left it. A glance at the flushed and jubilant features of his daughter thrilled him, as he caught her observation.

"What is settled?" he demanded, looking searchingly around.

"Why, my marriage with Ashley."

"Marriage? Ashley?" repeated Bullet, simulating the greatest astonishment. "I don't comprehend you."

"No, of course not—it's all so sudden, so unexpected," returned Alma. "But the fact is, Ashley and I have just betrothed ourselves to each other—subject, of course, to your approval."

The idea seemed at last to get through Bullet's head, and he lost no time in entering upon an elaborate display of his approval and blessing.

"This is as it should be," he declared, after he had signified the general tenor of his sentiments. "Ashley is good and noble, and has long been to me as a son. You are the sweetest and most charming of girls, Alma, and have always been the most affectionate of daughters. I am sure that you will both be happy. But let us go into the house and talk over the matter at our leisure. I saw nothing of Keeri," he added with a final sweeping glance into the adjacent bushes. "He has certainly just been here, but he seems to have gone."

The old man led the way into the house, and the couple followed him, shutting themselves in. They had scarcely vacated the door-yard when the Kanaka entered it, advancing from the bushes nearest the entrance. His face would have been a study for a painter, it was so full of hopeless love, revenge, regret, and rage, all hustling together in one mighty convulsion.

Keeri could indeed realize now what a mistake he had made by resorting to violence. It seemed to him, as he glared after the couple, that he himself was directly resposible for their betrothal.

"I should have knocked him on the head and let the girl alone!" he said, to himself, as he halted a moment and tried to peer into one of the windows of the little sitting-room. "But even now there is a way of setting things to rights, if I can only get at it. There are two weeks, if I heard aright, in which to think and act, and I must be a poor fool, indeed, if in two weeks I cannot invent a plan of separating them forever."

Unable to see or hear anything further, the envenomed rival took his departure.

In the meantime the old sailor had given a general review of the situation.

"We are all of us poor enough," said he, by way of conclusion, "but we are also rich enough to go through the world with every necessary comfort. Our little homestead here will not only afford us a good home but a good living. Ashley can assist me in its management during the remainer of my days, and afterwards work it upon his own account. The program is simple, you see, but it is enough for a reasonable ambition. And, after all, it is not wealth that makes our happiness, but affection and contentment."

"By the way," said Ralph abruptly, "is Mr. Benning dead—Mr. Ashley Benning, after whom you have named me?"

"Why, of course," replied Bullet.

"Then I can at least count upon keeping this name permanently," commented Ralph. "It will matter little, in fact, if I should never discover the name to which I am really entitled."

"Of course not. If you marry Alma under the name of Ashley Benning, you will be just as legally her husband as if you had married her under your former name—the name you have forgotton and lost, whatever it may be. Even if your real name should be discovered after your marriage—and it is to be hoped, of course, that it will be, sooner or later—why, even then there would not be the least flaw in your marriage with Alma—not the least."

The conversation was prolonged to a sufficiently late hour, but Ralph at last withdrew to his own room, and the father and daughter then drew their chairs close together.

"Caution!" breathed the ex-sailor. "I must have a few words with you privately. You have really caught him."

"Yes, thanks to Keeri."

"He seems cold, however."

"He is cold—just like a stone. He offered himself to me merely from a sense of duty, or gratitude, or something of the kind, and not from affection. But what do I care for the why or the how of his proposal? It is enough for me that he is engaged to me."

"Of course it's enough," assented Bullet. "The whole situation is lovely. We must take good care that there's 'no slip betwixt the cup and the lip,' and that's all there is about it. As soon as you are duly married to him—that is, within a few days thereafter—I shall suddenly discover that his real name is Ralph Kemplin, that he is the only son of the great merchant of Chicago, that he is the heir of untold wealth—in short, that the facts of the case are just what you and I have known them to be ever since he was thrown into our keeping. And then all you and he will have to do is to take your true places in the world as the son and daughter-in-law of Mr. and Mrs. Kemplin."

The glow that suffused Alma's cheeks at this blissful prospect was almost hectic in its coloring.

"How lovely it all is!" she breathed.

"Lovely! Lovely's no name for it. You've caught a prize that the richest girl in the world might envy."

It was with this rosy view of the situation that the couple finally separated for the night.

CHAPTER IX.

The two weeks of busy preparation that followed passed like a dream to both Bullet and his daughter, and it was as the culmination of a long gladness that they arrived in due course at the auspicious hour so ardently longed for—the hour chosen for the marriage.

It had seemed essential to the old sailor to keep the matter quiet, even as it had seem essential to Alma to give the affair a certain publicity. Through the union of their counsels a happy medium had been chosen—quite a large circle of friends and neighbors being invited, while mere acquaintances were entirely ignored and left in ignorance of what was transpiring. The occasion was well attended, therefore, without being crowded. The friends of Alma's school-girl days were especially numerous, and she had the satisfaction of feeling that she was their particular envy.

The parties took their places at the foot of the altar just as the hour named for the ceremony sounded. The priest opened his book and proceeded with the ceremony which was to make the twain one flesh, paying little heed to the contented joy of the bride, the gloomy abstraction of the bridegroom, or the beaming yet anxious delight of Bullet.

The ceremony had advanced to that point where the minister demands of any one having objections to instantly offer them, or thereafter hold his peace forever, when a hurried tramping of feet resounded along an inner corridor of the church, and a man came swiftly into the midst of the assemblage.

This man was Keeri.

"I am sorry to disturb you, reverend sir," he said, proceeding directly to business, "but I am called here by an imperative duty."

The priest repeated the word with a stammer and a look of astonishment.

"Yes, sir—duty," repeated Keeri, even more emphatically than before. "I am here to forbid this marriage."

"And why forbid it?"

"Because the young lady, Miss Bullet, is now engaged to be my wife and has long been promised to me."

"It is false!" cried the ex-whaler fiercely as he advanced in the attitude of throwing a harpoon. "The rascal is lying!"

The priest closed his book abruptly.

"Let there be no violence in the house of God," he said, placing himself between Keeri and Bullet. "The whole ceremony is adjourned until this hour to-morrow. In the meantime, you had all better settle your differences in a seemly and Christian manner—without violence and without scandal."

And with this he beat a retreat into the little apartment at the rear of the altar, whither Bullet at once followed him.

"Are you going to abandon us?" demanded the old sailor, with ill-concealed surprise. "Are you going to suspend the ceremony upon the mere verbal statements of such a person as Keeri?"

The clergyman nodded assent.

"Will it not be enough if my daughter and I expressly declare that there is not the least basis for the pretensions of this man?"

"No, that will not be enough," was the quiet reply. "Let me be frank with you, Mr. Bullet. It is out of consideration for you and your daughter that I have suspended proceedings so promptly. My object is to check a large scandal at its very commencement."

"What do you mean, sir? Scandal? What scandal can there be in these premises?"

"A great one, if I am rightly informed," said the priest. "In ordinary circumstances, I should pay little heed to an intruder of this kind, beyond demanding of him the instant declaration of all his charges and the equally prompt production of all his proofs. But Keeri is here, as I am reliably informed, not merely to accuse you and your daughter of a want of faith toward himself, but also to accuse you of a want of faith toward Mr. Benning. In a word, Keeri says that you and your daughter know who this young stranger really is, how he came here, who his friends are and where they are, and that it is a conspiracy between you and Miss Bullet to inveigle this unfortunate young man into this marriage."

The consternation of the old sailor at this exposition of affairs was so great that he could neither move nor speak.

"Now let these charges be true or false," resumed the clergyman, "Keeri has come here, as I have been warned beforehand, to throw them in your face, and as this denunciation would necessarily provoke a great scandal and tumult, it has seemed to me the part of a Christian pastor and a man of sense (as well as of a true friend) to nip the whole project of the Kanaka in the bud by the course I have taken."

The old sailor had never seen lightning clearer than he now saw that the priest's action had been dictated by the best of good judgment and friendship.

"I approve entirely of your action, sir," he said, hurriedly, as he seized and pressed the pastor's hand fervently. "I will return home immediately with my daughter, and the whole project of her marriage with Mr. Benning is suspended and dismissed until you hear from me further on the subject."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Shakspeare in India.

The Anglomania with which the educated Hindoo is afflicted has extended even to Shakspeare. They have translated him into Hindoostanee and have begun to give representations of his plays on the boards. The only character in Shakspeare which the Hindoo is fitted to play by nature is Othello, but they get over the difficulty by flouring their faces.

Not long ago, I learn, one of these native companies put on "Macbeth." All went well till the duel scene between Macbeth and Macduff, which was producing in a gingerly mind-you-don't-hurt-me way, when suddenly Macbeth dropped his sword and began to buckjump all over the stage, shrieking, "Wah! Wah! Bapri Bap, what for you hit me on the finger nail, you black baboo? Ram ram sita ram, kya kurega, I am entirely destroyed, damnations take you!" This naturally rather upset the gravity of the audience, who applauded Macbeth's impromptu skirt dance to the echo. After the injured finger had been bound up, and the actor consoled with a large mouthful of betel nut, he came on and deputed a subordinate to finish the fight, while he sat and explained the business between the puffs of his hookah. "Thus is the immortal bard ruthlessly mutilated by an enlightened race!" exclaims an eye-witness.—London Figaro.

Scriptural Sanction.

Speaking of pipes recalls a story of Bishop Seabury, the first bishop of Connecticut. He was a great smoker, and when traveling always carried with him a good supply of his finest tobacco, and a wooden case made to hold three long clay pipes. He would no more have forgotten these than his books and vestments. An old lady of the diocese was an ardent admirer of the bishop, but the clouds of tobacco smoke surrounding his head like a halo troubled her. At last she mustered up courage and said:

"Bishop, how can you smoke? Don't you think it an ungodly habit and unbecoming to a minister?"

"Well, my good woman, I thought you read your bible," said the bishop.

"I do," she replied, "but I never saw anything in it to countenance smoking."

"What," said the bishop, "did you you never read the passage which exhorts us to praise God on the pipe? Impossible!"

The old lady was satisfied, and afterwards told people who criticised the bishop for smoking that they didn't rightly understand the Scriptures.

They "Considered That P'int."

In Illinois there is an old law on the statute books to the effect that in criminal cases the jury is the "judge of the law as well as the facts." Though not often quoted, once in a while a lawyer with a desperate case makes use of it.

In this case, says the Green Bag, the judge instructed the jury that it was to judge of the law as well as the facts, but added that it was not to judge of the law unless it was fully satisfied that it knew more law than the judge.

An outrageous verdict was brought in, contrary to all instructions of the court, who felt called upon to rebuke the jury.

At last one old farmer arose—

"Jedge," said he, "weren't we to jedge the law as well as the facts?"

"Certainly," was the response; "but I told you not to judge the law unless you were clearly satisfied that you knew the law better than I did."

"Well, jedge," answered the farmer, as he shifted his quid, "we considered that p'int."

Remarkable Indeed.

A young woman was recently introduced to Mrs. Croly (says the New York Times) as "sister of So-and-so, the artist." Instantly the exclamation followed: "I should have known the relationship, my dear, by the resemblance. Why, it is positively startling. I never saw two faces more exactly alike in contour and——" "But Mrs. Croly," interrupted the girl in a meek, small voice, "I am only his sister-in-law." "Which makes it all the more remarkable," continued the other, without the least embarrassment or hesitation.

WORKINGMEN SPEAK.

TEXTILE WORKERS REBUKE THE PROTECTIONISTS.

With Free Raw Material They Say They Can Distance the World—Wages Often Reduced Under McKinley Rule—A Peep Behind the Scenes.

Their Story Told.

On Sept. 12, the New York Press, with juggler-of-statistics Robert P. Porter at the helm, said editorially:

> LET THE WORKINGMEN SPEAK.
>
> In Philadelphia the workingmen in the textile industries are making a movement of their own for presentation to the Ways and Means Committee of a protest against severe reduction of the tariff duties. This example should be followed by the workingmen in the protected industries all over the country. A great number of these men have always been protectionists from conviction and self-interest; and even those of them who have permitted themselves to be persuaded that the tariff has no influence to maintain high wages have been undeceived by recent experience. They perceive now that the mere threat of duty reduction has inflicted semi-paralysis upon manufactures and has already begun that process of reducing wages which must be continued upon a large scale when tariff revision shall be an accomplished fact. The dullest mind among them may perceive that, when the tariff barriers shall be removed, American wages must fall to the European level or the manufacturers must continue operations. The manufacturers made the fight last year and in preceding years against this change, and they were defeated. This year it must be made by the workingmen if it is to be made with any hope of success, and the time to act is now, when the Ways and Means Committee has consented to hear those who favor and those who disapprove the proposed revision. The politicians at Washington will heed the petitions of the workmen, where the plea of the manufacturer would be regarded with indifference. The manufacturer has been denounced as a robber and an oppressor of the workman. But when the laborer himself shall protest that the tariff operates to his advantage, the free traders no longer can claim to be his champions.

On September 11, while Porter or his assistant was preparing this editorial, the unemployed textile workers of Kensington, a suburb of Philadelphia, were holding a meeting on a vacant lot and doing some talking on their own account. Anticipating the advice of the press, they appointed a committee to present their views before the Ways and Means Committee. The following is from the Philadelphia Record of Sept. 12:

> The genuine workingmen of Kensington, who favor tariff reform and free raw materials, and who do not believe that the recent financial stringency was caused by any fear of tariff revision, sharply rebuked the bogus workmen and calamity-howlers yesterday at a meeting of unemployed mill hands assembled on a lot in the rear of Bromley's Lehigh avenue mills. There were hundreds of protectionists in the crowd that faced the speakers, but not one of them had the courage to attempt to answer the speakers, who had gained their knowledge from actual work in the mills. Beyond an occasional derisive shout from the outskirts of the crowd, the speakers were uninterrupted save by applause. The meeting was called for the purpose of appointing a committee to solicit alms for the suffering victims of the manufacturers' avarice. James Schaffer was the first speaker, and for nearly an hour he advanced arguments in favor of free raw materials. He said: "I have been selected chairman of this meeting and of the committee to solicit alms for the suffering families of the unemployed. What is the cause of this destitution? The manufacturers tell you they cannot run their places for fear of a reduction in the tariff. Now, for four years, under the highest protective duties ever levied, your condition has been growing worse. You know that wages have been reduced and that in not one but a dozen establishments hereabouts there have been two and three reductions since the McKinley bill went into effect.
>
> WHY HOUSES ARE VACANT.
>
> There are now 50,000 untenanted houses in Philadelphia, and fully two-thirds of them have been made vacant by the advances in rent made by the manufacturers, which have driven the people into the streets. I have taken pains to inform Chairman Wilson, of the Ways and Means Committee of Congress, of the true feeling among the working people of this section, and that John Stewart, and those associated with him in getting the petitions for the retention of the tariff are merely the cat's-paws of the manufacturers. I would like to have some one demonstrate to you now how the taxation of the McKinley bill benefits the workingman. The mills are closed, and where any work is being done the workmen are submitting to part time at reduced wages to fight starvation. The people who got up the tariff petitions went into grog shops and secured the signatures of men who did not know what they were signing. Here are the men and there is the machinery; now give us the free raw material and we can not only compete with but distance the world.
>
> LACE CURTAIN WEAVERS PROTEST.
>
> The members of Branch No. 1 of the Lace Curtain Weaver's Amalgamated Society have adopted resolutions in which they set forth that John Stewart and James Edgar, the delegates to Washington, were not elected by their branch, and they will formulate a petition of their own.
>
> A GREAT MEETING PLANNED.
>
> What promises to be the greatest meeting of the textile workmen ever held in this city will be held under the auspices of the Kensington Tariff Reform Club, at Textile Hall, on Thursday evening next. The Committee on Arrangements met last night, and John E. Mulholland was selected to act as chairman of the meeting. F. A. Herwig will make the opening address, and several speakers of national prominence on tariff reform will also make speeches. The originators of the meeting intend to show conclusively that almost the entire body of textile workers, irrespective of party, are in favor of free raw materials. The petitions that have been forwarded to Washington, signed by thousands, and purporting to show that the people desire the tariff left as it is, are also to be made subjects of especial attention. The workmen declare that the signatures were obtained in many cases when the men did not really know what the petition contained and were given little chance to find out. In addition, they claim that a large majority of the names are those of women and children. In the case of females only the initials of the first names were signed, so that signatures appear to be those of men.

A Peep Behind the Scenes.

The tariff pot is boiling merrily, but no one as yet can see exactly what is in it. A number of industries in cotton, wool and linen have had, or are shortly to have, hearings by the Ways and Means Committee, but, so far as we can gather, no one of them has been able to learn what effect these representations are having, or, indeed, what principle is to govern the formation of the tariff of '94. Deductive reasoning from precedent and from known conditions alone affords a basis for any conclusion on this point. In conversation this week with a gentleman who has been more or less identified with tariff making in this country for many years, and who enjoys the personal friendship of Secretary Carlisle and Chairman Wilson, the editor of the Dry Goods Economist was given the positive opinion that the tariff finally passed would not be a "revenue only" tariff, but would be a modified protective measure, and that specific duties, the adoption of which, so far as practicable, has always been urged by the Dry Goods Economist, not because of their exact justice, but because of the ease and certainty of their application, would not be favored to any considerable extent by the Ways and Means Committee. According to this gentleman's prognosis, we may look for moderate ad valorem duties, laid with reference to the revenue which they would produce, but also with reference to incidental protection of established industries. That all textile schedules will be based upon free raw material, this information seemed to consider a matter of course.—Dry Goods Economist.

Give the People a Chance.

Let the Committee on Ways and Means, if it is to have "hearings," widen the scope of investigation which has usually characterized "hearings" by that body. The selfish interest of protected manufacturers will prompt them to solicit audience. They will expend time and money to secure it. There are other men in the country whose opinions are of more value. They may not offer their testimony, or make a gratuitous tender of their advice to the committee, but it should not be impossible for the committee to give them at least equal opportunity with those who have selfish interests to serve. If this be done it will be better for the committee, and it will be better for the country. When this is said, it is not meant that only such tariff reformers as favor reductions in the lines they are interested in shall be called. Let the consumer be heard. Free raw material is well, but where is its advantage to the masses if it does not result in reducing the prices of manufactured products? Give the people a chance.—St. Louis Republic.

McKinleyism Must Go.

The American people at the polls in 1890 and again in 1892 repudiated McKinleyism and it must go. The American people have given protection an ample trial and they are tired of it. Its beneficiaries have grown steadily more and more aggressive and disregardful of the rights of the public until nothing remains but to sweep from the statute books the last vestige of class-legislation which finds its highest exemplication in the form of McKinleyism. The steadily increasing avarice of the tariff barons forms an interesting study. When the Constitution was adopted and the government settled down to business thereunder the first tariff was levied for revenue solely. It was necessary to indulge in indirect taxes, for the people were chary of public burdens and customs duties furnished an ample field for operations. Shrewd, designing men soon saw that the adjustment of the various duties might be so made as to furnish a form of bounty to private interests and "incidental protection," followed wherever such protection would also increase the revenues. Revenue was still foremost. Then followed straight tariff for revenue with incidental protection. Then the incidental feature was knocked out. After various vicissitudes and nearly a century of time following a tariff for protection with incidental revenue, came the McKinley tariff for protection solely without regard to revenue. And the revenue is suffering. Each month under the operation of McKinleyism, sees a reduction in the customs receipts, while at the same time the expenses of the government under Republican laws are heavier than ever. Give us economy in national expenditures and a relief from the burden of McKinleyism.—Des Moines Leader.

A Sugar Refiner's Tariff.

A few days ago the American Sugar Refining Company, which enjoys a practical monopoly of sugar refining in this country, purchased 10,000 tons of raw sugar, the value of which at the top price of 3½c per pound would be about $784,000. The present wholesale price of refined sugar (granulated) is 5.18c, which, according to the usual methods of calculation, leaves a profit of about 1.06c per pound to refiners, or about $236,000 in all on this single transaction, covering not more than two weeks' supply. Foreign sugar, corresponding in grade to our granulated, could be landed here under present conditions at a cost of about 5c per pound, including the duty of ½c per pound; but importers fear the risk of a drop in home refined sugars in these markets that would inevitably be made if necessary to keep out foreign supplies. No better example of the effect of the present sugar tariff could be afforded. It is not, as it ought to be, a revenue tariff; for, in the last fiscal year it only produced about $160,000 for the Government Treasury. It is not a wage-earner's tariff; for labor pays the bulk of the tax and plays but a very small share in the cost of refining. It is nothing but a refiner's tariff, because at present it is enabling the trust to more than double its profits, and at the same time rendering its control of the market unassailable. Nobody else is benefited. The Ways and Means Committee at Washington cannot very well close its hearings on the tariff without taking up sugar schedules.—Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin.

Reviving Industry.

The New York Tribune is so determined to have a tariff scare follow the monetary panic that it said a day or two ago that more manufactories are closing than opening. Its own news columns, if honestly conducted, refute this new calamity howl. Yesterday's morning and evening newspapers recorded the resumption of work in forty establishments, most of them large ones. The number of men reported as put to work was over 16,000, and the number not specified would undoubtedly raise the total to 20,000. Not a single shut-down was reported! This is but an example of the recovery that has been going on since the strong vote in the House repealing the silver purchase law. The improvement has received a new stimulus by the sure prospect of repeal in the Senate. It is seen in the money and the stock markets. It extends all over the country. Our news columns to-day tell a most encouraging story of reviving industry. Why should any newspaper seek to discredit or belittle this recovery? Does the Tribune's indebtedness to the protected monopolies extend so far as to impel it to try and frighten away returning prosperity by a new and senseless tariff scare? Such a course strikes us as bad journalism and poor patriotism.—New York World.

McKinley and His Bill.

Governor McKinley has opened his campaign in Ohio and in a way entirely unworthy of a man presuming to the leadership of a great party. At his first meeting the chairman who introduced him put a question in mental arithmetic to the crowd by stating the price of wheat last year and the price now, and answering the difference. Perhaps it is not fair to hold Governor McKinley responsible for this childish absurdity. He should have disavowed it, and he failed to do. How he succeeded in explaining to his audience why wheat is cheap under the operation of the McKinley tariff, which protects it against foreign competition, the dispatches do not tell us. Perhaps he did not go into that feature of the case. Perhaps he thought it easier to rely on the mental arithmetic of the chairman. It is evident that the apostle of protection proposes to make a campaign in which he can talk tariff in his own way without opposition. He will not debate the question. Before the last election it was said that the McKinley law was doing its own talking. It was. And it is yet.—St. Louis Republic.

Shut the Door on Them.

If any question may be considered settled in tariff matters it is that raw wool is hereafter to be admitted free into this country. The mossbacks, however, do not seem to understand this, but are again besirging Washington with their wearisome old nonsense. The next man who enters the Ways and Means Committee to advocate the continuance of the stupid wool tax should be shown the door with an immediateness and enthusiasm sufficient to "make his head swim."—Dry Goods Economist.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY...SEPTEMBEB 28, 1893.

W. H. BRACKEN, of Brookville, has been appointed collector of revenue for the district of Indiana. This was the place Myers of Ft. Wayne was expecting McNagny to give him. But the older congressmen easily got away with McNagny.

EDITOR FAWCETT, of the Lagrange Democrat, seems to have fallen on hard times. About ten days ago he lost his residence by fire, including everything in it. The loss is estimated at about $1,500. Insurance $800. He thinks the fire came from a lamp left burning on the dining room table.

TRAIN robbery was attempted on the Illinois Central near Centralia last Wednesday evening at about 11 o'clock. Robbers who had got on at that place, when about two miles out, climbed into the engine, shot the engineer and fireman, though both resisted. They stopped the train, broke into the express car, but were there met by the other train men, and a hard fight resulted. The robbers were driven off, one of them being mortally hurt. He gave the names of his comrades. The engineer may die.

State Tuition Funds.

Teere is a great deal of talk just now about the efforts of Attorney-general A. G. Smith to have the surplus tuition funds turned back into the state treasury as the law directs. We do not know just what course Mr. Smith is taking, but as the trustees and people are all interested we give a few facts in this connection. The law directs very plainly that all the state tuition fund left in the trustees' hands on July 1 of each year, excepting $100, to be turned into the county treasurer's office. Notice, that this has reference only to that part part of the tuition fund that we receive from the apportionment to the different counties, made once a year, by the state superintendent of public instruction. Suppose the apportionment made by the state, gives DeKalb county $16,000, and that of this, Concord should receive $1,200. Then, the trustee of Concord, in paying his teachers, pays out this particular money first, and if it is not enough to pay off his teachers, he pays the balance out of the local tuition fund that he has raised by making a local levy. Then, if he finds he has quite a sum of the local levy left on hand, he keeps it and does not turn it back into the county treasury for the use of the state. Let it be made plain that no funds but the one that comes from the STATE distribution of tuition money, can be turned back into the treasury. The local tuition fund and all other funds remain with the trustees. As a matter fact the law does not apply to a single trustee in DeKalb county, as all of them, uniformily use up all the tuition money they get on the state distribution and are always obliged to raise some additional by means of the local tuition levy. If in the supposed case of Concord township, the $1,200 given them by the state is not all used, then whatever is left, should all except $100, be turned back into the treasury. This law is a good thing. Some counties have more money than they use, and it is said in such cases, the trustees carry large balances of money over from year to year, and get interest on it. It has for many years been claimed that certain trustees in Allen county have kept several thousands on hand, year after year, and got interest on it and it is to stop this, that the law was enacted. No trustee should however pay over any money till he consults his county superintendent.

We have put ourself to great inconvenience as well as some serious loss to accommodate you in this. Now, can you not make an effort for us? Get a part, if you can't get all. Send it to us, if you can't come. This don't mean those who have already paid up even, or nearly so, but those who are a year, or two or more behind. Let us hear from you. We have urgent use for the money.

We are the largest carpet dealers. We handle more baby carriages than any other firm. We make a specialty of window draperies. D. D. MOODY, Clerk.

JOHN BAXTER Attorney.

Communicated.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE COURIER.

DEAR SIR: You will confer a favor on me if you kindly publish the following extracts taken from a letter which was sent to the Spencerville, Ohio Journal by Mr. A. B. Brees. The remarks of the gentleman, who is not a Catholic, but an old school Baptist, are both opportune and reasonable. Catholics as well as Protestants are aware of the fact that for some time past a cry has been raised that the former would massacre the latter in this country, thus bewildering the minds of credulous and nervous people. For the sake, therefore, of this kind of people in DeKalb county, who have entertained these imaginary fears, and prompted by a motive of christian charity towards these same people, I beg of you dear editor to comply with my above stated request. The principles laid down in the following will surely convince every fairminded reader of the wrong done to their Catholic fellow citizens, in giving belief and perhaps encouragement to such silly rumors, especially now, as the feast of St. Ignatius, July 31, and the Catholic Congress, held week before last, is over, and no general massacre on the part of the Catholics has taken place. Fellow citizen you may breathe freely again. Malicious instigators have robbed many of you of your needed peace and rest.

REV. F. P. FAUST.

The following are the extracts referred to above, as taken from the Cath. Columbian, of Columbus, Ohio:

HE IS NOT SCARED.

A Protestant Rebukes His Co-Religionists for Anti Catholic Malevolence.

There is nothing more strange than that reasoning and well-informed men should lend their aid to the disturbance of the public mind, and to either willfully misrepresent, or, by silent consent, favor the malicious falsehoods repeated over and over again to promote widespread prejudice against the Roman Catholics.

Is it possible that a religious people at this day, who claim only about 10,000,000 communicants in the United States, including women and children, could dream of raising in a religious massacre of more than that many Protestants who have all the power of civil authority and the arms of the government to sustain them?

The population of the United States exceeds 62,000,000 people. If, therefore, Catholics are 10,000,000, men, women and children, this leaves them to oppose 50,000,000 of equal power per individual at least.

While dwelling upon this subject would it not be well for every Protestant citizen to consider two very important things?

1st. If these reports are not true, we are doing our own Catholic neighbors a great wrong by silently accepting such reports and allowing them to bias our minds to their prejudice and our own sense of safety.

2nd. If they were true it would be wise in us to inquire into the causes that led them to entertain thoughts of violence towards us, and seek to promote a return to amicable and honorable relations again.

As to the first of these thoughts, I repeat I have no fears; but as to the second I have good and undeniable evidence that the Catholics have the most to fear. Please suppress your surprise and patiently read, and I will show you positive evidence.

1st. Protestants have a dominant power in all the government departments of our country.

2nd. Protestants are striving by every means, private and public, individually and organicly, to deprive Catholics of the free and full benefits of government patronage and protection.

3rd. Protestants are endeavoring to procure legislation to force Catholics to send their children to common schools supplied with Protestant Bibles, or to furnish them schools at their own expense, which, by their choosing the latter, deprives them of the benefits of public moneys, and thus enables Protestants to educate their children at Catholic expense.

4th. Protestants are engaged in promoting a spirit of strife and denominational advantage over Catholics by circulating sensational rumors that have no ground in fact or in proof, but designed to promote ill-feeling, strife, and if possible, to eventually cause them to adopt retaliatory measures that will give Protestants a coloring of excuse to vent their feelings of spite against them.

Surely Solomon said truly, "There is a generation that curseth their father and doth not bless their mother."—Prov. xxx-ii.

Protestants have received all their creeds, rituals, orders and successions, either directly or indirectly, from the Catholics, and are, therefore, dependent upon them for their existence and nursing, and there should be better feeling between them.

It is an old saying, "Money makes the Mare go." We buy for cash; we sell for cash; we make the "mare go," both in buying and selling.

During the present Financial Stringency, money "talks." Our buyers have been in the market the past week, and as the goods come in, we are wonderfully surprised at the bargains our Spot Cash has brought us.

We buy low for cash, we sell low for cash. From all over this great county of DeKalb people are coming for our great bargains.

The people know a good thing when they see it. They find all the good things in our stock.

Among the incidents of childhood that stand out in bold relief, as our memory reverts to the days when we were young, none are more prominent than severe sickness. The young mother vividly remembers that it was Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured her of croup, and in turn administers it to her own offspring, and always with the best results. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

A little boy of Mrs. McDonald's living near here, fell against a red hot stove and was fearfully burned. The pain was terrible, and it was thought the burn was so severe as to scar the child for life. I sold the lady a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which, after greasing the sore, she applied. It soon removed all the fire and eased the pain, and in ten days the boy was well, no trace of the scar remaining. J. D. McLaren, Keysport, Clinton county, Ill. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Quite a number of our local wheelmen went to Kendallville Wednesday to see Zimmerman and other noted bicycle races.

David Link, of Union, divided melons with the COURIER Saturday. He was here with a quantity of them, which he disposed of to our people. They were very nice.

J. F. Shuman, of Waterloo, is to help prosecute Desters, when the case comes up in court. It will likely be a hard fight over him, as so many believe he was not insane.

The nickel social of the Presbyterian church will meet at the home of Mrs. Baird on Friday afternoon. A large attendance is desired, as important business will be transacted.

C. W. Ilger, who has been in charge of the Swineford House for the past year, returned last Friday to the old home at Plymouth, Ohio. They made many friends during their stay.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Kaley, who have been spending a month or two at Lakeside, Ohio, with Mrs. Kaley's father, J. P. Widney, have returned to their home at Red Cloud, Nebraska.

MARRIED: Sept. 21st, at the residence of the officiating clergyman in Auburn, Ind., James May, of Smithfield township, and Miss Mabel S. Jackman, of Franklin township, by Rev. J. N. Wilson.

Geo. Stealy, formerly of Angola, came through here last Friday on his way to visit the old home. He is now foreman in the paint department of the Columbus Buggy Co., at Columbus, Ohio, and doing well.

There was a party of the G. A. R. and other neighbors who met at John Hamilton's in Jackson township Saturday. It was in honor of his birthday, which was on Sunday. The same evening the young people also had a pleasant party at the same place.

Mrs. S. E. Rhodes, of Lamar, Mo., who has been visiting her many friends in this county the past three weeks, will leave for Chicago Saturday, where she will spend a few days at the fair before returning home. Her husband will be remembered as Capt. Rhodes.

R. B. McKahan, the new baker, went up to Waterloo Friday to meet his wife, who came on from Ligonier. She is here now with their little girl, for a few days, but will not remain till they secure a house, when she will return and they will then go to housekeeping.

Rev. J. N. Wilson was called to Butler Sunday to conduct the funeral services of Engineer John Green, who was killed in the Wabash wreck last week. He reports a large attendance. The brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Knights of Maccabees, to the number of about one hundred attending in a body.

There was a very pleasant reception of the young people at the residence of A. J. Ralston last Friday evening, given in honor of Miss Anna Ilger, on the eve of her departure for Ohio. It was in the nature of a surprise for her, but was very enjoyable. She has greatly endeared herself to the young people during her year's stay here.

Amos Walsworth came back last week from attending the first three fairs of the season. He showed his sheep at Van Wert, getting 4 premiums in 7 entries. At Paulding he got 9 out of 12 entries, and at Hicksville 2 out of 9. So it will be seen his stock ranked high. He says there is a great deal of stock shown at the fairs this year.

Many robbries are reported from all parts of the country, a special feature of which is masked men entering houses where they hear there is money. Having located their man, they hold him up, and some times hold up the whole family. We read of several of these cases, where men had taken from the banks, the money they had deposited and carried it home to keep. The knowledge of this leaked out in some way, and the thieves got it. We still insist that a good bank is safer place for money, than a private residence.

A telegram was received Tuesday morning of last week, Sept. 19, by relatives in Auburn, announcing the sudden death of Wm. T. Baldock, formerly of Auburn, but recently of Danville, Ill. His funeral took place Thursday at 2 o'clock, from his home, 118 South St. Religious services were conducted by Rev. Griffin, of the Christian church. His sister, Mary Baldock, of this place, attended the funeral. He was born in Ft. Wayne Nov. 25, 1853 and died at Danville, Ill., Sept. 19, 1893, at the age of 39 years, 9 months and 24 days. Various rumors are out as to the cause of his sudden and sad death, but the supposition is that it was caused by taking an overdose of some opiate or other strong remedy to still his nerves and get him straight, as he had been on a spree. He had in general, been steady and reliable, and was having a good job, but going on a spree at last, it is supposed he wanted to brace up and get right again as soon as possible, and so made the fatal mistake. But for his one failing, "Chris," as he was called here, was a pretty good fellow, and an excellent workman at his trade, that of tinner.

Next Monday court begins again. The term will likely be a busy one, as the jail is full of prisoners, including one murderer and several for robbery.

Allen Shultz, administrator of the Robert E. Johnston estate, was here this week making the final settlement report. He has finished the work up in a business-like way.

Twenty-four Auburn people started for Chicago Tuesday, all of whom take rooms of Mr. Harrison. There were others going also, we presume. Indiana day started them out.

E. H. Fisher, one of our most enterprising teachers, has a position in the Institute for Feeble Minded children, near Ft. Wayne. We hope his work may prove satisfactory.

The bank at Hamilton went out of business last week, we see by the Advocate. The reason assigned is that there was not enough business or that it was not sufficiently supported.

Geo. Lee, of the new laundry, began work at his room on South Main street, Monday. He had quite a number of orders to begin with, and will no doubt get his share of this line of work.

John Treesh is now in charge of the school buildings, as janitor. All Mr. Treesh ever does is done carefully, and we have no doubt the particular duties of his new position will be well looked after.

Harris Provines is now in charge of the Junction school. His father was a successful teacher, and it seems to run in the family. We have no doubt the rising Americans of the Junction will progress properly during the present school year.

There will be quarterly meeting next Sunday, Oct. 1, at the Second M. E. (German Methodist) church. Services Saturday evening at 7:30; Sunday at 10:30 a. m., 2:30 p. m. and 7:30 p. m. Rev. Mr. Allinger, of Detroit, will be present. Invitation to all.

There was a meeting of the stockholders of the Auburn fair at Gandy hall last Saturday. It was determined to prevent the sacrifice of the property for debts if possible. It is beleived that new stock to the amount of $4,000 can be sold, and this will put the association on its feet again.

There will be a public sale of the personal property of the late Isaac Farver, at the home in Jackson township, one mile east of the Center, on Thursday, Oct. 5, at 10 a. m. There will be horses, cows, sheep, hogs, wheat, oats, rye, corn, hay, wagon, harness, buggy, carpenter and shoemaker tools, etc. etc. Keep the date in mind.

Roy Garrett returned from Chicago last week, bringing with him as a souvenir of the fair, a little chamileon, the animal that has so long puzzled scientists by his ability to change his color to suit the object on which he happens to be. It used to be supposed they "lived on air," but it is now known that like the horned toad at Rickel & Sprott's, they fare sumptously on flies every day. This one came from Florida.

The Ligonier Banner has the following good words to say for R. B. McKahan, whose name, by the way, we mis-spelled last week. Mr. McKahan has lived in Ligonier many years, and been in business there, and the Banner speaks from a long acquaintance. This is what it said last week: "Last week R. B. McKahan, formerly proprietor of our creamery and one of our best known young business men, closed the purchase of a business at Auburn and we are sorry to say will soon take up his residence in that town. Mr. McKahan and his estimable wife have a large circle of friends in Ligonier who will be loth to see them depart, and all hope that they will be completely satisfied in their new location. Mr. McKahan is a wide awake energetic business man and we feel sure that the people of Auburn will find him a splendid citizen and a substantial addition to their list of enterprising and active merchants."

Martin Shimp, of Hollenberg, Kansas, and his wife were in town Saturday. They had visited relatives at Huntington, and then came from there by way of Ft. Wayne to Huntertown to see other relatives, and then from here went to Waterloo, their former home. There they will visit for a time, as well as among the relatives about Hudson. They have prospered well in their western home, they having been in Kansas eleven years. He has a large general store there and does a good business. He has held town office on a straight democratic ticket, even in Kansas. In fact he don't believe in mixing with the populists, whose wild ideas and wilder legislation, he says, have done Kansas farmers vast injury. He reports "Cully" Shimp doing a prosperous real estate business in Colorado Springs. John Husselman, who used to own the Dilgard place between here and Waterloo, has sold his Kansas farm and moved into the town of Barnes, Kansas, where his son, Henry, has a store. This place is about twenty miles from Hollenberg.

A most thrilling and sensational double balloon ascension is made daily from Cook & Whitby's exhibition grounds, the novel spectacle of a horse going skyward being a feature.

Will newspapers never stop publishing sensational lies about Noble county, and telling what a wild, tough county it is, full of black swamps, train bobbers and horse theives. The ear of man never heard such rot before.

A crowd of horsemen attending the Cook & Whitby's circus at Louisville recently, declared the English Derby races that they give, the most exciting they ever saw, being absolutely true to life—something never attempted before under canvas.

Wreck on the New Wabash.

The new Wabash had its first bad wreck last Fuiday morning at Kingsbury in Laporte county. An east bound freight was waiting on the sidetrack to let the regular west bound passenger go by. It was known that there were two sections, but for some reason not known, as soon as the first section had passed, the switchman of the freight opened he switch at the east end of the siding to let the freight train go out. Just then the second section came along at 45 miles an hour. Of course, it ran onto the sidetrack and plunged into the freight. Eleven were killed, including several train men, and many more were hurt. The brakeman ran away.

In Silken Chains.

One of the pleasantest home weddings it has been the privilege of the writer to witness for some time, took place at the home of Hon. E. D. Hartman, last Thursday evening, uniting in marriage, the only daughter, Mabel, to D. A. Hodge, of this place. The young couple are well and favorably known here, having lived here since they were quite young, Mr. Hodge being now one of our business men, having recently engaged in the jewelry business. The ceremonies took place at 8:30 oclock. The procession marching to the sweet strains of the wedding march, as played by Miss Flora Hoffman, was headed by Mr. Walter Hartman as Master of Ceremonies, and two young ladies, Miss May Rose and Miss Nellie Barns. Then came the groom, supported by his best man, Mr. Frank Eckhart, followed by the bride and her bridesmaid, Miss Maud Thorley, of Findlay, O. The minister, Rev. Archibald Durrie, of Superior, Wis., who is an uncle of the bride, stepped forward and performed the beautiful marriage ceremony of the Presbyterian church, which was rendered unusually solemn and impressive on this occasion. The party took their places under a canopy, arranged with ferns, smilax and white flowers called wedding bells. The decorations were superintended by J. F. Aber and were in excellent taste. The bride was dressed in white corded silk, trimmed in wide white lace, and carried white roses. After the ceremony, congratulations were in order and were most sincere and heartfelt. A splendid lunch followed which was mostly prepared by the bride herself, and was heartily enjoyed by all present. The presents were very nice and in good taste, combining the beatiful with the useful, and seemed as if they had been selected with a view of expressing the donor's kind wishes and sincere affection for the worthy bride and groom. For the present, the newly wedded couple will remain in the home of Mr. Hartman, as the bride has been her father's housekeeper since the death of her mother, and can hardly be spared entirely from the home to which she has been so much in the last few years.

James Berry, the English ex-Executioner, has reached the end of his rope as a lecturer and is anxious to drop back on the other platform. He is appealing to the Sheriffs in the United Kingdom to give him "a fresh start in life," as he says, by helping others to start out of it.

We don't wish Peary any harm, but we are getting very tired of him and his donkeys and his dogs, his barmecide discoveries, and all the shallow clap-trap we have to read about him. Why don't the navy department call him in, and send him about his proper business?

Some time ago a cyclone followed the route of a railroad for several miles, and now there is a theorist on deck who proposes to steer these storms by means of rails laid and wires strung for the purpose, into open sections of country, where they can spend there force without damage.

M. B. Curtis, "Sam'l of Posen," having been acquitted of murder in San Francisco after three trials, is going to return to the stage with a play based on his case. To most persons the experience would be about the last thing on earth to refer to, much less to make capital of—but "Sam'l" was never noted for his delicacy of feeling.

If farmers would accustom themselves to looking on the bright side of things and make the best of what they cannot help, as the average business man in the city is obliged to do, they would have more time to devote to their own interests, and would be happier and make everybody happier around them. Their chances for success would be vastly improved, too.

In a Chicago paper was recently published an account of the finding of the body of a young woman which had lain twenty years in the open air and retained its perfection of form. Every day at sunrise the velvet cheek mantled with a rosy blush. Very interesting, indeed, but the time when the author of the yarn indulges in a blush should also be made known. People would travel far to see the operation.

A story is being told in the House of Commons which illustrates Mr. Gladstone's exuberant buoyancy since the crisis of the home-rule debate. After the Prime Minister had voted in the division on clause 9, Mr. Marjoribanks went up to him and said: "I think I can find a pair for you, Mr. Gladstone, if you would like to go home now." "A pair!" said Mr. Gladstone; "find me two pairs and I may—I feel equal to any two tories to-night."

That whitecapism should have grown to its present proportion and become so rooted in society as to be a part of its life is due to the besottedness of the whole people of Indiana and their representatives in the lawmaking and executive body. With a true State pride, with a true spirit of intelligence, the people of Indiana would long ago have made laws or would so have executed those that are made that whitecapism should have been stamped out.

Francis S. Dymoke, the "Queen's Champion," whose death at the age of 65 was recently reported, bore a title to which no duties are now attached, but which, in the old days, necessitated the performance of a singular duty. It was to ride to Westminster Hall on coronation day and challenge any one who disputed the right of succession. The office was established by William the Conqueror, and was long held by Marmion and his descendants. The ceremony was last witnessed at the coronation of William the Fourth.

A Mr. Hamelin, who went to Madagascar some time ago in quest of rare orchids, met the misfortune of having his guide eaten up by a lion. The chief, Mayombosa, from whom the botanist had secured the guide, got an idea that Hamelin had himself made away with his attendant, and gave him his option of marrying the guide's widow or being burned alive. Hamelin took the widow; but he coupled with the marriage contract an arrangement by which the chief gave him a monopoly of all the orchids in Madagascar.

A recent earthquake at San Nicholas Island, near Santa Barbara, Cal., has revived interest in the story of the old Indian woman who led a Crusoe life on the island for many years. She was left there by accident in 1836, and her existence forgotten until twenty years later, when a Santa Barbara hunter, who had visited the island for otters, found her there and brought her to the mainland. She had entirely forgotten her language, and in consequence the story of her hermitage was never known. Three months after her rescue she died, and was buried by the mission fathers.

The future can never be divorced from the past. It is indeed the inevitable outcome of it. We cannot close up the record of the years behind us as if they had not been, and open a fresh and new one bearing no relation to those that proceeded it. What has been sown will be reaped, and thus, by reviewing the time that is gone, we may attain some degree of knowledge of that which is yet to come. And, as the farmer, though his successes and his failures, learns how better to prepare his soil and to select his seed, so may we learn from time to time the lessons of experience.

Two men, Charles Hart and William Bodlund, entered a burning hospital at Chicago, and rescued at different times and at the constant risk of their own lives, six persons. The building was set on fire by a gasoline stove, a queer agency to tolerate in a hospital. It will now be in order for the owner of the building to arraign Hart and Bodlund for permitting the gasoline stove to be in the building, although they knew nothing about it, and for reckless risk of their own lives in climbing up death-trap walls to help put out the fire. This would be consistent with some recent history.

Life insurance men are discussing the novel proposition made by Dr. Dennison of Denver at a recent meeting of the American Medical Association in Milwaukee. Dr. Dennison suggested that life insurance companies and physicians combine to prolong the life of policy holders, the companies sending the so-called "incurables" to health resorts, while the doctors should maintain hospitals in those places. The medical fraternity would secure almost invaluable data, while the insurance companies would eventually profit by the improvement in methods of treatment. The idea is at least not chimerical.

A couple of boys, the oldest not over 14, were caught stealing a ride on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, near Wilkesbarre, the other day. When asked where they were going, the elder replied that they were bound for England. He said that his name was Henry Wilson, and that he was the son of well-to-do parents in London; that he had heard so much about the World's Fair, that he had made up his mind to see it, and running away from home had stowed himself away on a steamer and gotten to New York. He had begged and beat his way to Chicago, where he managed to see all there was to be seen, and had picked up his companion, whom he was taking home with him. He said that he had no fear but that they would make the trip successfully if they could succeed in getting across the river from Jersey City to New York. The trainmen fed the little runaways, gave them some small change, and told them that they would have no trouble in getting across the ferry, and the boys went on their journey. With such treatment they will probably graduate as full-fledged tramps in a very few years.

Beneficence of Bacteria.

Bacteria have a bad reputation in the popular mind on account of the part they play in many fatal diseases. Yet all the bacteria in the world are not working against man and his interests. On the contrary some of them are his potent and faithful allies.

Consider, for instance, the minute organisms that manufacture nitric acid as food supply for plants. One set of bacteria busy themselves in turning ammonia found in the soil into nitrous acid. There their work ends, and so far as the plants are concerned it has been ineffective, because plants cannot feed upon nitrous acid.

But another set of bacteria take up the operation at just this point and from the nitrous acid produce nitric acid, from which the plants are readily able to derive nourishment. Still other bacteria, living in the roofs of certain plants, enable those plants to assimilate nitrogen derived from the air, and thus, instead of exhausting the soil in which they grow, actually to enrich it.

In short, man probably has at least as many friends as foes in the microscopic world.

"This is very good, but I shouldn't think you'd want to have these three or four lines with thirteen syllables in them."

There would be plenty of orators if they were needed.

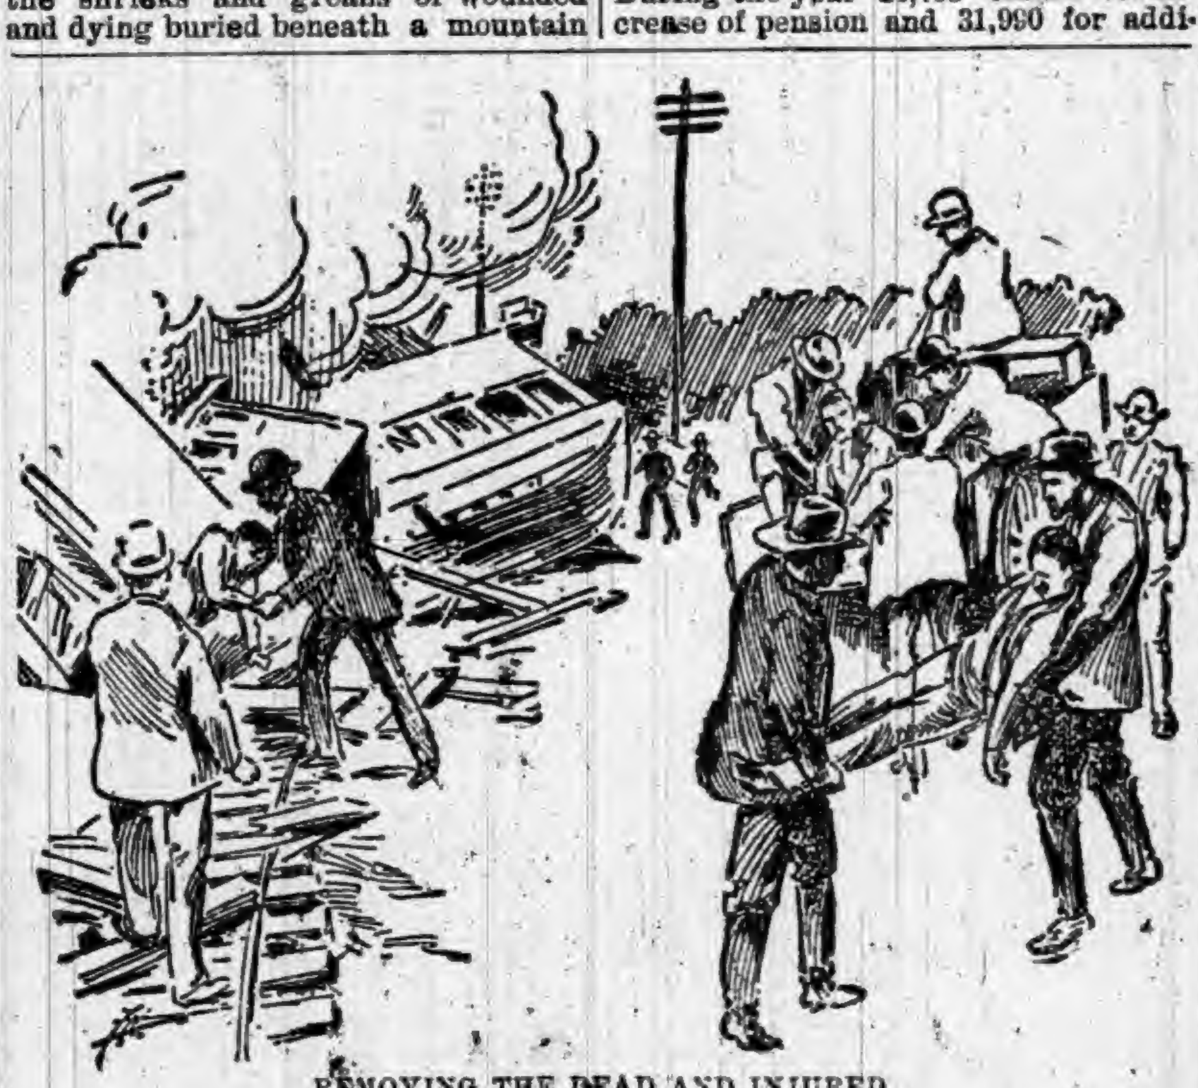
HORROR ON THE RAIL

ELEVEN PEOPLE KILLED ON THE WABASH.

West-Bound Chicago Express Crashes Into a Freight—Frightful Scene Among the Dead and Dying—Over a Score Are Injured.

Due to Mistake in Orders.

In a frightful collision between a freight train and the Toronto and Montreal express on the Wabash Railroad at Kingsbury, Ind., eleven persons lost their lives and a score of others were injured, many of them fatally. The freight was on a siding west of the depot and was bound east. The first section of the express train passed by on the main track at 5:25 a. m. It is said that the brakeman, supposing that the freight would now move, ran back to open the switch. Before the cars had begun to move the second section of the fast express came west at the rate of fifty-five miles an hour, and before the brakeman could turn the switch dashed into the side track and collided with the freight train. There was a terrific crash, a sound of grinding glass and splintered wood as the heavy vestibuled train crashed into the train ahead. Above the roar of escaping steam and the din and confusion could plainly be heard the shrieks and groans of wounded and dying buried beneath a mountain of debris. The crash was heard by the station agent, who instantly divined the cause and alarmed the town. Relief parties immediately started for the scene, carrying improvised couches, blankets, liniment, etc. Wagons, buggies, and every imaginable vehicle were pressed into service. All the physicians in town were notified and hurried toward the wreck. Neighboring towns and villages were called upon for assistance, and responded with food, medicine, clothing and physicians.

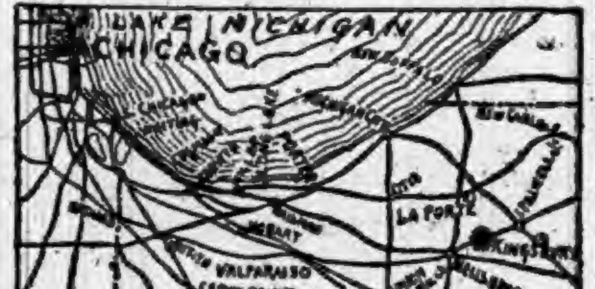


REMOVING THE DEAD AND INJURED.

Scene at the Wreck.

The scene at the wreck was something fearful, and the first relief parties reaching the ground stood horror-stricken, appalled by the awful sight. The wrecked train had telescoped the freight and the rear cars of the passenger had telescoped each other. Piled up in great confusion part of the wreckage had caught fire and the shrieks of the injured and dying as this latest horror presented itself aroused the spectators from their lethargy. Strong and willing hands went to work at once to extinguish the fire. This horror being averted for the time being, sturdy arms wielded axes and crowbars clearing away the wreckage, and the work of rescue began.

As quickly as it could be done, the broken beams and twisted irons of the telescoped cars were pulled apart, and from beneath them the victims of the catastrophe were lifted. Within a short time fifteen bodies mangled and dead were lying on the browned grass near the wreck, and a score or more of injured had been carried to the nearest farmhouses, where they were attended to by physicians from Laporte and other close-by towns.



WHERE THE WRECK OCCURRED.

All the horrors incident on fatal railroad accidents were here in most hideous aspect. For a time the work of relief was necessarily slow, and the moans and cries of the injured could be heard in the clear morning air even over the hiss of escaping steam and the blows of the axes and hammers plied on the ruins of the cars in the effort to release the unfortunates who were still pinned beneath the wreck. The spectacle presented by the dead and dying, as they lay in rows like soldiers cut down by a volley of musketry fired at short range, was fearful. Strong men from the neighboring farms could not endure the sight and turned away sick.

Relief trains were started from Chicago and St. Louis at an early hour, and when they arrived such of the injured as were in a condition to be removed were taken on to Chicago.

WENT DOWN WITHOUT WARNING.

Mysterious Foundering of the Haytian War Ship Alexandre Petion.

The suddenness and completeness of the disaster to the Haytian man-of-war Alexandre Petion, which went down in the Gulf of Mexico with ninety souls on board, makes the affair most mysterious, and it is probable that the real cause of the wrecking of the ship will never be known. According to the testimony of the sole survivor there was absolutely no warning. Neither collision with another vessel, submerged coral reef, nor storm can account for the occurrence. The day was fair, the wind was nothing more than a gentle breeze, and the passengers were enjoying themselves in the cabin. Suddenly the vessel began to sink. The officer on the watch ordered the men to pass the word in the cabins and the forecastle to reach the deck as quickly as possible and jump overboard. It was already too late. There was terrible confusion in the cabin as the panic-stricken passengers struggled to reach the deck, blocking the passage way as they did so and preventing one another from escaping from what was destined to be their tomb. For only a moment the awful struggle lasted. In one minute and a half from the time when she began to sink the vessel was entirely under water. One sailor, as the ship sank under him, snatched a pair of oars from the life boat and threw himself into the water. He caught a plank as it floated by and looked around, but not a man arose from the swirling waters which engulfed the warship. The sailor drifted for thirty-six hours on the plank with nothing to eat or drink, and when picked up he was almost exhausted. The place where he was picked up was fifty miles southeast of Port Piment. For a long time the cast-away was unconscious after he was taken aboard, and could not speak. Brandy was administered and after a hard fight he, rallied a little. When he was able to speak he told a terrible story. He was one of the sailors of the Alexandre Petion. The sailor said the war ship went down head foremost in the waves, without the slightest warning and that all on board but himself were drowned.

The lost vessel was one of the mitrailleuse type of cruisers so popular in the southern republics. It had just been put in commission and was supposedly in perfect condition.

FALLING OFF IN PENSIONS.

Commissioner Lochren Files His Annual Report to the Secretary of Interior.

Washington dispatch: Pension Commissioner Lochren submitted his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior Friday. The document shows that the number of pensioners on the roll of the bureau is 966,012, with a net increase of 89,944 during the last year. During the year 24,715 claims for increase of pension and 31,990 for additional pension under the act of June 27, 1890, were allowed, while 115,221 claims were rejected. Claims pending consideration July 7 numbered 71,150. The amount of money paid for pensions during the year was $156,740,467. Balance at the close of the year was $2,437,371. The appropriation for the next fiscal year, Commissioner Lochren says, will be ample, and the estimates for the fiscal year 1895 amount to $162,631,570. Regarding these estimates, Commissioner Lochren says they were based wholly on the experience of former years. The year 1895 is the thirtieth after the close of the civil war. The pension roll will by that time have reached its limit and begin to decrease. The falling off in the presentation of new claims appears from the fact, shown by the last report, that there were on Oct. 12, 1892, 788,061 claims pending in the bureau, while July 7, 1893, the number of claims pending had been reduced to 711,150. It is apparent, therefore, that the filing of new claims and claims for increase has ceased to exceed the number of cases disposed of by the work of the bureau.

CENSURES THE COMPANY.

Verdict of the Coroner's Jury in the Matter of the Manteno Disaster.

The coroner's verdict, rendered over the causes of the Manteno (Ill.) railroad disaster, reads as follows:

We do find that David Jackson and others came to their deaths at Manteno, Sept. 18, 1893, while riding as passengers on the first section of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railway on the Illinois Central tracks by being run into by the second section, said second section being in charge of Conductor Charles M. Eden and Engineer Thomas Ames, and we do further find that Thomas Ames engineer of the second section of said train No. 45, and Orville Duncan, flagman on the first section of said train No. 45, were then and there guilty of criminal carelessness in the discharge of their duties as engineer and flagman of said trains, thereby causing the death of David Jackson and others, and we recommend that the said Thomas Ames and Orville Duncan be held to answer for such unlawful killing. We further believe that Conductor W. B. Tyner, of the first section of train 45, and William Sampell, engineer of said train, were guilty of gross carelessness in the discharge of their duties as conductor and engineer of said train. We further believe that the Illinois Central Railroad Company is guilty of gross negligence in not providing proper signals and telegraph stations for locating passenger trains while running between Homewood, Ill., and Kankakee, Ill., on said road.

VIOLENCE ON THE STRIP.

Outraged Settlers Defend Their Rights and Create a Riot.

A riot occurred at the land office at Perry, O. T., and it was necessary to call out the soldiers to restore order. Deputy marshals have been selling places at the head of the line for $50 to sharks who would file on claims of honest settlers who were further back in line, in hope of securing blood money for them. This caused the people in line to rebel, and they threatened to burn the office if they were not treated fairly in the future. Special agents have arrived from Washington to examine into affairs at the land office, as charges of bribery have been preferred against some officials.

Death in a Tenement-House Fire.

There was a panic, one death, and a number of narrow escapes from death among the tenants in the five-story tenement 493 West 54th street, New York, which caught fire about two o'clock in the morning. The house is in a row of four tenements, and is occupied by twenty families. When the tenants were aroused the stairway was ablaze, and escape this way was cut off.

BANDITS BEATEN OFF.

ATTEMPTED ROBBERY OF AN EXPRESS TRAIN.

New Orleans Limited Stopped Near Centralia, Ill.—Engineer, Fireman and Conductor Shot and One Robber Wounded—No Money Secured.

Robbers Are Captured.

The New Orleans limited train on the Illinois Central Road was held up shortly after 11 o'clock the other evening just outside Centralia, Ill., and in the battle which followed between the three robbers and the train hands one of the robbers was wounded and three of the train crew were badly hurt. The thieves got nothing in the way of booty. There were seven well-filled coaches on the train and a combined baggage and express car. When the train pulled out from the platform the robbers climbed upon the blind baggage and thence to the top of the express car and remained there until the train reached the coal shaft, three-quarters of a mile south of the station. At this point one of the robbers leaped upon the tender and began firing at Ben Young, the engineer. Young mistook the shooting at first for a torpedo alarm and reversed his engine. The third shot, however, struck him in the back and seriously crippled him. The robbers then turned their attention to Fireman Charles McDowell and wounded him slightly in the chin with the next shot, and the two men closed. In the scuffle which ensued the fireman struck the robber on the head with a monkey-wrench and knocked him from the train. The robber fled south toward the coal mine, and was headed off there by the night watchman and forced to return. He fell exhausted to the ground before he reached the train and was taken in charge by the crowd and hurried off to the city jail. He gave his name as William Jones, of Kansas City.

The train was backed up to the station, a new crew put in charge, and sent on its destination. The whole city was aroused this time by the ringing of fire-bells, and Jones, the captured bandit, was threatened with lynching unless he made a full confession. Jones made a full confession. He said his accomplices were O'Dwyer, Harding, and Nichols. He also implicated a man by the name of Marion, from DuQuoin, who, he claimed, was not with the gang at the time of the robbery. All four men are under arrest, three at Centralia and one at Odin.

RAIN CAME TOO LATE.

Extensive Areas West of the Mississippi Still Suffering.

The weekly crop report of the Weather Bureau says that except in the northwestern border States, but little rain fell during the week to the west of the Mississippi, and, as during the previous week, there are extensive areas over which there has been no rain whatever. In the Ohio valley and Atlantic coast States the rains have greatly improved pastures, and have put the ground in good condition for fall plowing, which is progressing rapidly in the States named, fall seeding being about completed in New Jersey and New York. In Northern Wisconsin, Missouri, Arkansas, and Nebraska but little fall plowing has yet been done, owing to the dry and baked condition of the ground, and seeding is delayed in consequence. Reports by States are as follows:

New England—Frosts have done damage in exposed places, but have not been general; corn and potatoes below average; pasturage good.

Mississippi—Warm days and cool nights favorable to cotton, but does not offset last week's rain and continued ravages of worms; picking uninterrupted; corn mostly gathered; ordinary crop; turnips, peas, and potatoes good; pastures improved.

Texas—Drought severe, except over the east coast; cotton is opening and being rapidly picked; that planted late is opening prematurely; no chance for top crop in many parts of State, as the plant is dying; the yield per acre, as generally reported, is about one-third of a bale.

Tennessee—Tobacco good in northeast. In middle and north it is making new growth; crop will be good if not injured by early frost; rains damaged some cotton; Irish potatoes, turnips and pastures improving.

Kentucky—Badly distributed rain the first part of the week was of great benefit to late tobacco, pastures and gardens; cutting of corn and fall plowing is progressing.

Missouri—Little plowing or seeding done yet; corn practically safe from frost, but maturing too rapidly.

Illinois—Rainfall below the average and badly distributed; frost in Jo Daviess and Dupage Counties the 17th; corn generally safe from frost and is maturing rapidly, much being cut; plowing and seeding progressing in southern portion, elsewhere retarded; rain badly needed.

Ohio—Rains started vegetation and advanced fall plowing; seeding over in many counties, in others still retarded by drought; corn cutting well advanced; buckwheat, turnips and millet improved; early sown wheat coming up.

Michigan—Rains early part of the week much improved pasture, meadow lands and grapes; corn all cut; fall seeding and plowing under way in most counties.

Wisconsin—Forest fires in north part of State, probable damage $5,000,000; drought unbroken and little fall seeding yet; corn no better than expected, nearly average yield; husking begun; potatoes, light crop.

Minnesota—Staple crops nearly all harvested; frosts Saturday morning slightly injured corn, flax and potatoes; high winds the latter part of the week damaged some grain; plowing resumed.

Iowa—Little more than a trace of rainfall in the State; corn practically safe, the average yield is considerably above last year.

North Dakota—Rain in the eastern and northern portions of benefit to fall plowing, but more needed; high winds nearly all week retarded thrashing; storm on the 13th caused much damage in the southeast section; slight damage to gardens by frost.

South Dakota—Frost on the 14th killed vines in east portion; corn beyond frost damage; good weather for thrashing and for hardening corn; crop season about closed.

Nebraska—Drought continues; corn ripening too fast, with slight falling off in crops; pastures dried up; fall plowing suspended.

Kansas—Hot, cloudless, rainless week, damaging pastures, late corn and uncut fodder; water failing; wheat sowing delayed by drought.

Washington—Harvesting and thrashing in progress; hop picking begun; gardens and pastures improved.

Oregon—Fair warm weather the past week promoted hop-picking; rain of previous week benefited vegetables, corn and potatoes.

California—Hop-picking nearly completed, with quality good and average yield; frost in mountain counties injured garden truck; fruit-drying and raisin-curing much retarded by abnormal amount of moisture in the air; drenching dews at night.

A Remedy of General Utility.

It is among the follies of which the manufacturers of many proprietary remedies are guilty, to term their medicines "panaceas," or to claim for them the quality of panaceas. There is no such thing as a "panacea," which means a remedy adapted to all diseases. This absurdity has never been perpetrated by the proprietors of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. But they do claim, and with justice, that it is a remedy of general utility, and this because it restores that regular and vigorous condition of the stomach, liver and bowels which conduce to the recovery of general health. Thus it fortifies the system against malaria by infusing stamina, and causing harmonious action of the organs which, as long as they go right, are the best guaranty against an endemic malady like chills and fever. It accomplishes a double purpose by stimulating activity of the kidneys, since it not only prevents their disease and decay, but expels from the blood through them impurities that cause rheumatism, gout and dropsy. Use it with confidence.

Antiquity of Boots.

Boots are supposed to have been the invention of the Carians. They were mentioned by Homer. 907 B. C. Grecian women possessed twenty-two kinds of footgear, which may be classed as those which cover all the foot up to the ankle and those which simply tied on the top of the foot with wide ribbons for straps. The practice of shoe and sandal wearing can be traced back for some thousands of years and is probably of Eastern origin. Frequent mention is made of the shoe, in the Bible from the book of Exodus to the Acts and there is mention made of a shoe latchet as early as the time of Abraham.

Not Good for Pasture.

The "devil's plant," which clings close to the earth and bears beautiful red blossoms, is said to be abundant around Carthage, Miss. It is so poisonous that bees, tasting of a liquid drop always found in the calyx of the flower, drop dead almost instantly, and thus, it is said, nearly every hive in the country has been depopulated. It causes all other plants around it to wither away, and it is death on cattle.

Pretty fisher you can try.
You can't reach it? Well, don't cry.

Older fishers on life's main
Often seek, but all in vain,

Idly fishing for a star.

Jingle.

The sea, the sea, the vast blue sea,
It is a wondrous thing to me,
The clam, the whale, the oyster pale
To interest me never fail.
With lobsters and with sword fish gay

I'd dearly love to romp and play;
And so I'm filled with sad regret
That water is so very wet;
For if 'twere dry from land I'd flee
And play all day beneath the sea.

Baby's Asleep.

Snug in her hammock here,
Under green trees,
Swinging so languidly,
Lulled by the breeze;

Softly, with silken cords
Baby is tied;
One little dimpled foot
Straying outside!

Beauty lines lavishly
Fashion her face;
Rosy blooms blushingly
Touch it with grace.

Down through the orchard boughs
Comes the soft air,
Tenderly kisses her,
Plays with her hair.

Perched on an apple bough,
Bending above,
Swings a sweet oriole,
Singing of love.

Hushed are the katydids,
Hid in the grass.
Listening as Brownie folks
Sing as they pass.

Here comes a honey bee
From his retreat,
Drowsily humming home,
Heavy with sweet.

Softly some drowsy god
Closes her eyes,
Fair as forget-me-nots
Under blue skies!

Walking in Wonderland,
Baby's asleep,
Dreaming of Brownie folks,
Or of Bo-Peep!

A Mother Goose Party.

A pair of clever little girls, the children of a beautiful home, gave a charming Mother Goose party the other day. The invitations were very inspiring and suggestive, and for the benefit of youthful readers who might like to give a similar entertainment an illustration of this invitation may be presented. On a folded sheet of paper (the fold being indicated on the sketch by the dotted lines and the letters A A A), a spirited little sketch was made, in outline, of Old Mother Goose herself. This was then colored and cut out with a sharp pair of scissors, leaving the points, A A A, attached to the under fold, so that when opened a blank fac-simile of paper was ready on which to inscribe the invitation, the outside address being written on the goose itself. The guests, of course, wore costumes appropriate to the occasion, all being taken from the characters of nursery rhymes or old fairy tales. It was a motley and delightfully picturesque crew when marshalled into line for the grand march before supper, after which they filed into the dining-room to find every delicacy mentioned in childish lore. The piece de resistance was a huge pie in the center of the table, which was presided over by the tiniest and sweetest little Jack Horner ever seen, who drew out plums galore for every child present. These plums consisted of mysterious packets containing thoughtfully chosen presents for every boy and girl.—N. Y. Times.

Dignity of the Court.

The following incident, which is vouched for as fact, is told of a judge who had a lofty idea of his own legal capacity, and was at the same time anxious to sustain the dignity of the court.

A murder case was before him. There was no direct evidence as to the perpetrator of the crime, but the individual arrested was well known, and, indeed, confessed the crime.

When brought into court, the judge cautioned the prisoner not to commit himself; that he must remember his rights as a free citizen; and that, above all things, he must not interrupt the proceedings of the court.

After this friendly warning, the judge went on to state that he, the prisoner, was accused of having, on such a date, shot the deceased. Upon the prisoner broke in——

"Well, an' so I did."

The judge was much annoyed at the interruption.

"Hold your tongue, sir," he exclaimed.

"Have I not told you not to commit yourself, nor to interrupt me. I shall commit you for contempt of court if you do so again," he added, sternly.

He then repeated the accusation, upon which the prisoner again broke in——

"I have told you afore that I killed——"

The judge's indignation was intense at this second interruption, and he demanded, angrily——

"Mr. Sheriff, what is your evidence?"

"I have nothing but circumstantial evidence, your honor, and the prisoner's own confession."

"Then," said the judge, "I discharge the prisoner on this accusation, but commit him for contempt of court."

Ventilation.

Just as sure as a man begins in the poultry business with a number of fancy chickens, he wants "a nice hen-house with a cupola on it," which he explains to you, is for fresh air. In this many make a grave mistake, says R. K. James in the Portland Transcript, as a top ventilation in a hen-house is of more injury than no ventilation at all. Especially is this so in winter. Hot air is lighter than cold, and consequently rises to the ceiling. When there is an opening in the ceiling this air escapes and the cold air takes its place. Under these circumstances it can easily be seen that a hen-house with a top ventilation is always a cold one in winter. When ventilators are put in they should come down to within one foot of the floor, and will then take out foul air without removing the warm air. Most houses in this country need no ventilation, as they are open enough to insure a good circulation of fresh air at all times. If as much attention was paid to getting warm houses by the average farmer as there is no ventilation there would be less complaints of swelled heads, roup, and many other diseases too numerous to mention.

The March of Color.

In the early months of summer white flowers predominate in the northern field and garden. In July yellow flowers begin to prevail and their reign seems to culminate in August, which is the month par excellence of golden hues. In September and October the ascendency passes to blue and purple blossoms. One cannot help noticing that this march of color among the flowers, carrying them from white in the spring to blue in the autumn, recalls the supposed progression of age among the stars as indicated by their colors. It has generally been thought, although the fact has not yet been finally demonstrated, that the white stars are the youngest, that the yellow stars represent the mid-season of solar life, and that the deeply colored stars, red, purple, and blue, are those which are fast passing into decadence. If this is true, then in the heavens also we may say white is the color of springtime and purple the badge of the season of decay.

Afterward he got very drunk and called at Boltz's place to get the balance of his money, but, only getting part of it, he again became enraged, and, drawing a revolver, chased Boltz out of his place. Boltz filed an affidavit against Champion. He was placed under bond to keep the peace.

THE determination of the Muncie officials to make all alike abide by the strict quarantine rules, and thereby stamp out the smallpox and protect others, was fully proved the other evening by the officials in their effort to move a new case to the hospital. The 12-year-old son of Randolph Trissell, on Sullivan street, was taken with the disease. The officers went after the boy, and the father threatened to shoot the first man who entered the house. As the men forced open a door and entered, Trissell fired. The ball penetrated the coat sleeve of Joe Daily, but did not injure him. The boy was removed and the father taken to the guard house, but later on he agreed to go to the hospital, and is now with his son.

A TRUCE ARRANGED.

SENATOR VOORHEES AGREES TO A COMPROMISE.

Vice President Stevenson May Force the Issue—Senate Sessions to Be Lengthened—Anti-Silverites Still Fighting for Delay—Their Plan Outlined.

Another Week of Talk.

Washington correspondence:

A TRUCE between the silver and anti-silver elements of the Senate has unexpectedly been arranged. It is not by any means a final settlement of the question, yet it brings the two elements together in a formal agreement for the first time this session. By the terms of the agreement the daily sessions of the Senate from and after next Monday are to begin at 11 a. m. and end at 6 p. m. This adds an hour to each end of the regular daily sessions. The new order of things is regarded as a most significant concession on the part of Mr. Voorhees. It is mainly important in assuring the silver Senators that they need not trouble themselves over the fear of all-night sessions in the near future. Voorhees had threatened night and day sessions, and the silver men had defied him to adopt such a course.

No exact time is set for terminating the agreement, but the general understanding among Senators is that the 11 to 6 o'clock session will be continued at least a week, at the end of which time the agreement may be continued. The silver men are jubilant. They say that they have nothing to lose and everything to gain by it. They are fighting for time, and this gives them the calm assurance of at least another week without any danger of being crowded by all-night sessions. Senator Jones (Ark.), a silver man, and Senator Faulkner (W. Va.), an administration Senator who is very anxious to secure a compromise, planned the agreement. It was hardly expected that Mr. Voorhees would take to it kindly, but he was so worn out over the struggles of the last three weeks that he readily assented to the truce.

But the interesting and almost sensational rumor is current in the Capitol that Vice President Stevenson had determined to take the bull by the horns when the proper time shall come to secure action, and had agreed to seize some opportunity in the progress of the consideration of the repeal bill for putting a motion for a vote. Diligent inquiry fails to thoroughly establish the truth of this rumor. Vice President Stevenson, when appealed to by a correspondent, said simply that his duty and his whole duty was to enforce the rules of the Senate, and, while he might wish the rules were different and more in the direction of action and progress, he had had no hand in the making of the rules and no power to change them. He had given no assurance to anyone what he would do beyond this.

It is known, nevertheless, that Senators friendly to repeal have often been in frequent conversation with Mr. Stevenson concerning the rules. There are Senators who argue that, under the rules of the Senate, it is in the power of the presiding officer to put a motion for a vote, and that in doing so the only law or rule violated will be the unwritten or traditional law of the Senate that debate cannot be cut off by a motion. The right to continuous debate is not a constitutional right, and it is not a right that finds a warrant or protection in the written rules of the Senate—it is wholly traditional.

Routine Proceedings.

The cloture proposition was the subject of discussion until 2 o'clock in the Senate Friday, when the repeal bill, being the unfinished business, was taken up. Mr. McPherson gave notice that after Mr. Turpie shall have spoken on the resolution he should insist that it go to the calender, whence it would take affirmative action to get it before the Senate. Senator Platt, its author, desires its reference to the Committee on Rules. The opponents of repeal occupied the day—Senators Wolcott and Teller of Colorado in the morning against a change of rules and incidentally against repeal, and Senators George of Mississippi, Hansbrough of North Dakota, and Stewart of Nevada against the repeal of the purchasing clauses of the silver act. There was a marked falling off in the attendance at the House, and no business of importance was transacted. Quite a row occurred over a resolution for the appointment of an assistant clerk for the Committee on Claims, presided over by Mr. Bunn. The House adjourned without disposing of the question.

In the Senate Saturday the cloture resolution was taken up and Mr. Turpie argued against its adoption. Cloture, declared Mr. Turpie, would not diminish the real power of the minority. Members of the Senate subjected to force and duress come back no longer in the minority, but in the majority. A vote by force was not a vote; a vote by compulsion was not a free act, and yet the first definition of a vote was volition, the expression of will. The very highest functions in a free government were not compulsory and could not be made so. In the present condition there was no reason for the adoption of the cloture or for the invocation of what may be called constitutional obstruction. This was not the last congress and the people had ample remedy for the error of a majority if such should be the case. The time in the House was taken up by unimportant reports, then Mr. Talbert of Maryland called up the bill remitting $39,000 in penalties to the builders of the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius. Mr. Cummings, chairman of the naval affairs committee, supported the bill. Mr. Sayers, chairman of the appropriations committee, opposed the bill. The bill finally went over without action, and the House proceeded to the consideration of the printing bill. Pending action on the bill the House adjourned.

Too Much Threshing.

Country boys who are inclined to think that life in the large cities is easy and comfortable compared with their daily toil in the country, are apt to find themselves mistaken when they come to town and subject themselves to the high-pressure system of business establishments. An amusing example of this sort is related by a country exchange.

A farmer's boy went to the city, finding the work at home rather tiresome, and obtained a situation in a large "family supply" store where a "rushing business" was carried on. He "took hold" very well, and his employers liked him.

They were surprised, however, when he came to them, before he had been two months in the store, and said:

"Well, Mr. A, I guess I'll have to get through here next Saturday night."

"Get through?" said his employer. "Why, what's going wrong?"

"Oh, nothing in particular."

"Aren't you treated well?"

"First-rate; but I'll tell you just how it strikes me. Up on the farm we used to have the threshing-machine come once a year, and then we threshed for three days, and you'd better believe we worked hard; but I tell you what, I've been here seven weeks, and you've threshed every day. I guess I've got enough of it."

He went back to the farm, convinced that a farmer's life has its compensations.—Farmer's Review.

Civilization of an African Tribe.

At the Berlin Anthropological Society, Mr. Mereusky has given some curious particulars about the Kondeh people in the German district on Lake Nyassa. Their country is bordered on the north by the Livingstone Mountains and on the south by the lake, and this favorable geographical position has enabled the people to develop in a peculiar manner and attain a relatively high state of civilization. "Their affections are largely developed. Friendship is especially valued among them, and love between the sexes strong and firm, as well as the domestic affections. Suicide, caused by grief for the loss of a wife, a child, or even a favorite animal, is not infrequent. The favorite form of suicide is to enter the water and allow one's self to be devoured by a crocodile. In war time all unnecessary cruelty is avoided, and women and children who have been made prisoners are set free again. The position of woman among the Kondehs is unusually high. Women are on a perfect equality with men in the eyes of the law, and offenses against women are even more severely punished than offenses against men."—St. James's Gazette.

Don't Forget.

Should you spill ink upon the carpet or upon a woolen tablecloth, immediately sprinkle over it a thick layer of common salt. When this has absorbed all the ink that it can, carefully scrape it off and apply some more. Keep doing this until the ink is taken up. If your carpet has an ink spot upon it that you didn't know how to attack at the time of the accident moisten it with hot water. Be careful not to use enough water to make the ink spread. Then apply the salt. Your success will not be complete, but the spot will become dim and perhaps will not be noticeable.

Freaks of Lightning.

A fulgurite is formed by a bolt of lightning. A geologist gives this explanation: "When a bolt of lightning strikes a bed of sand it plunges downward into the sand for a distance, less or greater, transforming simultaneously into glass the silica in the material through which it passes. Thus, by its great heat, it forms at once a glass tube of precisely its own size. Fulgurites have been followed into the sand by excavations for nearly thirty feet. They vary in interior diameter from the size of a quill to three inches or more, according to the bore of the flash."

Oil from Eggs.

Extraordinary stories are told of the healing properties of a new oil which is easily made from the yolk of hens' eggs. The eggs are first boiled hard, and the yolks are then removed, crushed, and placed over a fire, where they are carefully stirred until the substance is on the point of catching fire, when the oil separates and the oil may be poured off. One yolk will yield nearly two teaspoonfuls of oil. It is in general use among the colonists of South Russia as a means of curing cuts, bruises, etc.

A Clever Imitator.

"You have no idea how clever my little girl is," said a lady to her guests at desert. "She can imitate anybody."

"She can, indeed," said the husband, feeling quite proud of his child's talents. "Come, my dear, show us all what you can do. Pretend to be a housemaid."

The little girl, curtsying to one of the guests, very politely asked: "Will you take any more chicken, ma'am, or a little beef?" Then to another: "Shall I put your screen on your chair, ma'am the fire is very fierce." And all the guests were greatly amused.

"Is the performance over?" asked the father.

"O, no, papa," answered the child, and going toward him she exclaimed in a terrific tone: "Sir, let me go! Don't touch me, sir! Let me go! Give you a kiss, indeed! Supposing missus was to hear you!"

Little missey was packed off to school the following day, and father caught it. The housemaid had also unaccountably changed her situation the week after.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

She Kept Her Secret.

Miriam Coles Harris, better known as the author of "Rutledge," has a pleasant summer home on the Long Island border of the Atlantic. Her most famous book was written when she was a mere girl, and even her own immediate family were not let into the secret of her employment until after it was finished. A favorite cousin who was much with her at the time says amusedly: "Say what you like about a woman's capability of keeping anything to herself, Miriam certainly demonstrated that it was possible to one of her sex at least. Not a word did she betray to me, who would have been so proud to think I was associating with a real, live authoress."—Philadelphia Press.

Floated with Air Sacks.

The Glenola, a two-masted schooner, which was sunk about six months ago in Great South Bay, N. Y., has been successfully raised by means of air sacks. Messrs. Grant Brothers' air sack system of raising vessels seems to be practically successful. Divers descended into the hold and adjusted huge canvas bags or sacks, which measured 20 by 4½ feet. Each sack was connected by hose pipes to a powerful air pump, and gradually inflated by air. The gradual inflation of the bags with air slowly lifted the vessel to the surface. It required only about one hour to raise the Glenola after the work of adjusting the bags had been finished.

To Clean Brass.

The Government method for cleaning brass, and in use at the United States Arsenals is as follows: A mixture composed of one part of common nitric, and one half part of sulphuric acid is placed in a stone jar, and beside it a pail of clear water and a box of sawdust. The articles to be cleaned are first dipped into the acid, then removed into the water, and finally rubbed with the sawdust. This process at once gives them a brilliant color. If the articles to be thus treated have become greasy, they are first dipped in a strong solution of potash and warm water, which dissolves the grease, and enables the acid to act.

The Cocked Hat.

Even to the present day the naval full dress is incomplete without the cocked hat, and on the continent many functionaries, civil as well as military, continue to wear it. Our old militia, line and field officers of forty years ago used to wear them out of immense proportions. The round hat, such as Ben Franklin wore, was taken to Paris from this country by the young officers who fought for our independence under Rochambeau and Lafayette. It met with great favor there.

Rubber Getting Scarce.

The Brazilian Department of Agriculture deplores the rapid destruction of what were at one time looked upon as an inexhaustible forests of India rubber trees. A recent report of the department suggests a remedy that plantations for the cultivation of the tree be established, and shows by statistics that large profits would accrue to the planter.

SALT-RHEUM; FLESH CRACKED OPEN AND BLED!

Miss LOTTIE CLARK, River Falls, Pierce County, Wisconsin, writes:

"It gives me pleasure to express my faith in the virtue of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Having suffered for three years from salt-rheum, and after having been unsuccessfully treated by a good physician, I began the use of the 'Discovery.' The humor was in my hands. I was obliged to keep a covering on them for months at a time, changing the covering morning and night. The stinging, burning and itching sensation would be so intense that at times it seemed as if I would go crazy. When I bent the fingers, the flesh would crack open and bleed. It is impossible for me to describe the intense pain and suffering which I endured night and day. After taking six bottles of the "Discovery" I was entirely cured.

I cannot praise Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery enough." Sold by Dealers.

GARRETT.

Lots of sickness.

Fred Locke's circus this afternoon and evening.

Bill Hathaway was at Ft. Wayne last Monday.

John Green, of Albion, was in the city Thursday.

Land Agent Bogert is having his residence repainted.

Ben Satterfield and Art Landon were at Auburn Sunday.

Garrett is well represented at the Kendallville fair this week.

Frank Walter, wife and children are at the world's fair this week.

Marshal D. W. Dare and wife are attending the world's fair this week.

Mrs. E. E. Smallwood is at Bowling Green, Ky., the guest of her parents.

Rev. Beatty, of Ligonier, will occupy the M. E. pulpit next Sunday evening.

Mrs. Henry Meese visited her parents in Concord township several days last week.

Hiram Bovee and wife, of Hudson, Michigan, were visiting relatives in the city last week.

Loner Satterfield, of Benwoold, W.Va., is in the city, a guest in the family of Engineer Wm Satterfield.

Miss Minnie Hanes, of Sherwood, O, visited with friends and relatives in this city several days last week.

A large number of Garrett people attended the fair at Hicksville and all seem to be well satisfied with the entertainment given.

Harvey Barnes, formerly a machinist in the shop at this place, but now of Priceton, Ind, was the guests of his parents last week.

Mrs. D. Dobbrick, who has been visiting in the family of Henry Shelter for a month past, returned to her home in Galion, Ohio, Monday.

Mrs. Thos. Farrell and son Bert left Monday night for Stuart, Iowa, where Mr. F. is employed as an engineer on the C., R. I. & P. They have many friends in Garrett who regret their departure, but who wish them abundant success in their future home.

W. H. Kelham, a blind music teacher and piano tuner, who has been located at Garrett for the past six months, died of typhoid fever Sunday morning. He was beloved by all who knew him, and his wife has the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community in her bereavement. His remains were taken to Cincinnati, Ohio, for interment.

"Reddy" Gibson, a barber formerly employed by W. F. Hathaway, was arraigned before Mayor Camp last week on a charge of disorderly conduct. Failing to pay his fine, he was sent to Auburn to jail. "Reddy" got a little "jag on" and proceeded to break up his furniture. The marshal thought he might be employed in a better business and arrested him.

Fritz Beehler, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of this city, died at the residence of E. P. Fitzgerald on King street Sunday morning, of dropsy. Mr. Beehler came to Garrett when the town was in its infancy and opened a shoe shop, which he has conducted until a few months ago, when ill health caused him to retire from business. He has been growing rapidly worse and Sunday morning the end came. He was a member of Garrett City Lodge No. 507, F. & A. M., also an Odd Fellow, under whose auspices his funeral was held.

As No. 8, the east bound fast passenger train, pulled into the station here one day last week, two confidence men succeeded in swindling $160 out of an old Swiss on his way to Switzerland. They asked him to change a thousand dollar bill for them, saying they wanted to get something to eat and had no change. He could not change it, he said, as he only had $160. They then told him to let them have the money he had and he could hold the $1,000 for security until they came back. The unsuspecting old man did so, but "they never came back," and after waiting ten or fifteen minutes, he looked at the "bill" and found it as worthless as a piece of blank paper. Which direction the scoundrels went from here is not known. This is the second man who has been duped by swindlers at this station this summer. "What phooles ye mortals be!"

CONCORD.

Is. Wyatt is building a corn crib,

Lewis Howey is plastering his house.

R. G. Gillson returned from the fair Friday.

Mrs. Abe Sherck is quite sick at present.

Nelson Testison, wife and Master Foraker, of St Joe, called on D. W. Baker's last Sunday.

The Wasson children held a reunion at the old homestead last Sunday. Ben still resides at the old home.

The Coburntown boys played the St. Joe boys last Saturday in F. Herrick's field The game resulted in favor of the Coburntown boys.

Howard Northup wended his slow length along Saturday for the Kendallville fair wondering how many premiums would be cast in his lot.

Monday night at about half past 12 burglars entered the store of Henry Baker and carried off his cigars and were taking a lot of clothing when the dog made a stir and Mrs. Baker stepped to the sitting room door and saw a man standing there. Mr. Baker slipped out the front way and shot the man, who spoke and fell, but got up and ran down the south road. Only two men were in sight. They gained an entrance by prying open the front door. Particulars next week.

HEART DISEASE 30 YEARS.

GRAND ISLAND, NEB., April 8th, 1892.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I had been troubled with HEART DISEASE FOR THE LAST 30 YEARS, and although I was treated by able physicians and tried many remedies, I grew steadily worse until I WAS COMPLETELY PROSTRATED AND CONFINED TO MY BED WITHOUT ANY HOPE OF RECOVERY. I would have very bad sinking spells, when my pulse would stop beating altogether, and it was with the greatest difficulty that my circulation could be started, which would bring me back to consciousness again. While in this condition I tried your NEW HEART CURE, and began to improve from the first, and now I am able to do a good day's work for a man 68 years of age. I give DR. MILES' NEW HEART CURE all the credit for my recovery. It is over six months since I have taken any, although I keep a bottle in the house in case I should need it. I have also used your NERVE AND LIVER PILLS, and think a great deal of them. Z. AVERY.

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy: a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

Swearing may give relief to overworked feelings, but it doesn't bring back the excursion boat the swearer has missed.

A Good Thing to Keep at Hand.

From the Troy (Kansas) Chief.

Some years ago we were very much subject to severe spells of cholera morbus; and now when we feel any of the symptoms that usually proceed that ailment, such as sickness at the stomach, diarrhœa, etc, we become scared. We have found Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy the very thing to straighten one out in such cases, and always keep it about. We are not writing this for a pay testimonial, but to let our readers know what is a good thing to keep handy in the house. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1873—Continued.

The month of January, 1873, was made memorable by a great storm. Snow fell heavily all day and far into the night All along the lines of railroad there were complaints of immense drifts and trains were generally behind time. The night passenger on the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw railroad was entirely abandoned for the time and freights were delayed till the tracks could be cleared. Old settlers compared notes and recalled reminiscences of the hard winter of 1842-3, when cattle suffered for want of food, game perished in the woods in droves and flocks, and pioneers experienced the rigors of an arctic winter.

But at this late period, there had come about a vast contrast of conditions and the temporary inconveniences of the occasion were not more than suggestive, to the old time resident, of the bitter privations incident to the years noted.

Interest flagged and revived repeatedly in railroad construction. As prospects became doubtful, many despaired; when hopes brightened, the tide of enthusiasm ran as far forward. In January, the Detroit, Eel River & Illinois railroad was in successful operation from Auburn Junction to Logansport. Towns and villages along the new, important line awoke to new life and activity and alert business men began to reap a rich reward in the way of trade with the country opened up.

Auburn was theoretically the eastern terminus of the line whose completion thus far marked a crisis in the history of the town. Nineteen years had elapsed since the road had been projected and grading had been partially done when the work was suspended during the dark days of the Indiana banking system, not to be renewed until James S. Collins, laboring zealously as president of the reorganized company, earned the gratitude of the people all along the line, for his invaluable services in meeting the great question of resources, when the enterprising firm of D. L. Quirk & Co. contracted for and substantially built the road.

Towards the last of the month, the residents of Auburn were called upon to act in regard to the extension of the road to Butler. The statement was made by Mr. Collins that: "Unless the amount of subscription desired by the company to build the road through DeKalb county is taken up or vouched for by Feb. 15, the road will not be built." The amount then required was $25,000.

In February, President Collins startled citizens by the laconic expression, "No subscriptions, no road." He was seen to be in earnest and a committee was appointed to solicit for subscriptions. Meanwhile, rival interests were insidiously at work, and a scheme was placed on foot to consolidate the new road with others, in which case the advantages expected would have been lost to Auburn. In March, a consolidation was reported of the three railroads, the Ft. Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw, the Detroit & Eel River, and the Hillsdale & Indiana. The new corporation was to be called the Ft. Wayne & Logansport Company. A proprovisional board of thirteen directors was chosen and a meeting of stockholders to ratify official action, was called for June.

There was to have been an issue of two millions preferred stock to liquidate the second and third mortgage bonds, and the project seemed on the verge of being consummated.

The newspaper of a rival town to Auburn, anticipating the movement, in a spirit of triumph, stated that, "Of course, this consolidation is a sad disappointment to many in this county who expected to see the Eel River road continued eastward; but, at the same time, it will be a great relief to know that the question is finally settled."

Adverse as were the prospects, the question was by no means "settled." With discussion and thought grew a revival of interest attended by a liberal response to the earnest requests of the committee on subscriptions by whom the deficiency had soon been reduced to about $8,000, at which sum, the limit seemed to have been reached.

As the time approached for the meeting of stockholders, rumors of a probable consolidation prevailed only to be roughly set at rest on June 5th at Columbia City by the overwhelming adverse vote of 10 698 as opposed to but 900 in favor of the movement.

The hands of Auburn and Butler were seen in this vote. These towns realizing the interests at stake and the danger of delay, had made a supreme effort to provide necessary donations, right of way and depot grounds. Their zeal was noted and rewarded, and so the extension east had again become a probable event.

A combined and unceasing effort by public spirited citizens, some of whom not only advanced money, but guaranteed the deficit of subscription, was admirably seconded by Messrs, Quirk, Collins, Mansfield and others, and Auburn people felt that final triumph had been achieved when they saw, on July 17th, a large force of laborers begin work on the grade near the old cemetery.

The contract was let for building an elevator east of the foot of Cedar Street. The dimensions of the structure, in use since that time, are 20 x 50 and 47 feet in height. The job was awarded to A. L. Hollopeter for $2,200. At about the same time, H. E. Altenberg got the contract for building the passenger depot at the foot of Main street. Its size is 22 x 50 feet and it has fairly well answered to the demands of traffic and the comfort of the traveler.

Work proceeded steadily, and along in September, the crossing with the Ft. Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw road at Auburn Junction, was laid in solid steel rails and wrought iron plates. The occasion was made one of ceremony and mutual congratulation by the rejoiced friends of the road. Among others, S. W. Sprott, a hard worker for and a liberal patron of, the enterprise, was present and earnestly expressed his pride and satisfaction in the result of effort. Although hardly recovered from severe illness, he could not forego the pleasure of witnessing the exercises whereby Auburn exchanged doubt for certainty and found great relief that the question had been finally settled in accord with municipal deserving and commercial need, upon a natural route.

By the middle of October, the track had been laid through to Butler, fond hopes had been realized and the event marked an epoch in the history of the allied towns.

James W. Case had extended and enlarged his factory near the depot, accumulated material and manufactured product, looking to the new road for transportation to points where it was salable. On Sept. 30, he had loaded a car with chair stuff destined for New York City, and the consignment was the first from Auburn to pass over the extension eastward.

A line of telegraph was speedily built and on Nov. 17th, the first message was sent over the wire from this station to Butler.

Ballasting was completed by Nov. 10, on which date the first passenger train ran east, taking on board at Auburn quite a number of persons who were treated to a free ride as a slight recognition of local aid in building the railroad. The engineer on this excursion was Eugene Eckley, the conductor was Bechtel and on the train were President Collins and Superintendent Southard.

A round house had meantime been built at Butler with other improvements and it was seen that for some time that town was destined to remain the terminus of the line, but the victory had been won, confidence ran high and the fruits of self-denying subscriptions were now to be measurably realized.

Contemporary with the task achieved, no little attention had been attracted to the progress of the Chicago division of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad through DeKalb county and in close proximity to Auburn on the south. On April 16, interest was increased by a meeting of the officers of the company at the county-seat, to elect a board of directors for the current year and to award contracts for the building of the line.

The contract for grading sections near Auburn was let to Michael Haviland and was pushed forward with much energy, but in consequence of a financial panic that prevailed in the fall, the work stopped for the time.

Where the Votes Came From.

On the test vote, that on the Bland proposition for the free coinage of silver at the present ratio of 16 to 1, the proposition received 124 votes, and there were 226 votes cast against it.

Of the minority votes, 102 came from the South and the Northern states west of the Missouri river; 14 from the Northern states west of Pennsylvania and east of the Missouri river, and only one vote east of Ohio, that of Mr. Sibley, of the Venango district of Pennsylvania.

Of the majority votes, 97 were from the states east of Ohio and north of Delaware, 79 from the Northern states west of Pennsylvania and east of the Missouri river, and 50 from the South and the Northern states west of the Missouri river.

From every one of the sixteen Southern states, one or more votes were cast against free coinage Of the twelve Western states eight delegations voted solidly for free coinage. Of the seven Middle states, Iowa and Wisconsin voted solidly against free coinage, and each of the others gave a majority against it. Of the nine Eastern states, all but one voted soidly against free coinage, the solitary exception being Sibley's vote in Pennsylvania, as already noted

Ohio cast 20 votes, there being one seat vacant. The only vote for free coinage was that of D. D. Donovan, of the Fifth district.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

PRAISE FOR THE KEELEY CURE.

A Michigan Judge Writes a Letter of Grateful Thanks.

Of the 100 or more cures already made by the Auburn Keeley Institute, we select one and publish the letter sent by the patient's father, Judge Loveridge, of Coldwater, to the physician in charge of the Institute here. The son recently returned home, a cured man, and both rejoice over the, to them, almost unexpected success of the treatment, for the case was a desperate one. The following is the father's letter:

COLDWATER, MICH., Sept. 23, 1893.

DR. J. C. BOWERS,

Dear Sir: Ernest reached home all right. So far as I can discover, he is free from the habit and seems to be free from any desire to use it again. Your treatment of him was most excellent and thorough. I shall advise sending patients to you in preference to any place I know of and you may refer to me if it will do you any good. Ernest thinks there is nothing too good to say of the Keeley cure and the Keeley Institute, for he fully appreciates what this treatment has done for him. Respectfully yours,

NOAH P. LOVERIDGE.

It will not be amiss to state that Judge Loveridge is present judge of the 15th judicial circuit of Michigan, and a man of well known ability and high standing as a jurist.

Miner's Dialect.

As we turned a corner in the road we came upon a picturesque little hut made of rough logs, the interstices being filled with stones and clay, roofed with slabs, and lighted by two small windows. It was altogether the quaintest, rudest habitation that I ever saw. Before it sat two men, arrayed in what our guide termed "bang-up smart store clothes," but evidently, in their rugged, seamed faces, stained and knotted hands, in short, everything about them, miners. Peeping into the doorway—askew, like everything else about the hut—I caught sight of a chair, a slab table with a tin coffee pot upon it, a shelf supporting two or three pieces of crockery, together with a few other pieces of primitive household utensils. As we approached, the two men took off their hats with rough courtesy which seems to be native with their class.

"Well, Job, yer got a job?" said one, addressing our guide.

"Takin' a raft o' tenderfoots to the mine," answered Job. "Mighty smart chaps, them two fellers," observed Job as we passed on. "One on them tickles the screamer, great! T'other thumps the skin-tub, some, I tell ye."

The doctor glared at our pilot in mild amazement.

"I really am at a loss to comprehend the terms you have just made use of, young man," he said. "Doubtless they are colloquialisms, but I should be gratified if you would explain what 'tickling the screamer' and 'thumping the skin-tub' may be."

"Huh!" snorted Job, in disgust. "Them fellers belongs to the band down to ther city, and one on 'em plays the fiddle and t'other plays the drum. Now d'yer take?"

"I understand," replied the doctor, meekly.

We had nearly reached the brow of the hill, when we found ourselves in the midst of a number of men, some of whom appeared to be digging industriously, while others examined the dirt and pebbles thrown out by the shovels. As we came up they stopped and looked at us in a good natured way, hailing our guide by name.

"Got her yet?" quried Job.

"Not yet," was the reply; "but she's here, and we're bound to get her, sure!"

"'Her'!" ejaculated the doctor, aghast. "Gracious heavens! Is it possible that some unfortunate female has been buried alive? Give me a shovel. Every moment is precious!"

The men stared at the doctor in amaze. Job burst into a hoarse guffaw.

"Yer way off, mister," he said. "There ain't no woman in the business. Them fellers is prospectin'—diggin' for silver. D'ye get on? Huh! Huh!" he grunted, soto voce. "Blame my boots! ef he didn't think they was diggin' fer a woman!"—From "Silver, from Mine to Mint," in Demorest's Family Magazine for October.

THE FALLING WALLS

CRUSH A NUMBER OF FIREMEN ALMOST TO DEATH.

Uprising Among the Yuma Indians at an End—Children to Be Admitted to the World's Fair for 10 Cents—The City of Mobile, Ala., in Great Peril from the Effects of a Gale.

A SEVERE GALE.

The Coast of Alabama Severely Swept.

Mobile (Ala.) special: A southeast gale broke here Thursday morning and is blowing at least fifty miles per hour. The wind has blown the water in from the gulf until the river has reached Royal street, which is four blocks from the river and at an elevation of about fifteen feet from mean river height.

There is no possible chance of estimating the money damage. All the wholesale and a great portion of the retail district of the city is some four feet under water and thousands of dollars worth of goods have been damaged.

The pilot boat, Ida Low, has been driven on the wharf at the foot of St. Francis street.

The bay boat, Heroine, was driven on the Mobile & Ohio wharf, and almost totally wrecked. The Crescent City, another bay boat, left Point Clear at the same time the Heroine did and has not since been heard from.

Nothing has been heard from the gardners in the marshes east of the city, and the worst is feared. Telegraphic communication is cut off in almost every direction.

In this city houses have been unroofed, trees blown down and one cotton warehouse succumbed to the fury of the gale. All of the smoke stacks of the manufacturing industries have been blown down. The busiest thoroughfares of the city are being navigated in boats and people are wading up to their armpits in an effort to save goods. It is regarded by all as the worst storm that has ever visited Mobile. The southern part of the city presents such a scene of wreckage, that it looks as if it had been bombarded. The towers on the Court House and Christ Church are tottering.

FIREMEN INJURED.

Omaha Loses Its Handsome $250,000 Opera House.

The Farnam Street Theater, on the northwest corner of Fifteenth and Farnam streets, Omaha, was completely destroyed by fire. The total loss is estimated at $252,000. Six persons, five of them firemen, were injured by falling walls. They are:

J. M. Gaynor, spectator, head and spine injured.

J. H. Scott, pipeman, bruised on head and body.

Ed Simpson, ladderman, arm broken.

John McBride, fire captain, cut about head and legs; dangerously injured.

Pipeman Klesner, cuts about the head and concussion of brain.

Pipeman Matson, severe cuts about head.

Pipeman A. L. Jerome, missing.

McBride and Klesner are thought to be fatally injured.

The Opera House, which occupied the four floors above the first, was insured for $50,000 and was worth $200,000. Snow, Lund & Co., druggists on the ground floor, were damaged to the extent of $9,000, the insurance just about covering this amount. The other losses were by the tenants of the building. J. J. Mullen, confectioner, lost a $5,000 stock, insured for $3,600.

Good Work.

The Board of Directors of the World's Fair has agreed to reduce the price of admission for children from 25 cents to one dime. The new order goes into effect October 10. The board referred to the council of administration a resolution allowing the inmates of charitable institutions free entrance to the fair and giving a free ticket to holders of a single share of stock. It is believed that the council will approve the resolution.

Indian Outbreak at an End.

The uprising among the Yuma Indians in Southwestern California has been put down and Miguel, the renegade chief, and several of his followers are under arrest. This puts an end to all trouble on the Yuma reservation. This information was telegraphed to the Interior Department by Indian Agent Estradillo.

Flooded by a Hurricane.

Dispatches from Paris say that the delta of the Tonkin was entirely flooded by a hurricane recently which swept away many dwellings. A number of their occupants escaped on rafts but many were drowned. The vicar apostolic has issued an appeal for funds to avert a famine as the crops were ruined by the hurricane.

Killed His Man.

A colored man named Bush, shot and killed Toby Granger, also colored, near Washington, Ind. No arrests made.

Big Reward Offered.

The relatives of the Wratten family offer a reward of $1,000 for the apprehension and conviction of the parties who murdered that family of six on the night of September 18, at Washington, Ind.

The Blockade Continues.

The blockade of Rio de Janeiro and Santos by the insurgents continues. President Peixoto is determined to resist to the end.

Bravery Rewarded.

Just before the adjournment of the Chicago Board of Trade the other day, the members were invited to meet in the call-board room, and soon assembled in large numbers. The occasion was the pesentation of a gold medal, suitably inscribed to Thomas Barrett, who so gallantly rushed into the gallery last week and disarmed the maniac whose shooting had created such a panic among the members. President Hamill made he presentation speech, to which Mr. Barrett briefly and modestly responded. At the same time a purse of $60 was presented to Henry Hadlum, the colored boy who assisted in the capture. The medal is of beautiful workmanship, solid gold and adorned with diamonds and suitably inscribed.

A PANIC

Prevented by Ex-President Harrison at the World's Fair.

Chicago special: Ex-President Harrison played a heroic part at Indiana's State celebration at Jackson park. While the exercises at the State Building were in progress the crowd which had gathered to hear the speakers became unmanageable. Those in the rear surged forward, pushing those in front against the speaker's platform and the walls of the building. Many women screamed, and three who were standing close to the speakers fainted. A panic was threatened. Then it was that Mr. Harrison showed his courage and coolness. He was speaking at the time, but raising his voice so that all in the assemblage could hear him he called on the crowd to move back. Then hurrying to the edge of the platform he reached over and caught a fainting woman. Governor Matthews came to his aid and the woman was carried inside the building, where she soon revived. At the same time other persons on the platform were doing their best to relieve the women and to quiet the crowd. Those in the rear were beyond the hearing of the speaker's voice. Something had to be done, and that quickly. Mounting a chair the ex-President shouted to the restless throng that it must be still if it would prevent serious accident. Executive Commissioner Havens had gone among the people and two other members of the commission with General Harrison besought the people to be quiet. To add to the confusion the ambulances, which had been called, came clanging toward the building, but were unable to get near the prostrate women. During the latter part of the trouble Gov. Matthews was at the rear of the little platform fanning a woman who had fainted. The crowd was so dense that the sick women could not be removed, and the distinguished persons on the platform assisted them to recover as best they could.

READS LIKE A ROMANCE.

Senator Turpie's Brother Returns to Delphi, Indiana, as from the Tomb.

Delphi (Ind.) special: After being mourned as dead for over thirty-five years, John Turpie, brother of Senator David Turpie, has returned to this city, to find the whole family dead except three brothers, one in Washington, one in Kansas City, and the other, Robert, occupying the old homestead. The story of John Turpie's life reads like a romance. In 1852 he left home in company with Robert Dickey. Dickey was taken ill at Hannibal, Mo., and had to return back, but Turpie joined an ox train across the plains, bound for Salem, Oregon, and drove an ox team all that distance. For forty years he never saw a face from his home, nor heard from any one there. He spent three years hunting and trapping with the Indians and was for awhile a sailor on the Pacific coast. He is now residing at Astoria. He says his brother, the Senator, visited that place four or five years ago, with a number of other Senators, but as he was busy at the time he did "not take the trouble to look Dave up." Unlike his brother, he is a stalwart Republican. The rise of values in Pacific slope lands has made him a rich man.

GROWING SERIOUS.

American Interests at Rio Janeiro Must Be Protected.

London special: A private dispatch received here from Rio Janeiro by a prominent firm engaged heavily in the Brazilian trade gives the following important information. The American Minister has instructed the Commander of the United States cruiser Charleston, to protect American goods on barges in the bay from seizure by the revolting squadron. He also telegraphed the Government at Washington advising that the United States vigorously protest against the further bombardment of Rio Janeiro; that many non-combatants had been killed and much property destroyed by repeated firing on the city.

The United States Government has instructed Minister Thompson to make every possible effort to protect American persons and property, and that all moral force of the Government should be exerted to prevent further destruction and bloodshed.

DEAD TO RIGHTS.

The Officers Claim to Have Conners and Eva Flint.

Toledo special: While the officials of the Lake Shore road are very guarded in their statements concerning the arrest of the man and woman at Kendallville, Ind., for complicity in the train robbery, at Kessler, says one of them, that there is no question as to the parties being implicated, and that they are in possession of information which will lead to the speedy arrest of the other members of the gang, who are mainly railroad men. The Prosecuting Attorney of Noble County, Ind., states that he is absolutely certain that the woman, Eva Flint, has made frequent trips to Chicago, where she has taken large amounts of currency and specie. Connors remains silent, but the evidence which is being put into shape will convict him, whether he weakens or not.

Wild Panic in a Synagogue.

A false alarm of fire was given recently in the synagogue at Culwayra Rean Sunwalki. The building was crowded with Jews at worship. All started at once for the two exits and despite the shouts of the rabbi that there was no fire, fought to get out. After a struggle of fifteen minutes, two-thirds of the congregation were still in the synagogue. As no fire had appeared they became calmer, and with the aid of the care takers the rabbi eventually restored quiet. Nine dead bodies were found near the exits and twenty persons lay unconscious and bleeding where they had been trampled. Fully 100 persons were injured in the rush. Fifteen are suffering from wounds likely to cause death.

Ordered to Shoot.

H. B. Ledyard of Detroit, President of the Michigan Central Railroad, gives further confirmation of the report that some of their employes had been armed with Winchester rifles. Said he: "The men on the express cars that run over our road are armed and we have just furnished guns to our own employes on the train. I think it is time for our railroad officials to adopt some means of preventing robberies of express trains. All of our trains with express cars are under the protection of at least ten armed men. The engineers, firemen, brakemen, baggagemen, and conductors each have a Winchester loaded with buckshot and they are instructed to shoot to kill if the trains are attacked."

Is Communicable.

Lansing (Mich.) special: Dr. Baker, Secretary of the State Board of Health, has been making a thorough examination and study of consumption, and has come to the conclusion that it is a communicable disease. He accordingly recommended at a meeting of the board that it be placed upon the list of communicable diseases and treated as such. Thus the board decreed, and hereafter consumption will be known as a communicable disease. The board also determined to rigidly enforce all its quarantine regulations.

They Want Cleveland to Visit the Fair.

Director General Geo. R. Davis of the World's Columbian Exposition, is in Washington. While there he will call on the President to pay his respects and will incidentally suggest to him the propriety of his visiting the World's Fair at the end of October, and be present at its close as he was at its opening. Colonel Davis thinks that the President and his family should see the Exposition in its entirety, and says the Chicago people would be gratified to have them come and see its wonders. A formal letter requesting the President's presence at the close of the Fair will be sent to him by the Exposition officials at a very early date.

Strange Fatalities.

West Chester (Penn.) special: A strange fatality has overtaken three brothers, all well-known men in this county. John Irey, ex-County Commissioner, who lived in Nantmeal, fell into a well sixty feet deep the other night. He was almost instantly killed. Irey was 78 years old. His brother, Benjamin Irey, Sheriff of Chester County was killed by the cars at Frazer a few years since while serving his first summons. His brother Samuel fell in a woods at Nantmeal and broke his neck. The latter's dead body was found after several hours' search.

Stallions Fight a Duel.

Two valuable stallions, owned by Dr. C. L. Thudicum of Haddonfield, N. J., fought a duel recently. They were known to be vicious and had been kept in separate fields. The other day they got into the same field by accident, and at once went at each other. Their hoofs struck terrible blows, and the horses were as effectively as zebras. Finally the more valuable stallion, worth $1,000 fell. The other soon trampled over him. Then, to make sure of a finish, the victor seized his rival by the throat and dragged him about the field.

Child's Horrible Death.

The 3-year-old boy of Mr. William Farris of Georgetown, Ky., met with a horrible death. The child, with his little sister, was playing in an empty ice house. He lighted a match, which ignited the straw and was soon enveloped in flames. His sister escaped and informed the mother, who hurried to the scene, but too late to rescue the unfortunate child, who soon died in great agony.

Another Wreck.

Mobile (Ala.) special: News just reached here that the north-bound passenger train on the Louisville and Nashville has been ditched between Scranton, Miss., and Bellefontaine. Two or three are reported killed and many injured. A wrecking train and surgeons have been telegraphed for. This is the second attempt made to derail this train at the same place.

A Hotel Burned.

A disastrous fire occurred at Sullivan, a small place north of Ashland, Ohio. The only hotel in the place was burned to the ground. It was occupied by two families, both of whom lost all their household goods. No cause can be found for the fire, unless set on fire by enemies of Mr. Meyers, the owner.

The Floor Gave Way.

While the funeral services over the remains of Mrs. Bow were in progress at Kingston, Wis., the floor of the residence gave way, letting 100 persons down into the cellar. Mrs. Van Burg was fatally hurt. Fully one-third of those who were carried down by the collapse were injured.

Prof. Brigg's Daughter.

A daughter of Prof. Briggs of the Union Theological Seminary, has resolved to enter the New York Training School for Deaconesses. At least such is the report in religious circles, and Prof Briggs makes no denial. This institution belongs to the Protestant Episcopal faith.

A Fallen Monarch.

Ex-King Milan of Servia, while riding from Monza on a horse belonging to King Humbert, fell, and was supposed to have been seriously injured. It appears, however, that, though the ex-King was badly shaken, he has not suffered any serious injuries.

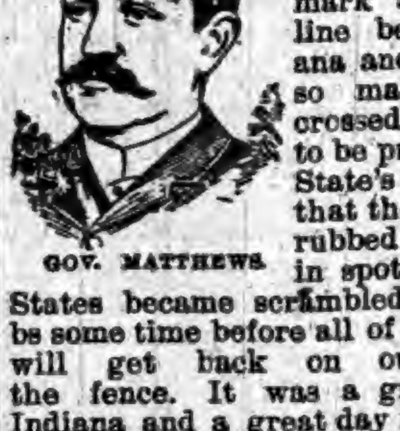
INDIANA AT THE FAIR

THE HOOSIER STATE'S DAY IN JACKSON PARK.

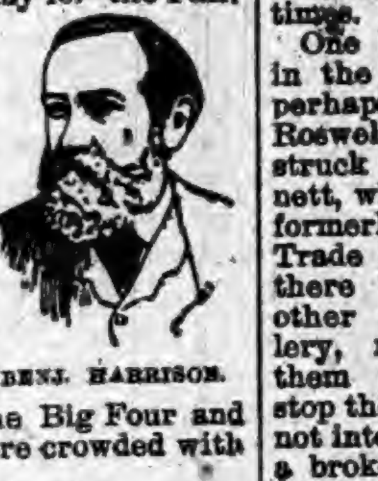
Gov. Matthews, Ex-President Harrison, R. W. Thompson and Gen. Wallace Tell of the Greatness of the State—Reception, Banquet and Fireworks.

Honor to Hoosierdom.



GOV. MATTHEWS.

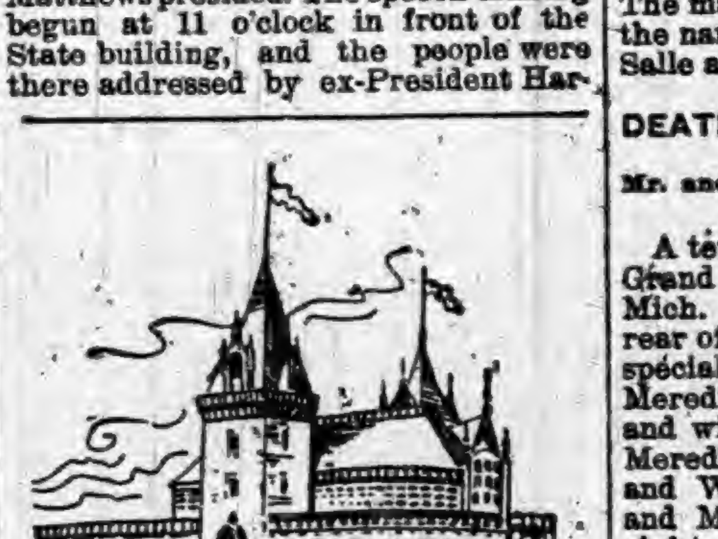
Indiana Day at the World's Fair was marked by a large attendance, so large, in fact, that it is feared that some one will have to mark a new State line between Indiana and Illinois, as so many people crossed the border to be present at the State's celebration that the old line is rubbed out entirely in spots. The two States became scrambled, and it will be some time before all of the Hoosiers will get back on our side of the fence. It was a great day for Indiana and a great day for the Fair. Excursion trains from nearly every city, town and hamlet in the State poured into Chicago. Indianapolis, Richmond, Muncie, Fort Wayne, Logansport, Lafayette, Terre Haute, New Albany, Vincennes, and all other cities sent big delegations. The Eastern Illinois, the Monon, the Big Four and Pan Handle Roads, were crowded with special trains.



BENJ. HARRISON.

All Came at Once.

Indiana's celebration was all packed into one day. It began early and lasted all through the evening. The State building, which occupies a conspicuous site between Illinois and California, had been decorated in attractive style for the occasion. Not to be outdone by anybody else a space was reserved on the porch for the foreign Commissioners, all of whom were invited to participate as special guests. The speakers, State Commissioners, and Gov. Matthews with his staff rode to the State building preceded by the Fort Wayne band. Gov. Claude Matthews presided. The speech-making begun at 11 o'clock in front of the State building, and the people were there addressed by ex-President Harrison, Gen. Lew Wallace, and ex-Secretary of the Navy R. W. Thompson. James Whitcomb Riley recited a poem, "The Hoosier Nightingales" sang, and the Fort Wayne Band played. Immediately after this program was finished a reception was given the Governor, the speakers and the Governor's staff in the State building. Before the reception was over the Fort Wayne Band began its concert, which lasted from 3 to 5 p. m. After the reception the Indiana visitors were at liberty to scatter and have a good time.



INDIANA STATE BUILDING.

But the festivities did not end with the speechmaking and the reception, nor with the going down of the sun. There was an Indiana illumination of the grounds at night, as well as fireworks in honor of the occasion. These were the most brilliant in features and specialties that have been given. While the basin was a sea of fire acres of burning gems were seen in the heavens. The special set piece was a Chinese pagoda made of 10,000 separate burning bits.

Distinguished Hoosiers Present.

Whether it beats any record or not, Indiana's celebration will be memorable because of the distinguishad character of the men who were there to represent the State. No other State can hope to furnish another such company. On the evening previous three travelers arrived in Chicago at the Hotel Ingram on 60th street and waited their turn at the register. They came in modestly, with small valises and overcoats, the same as other World's Fair visitors. B. F. Havens and Clem. Studebaker, World's Fair Commissioners, met them at the train and gave them an every-day welcome. One of the travelers was a short man with a silvery beard and a dusty silk hat. This was ex-President Benjamin Harrison. A younger man with a smooth, boyish face, a rather solemn nose and a pair of large, restless eyes peering through nose-glasses, was James Whitcomb Riley. The third was the venerable "Uncle Dick" Thompson, ex-Secretary of the Navy. He was not as nimble on his feet as the others, but he was fully as good-natured, and just as enthusiastic over the prospects of Indiana day. These three great sons of Indiana took part in the public exercises of the celebration presided over by Gov. Matthews. This made a program worth going all the way from Evansville to hear. Senator Daniel W. Voorhees was to have been there, but he could not leave Washington, and his place on the program was taken by the Iowa State Band.

SHOOTING ON 'CHANGE

CASSIUS BELDEN FIRES AMONG THE BROKERS.

Deed of a Lunatic, Who Is Arrested—Wild Scene Ensues—Traders Trample Over Each Other—Grand Trunk Wreck in Bellevue, Mich.

Three People Wounded.

A man, presumably crazy, created a panic on the Chicago Board of Trade the other morning, completely clearing the trading floor and stopping all business by indulging in a wild fusillade of pistol-shots, aimed first at the ceiling and later at the excited, struggling throng of traders on the floor below him. It happened at about 11:45. Business at that time was progressing as usual. Suddenly the babel of cries from the pits was punctuated by the sharp crack of a pistol. Instantly every one turned toward the south gallery, from which the sound proceeded. A stranger was standing in the gallery with a pistol in his hand. After the first shot he turned his weapon toward the crowd and, in rapid succession, fired four times.

One bullet struck Ammi T. Bennett in the neck, inflicting a painful and perhaps dangerous wound. Charles Roswell, a telegraph operator, was struck by another bullet. Mr. Bennett, who was wounded by a shot, was formerly President of the Board of Trade Insurance Exchange. Though there were from fifteen to twenty other visitors in the south gallery, no attempt was made by them to overpower the shooter or stop the deadly fusillade, and he was not interfered with until Tom Barrett, a broker, recovering from the panic which had overtaken the traders, rushed up stairs and grappled with the supposed maniac. A negro named Joe ran up and helped Mr. Barrett overpower the fellow. When the shooter was subjugated he was hustled into a side room, and for a few moments the wildest excitement prevailed about the building. It was said that two or three men had been killed and among the rumors tossed about was one that the angry brokers were preparing to storm the room where the shooter was confined and lynch him. The police soon arrived on the scene, however, and took the man to the Harrison street station. The man who did the shooting gave the name of Cassius Belden, of 395 La Salle avenue, Chicago.

DEATH IN A RAILWAY WRECK.

Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Newland, of Detroit, Killed at Bellevue, Mich.

A terrible accident occurred on the Grand Trunk Railroad at Bellevue, Mich. The Erie express ran into the rear of a regular train, demolishing a special car containing Howard G. Meredith and wife, Henry A. Newland and wife (father and mother of Mrs. Meredith), William Costles, porter, and William Abernathy, cook. Mr. and Mrs. Newland were killed outright. Mr. and Mrs. Meredith were badly but not fatally injured. Costles was fatally hurt. Abernathy escaped unhurt. Jennison, fireman of the fast train, was badly scalded. The side of the depot was smashed in.

As nearly as can be ascertained the accident happened in this way: The rugular west-bound train, due at Bellevue at 1:30 a. m., was two hours late. As it lay at the depot the fast Lake Erie train, which does not stop at the station, came along at tremendous speed. This private car was at the rear of the regular train, and directly in front of it was a sleeper. The Lake Erie engine plowed clear through the rear car, leaving it in two sections on either side of the track, and bunted against the sleeper. The private car was almost entirely demolished, while the Lake Erie engine was badly damaged. The occupants of the car were all residents of Detroit and they had left home for Chicago to visit the World's Fair.

AT Scottsburg, south-bound World's Fair train No. 12, on the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railway, collided with two teams and wagons, killing one team and demolishing both wagons, and seriously injuring Wm. Peacock, aged 65. The teams had driven between the main track and a siding to load some bonedust from a car, and when the train was seen approaching Mr. Peacock attempted to drive his team around the car on the siding, out of the way, but the engine struck his wagon, tearing away the left half, and throwing him on the ground, shattering his right leg below the knee and otherwise bruising him. The other team being behind turned on the track in front of the train and the horses were killed and the wagon entirely demolished. The driver escaped by leaping into an open box car standing on the siding.

JOHN KING of Wabash County, was sentenced to two years in the Penitentiary for forging the name of Rudolph Rife to a $75 note.

A DARING and successful attempt at train wrecking was made recently, by which the Cincinnati express on the Vandalia road was derailed near Staunton, Clay County. A rail had been taken up and so placed as to throw the train down an embankment [illegible] feet high. Fortunately the engine did not follow the rail, but every car except one sleeper left the track. The train was running forty miles an hour, and was delayed over three hours. No one seriously hurt, but the passengers were all shaken up and scared.

IS REPEAL BEATEN?

APPARENTLY AUTHENTIC RUMORS SO DECLARE.

Ominous Quiet Reigns in the Senate—Details of the Alleged Program—Getting Ready to Tackle the Tariff—Vote Coming Soon.

A Masterly Inactivity.

Washington correspondence:

CONGRESS has been dull as a garden hoe for several days. Nobody has been fihting, no warwhoops have alarmed the shivering air, no blood has flown and no scalps have been taken. Senator Stewart is resting from his labors, while others in the Senate appear willing to be at peace. But while the Senate is inactive there are all sorts of opinions expressed and many rumors are afloat as to what will be the final outcome. One of these is that the unconditional repeal of the Sherman law is beaten, and this, according to the opinion of many, beyond a doubt. It is likely that a vote will be taken soon, within a week or so at least, but it will be on the passage of a compromise measure. Strong denials are advanced in some quarters that a compromise has been agreed on, but in the face of these it is generally understood that the most powerful influences are now arrayed in favor of compromise legislation.

The program, as your correspondent sees it, contemplates the passage of a bill through the Senate. The concurrence of the House in that bill is to be had, and then a recess taken for the period of three weeks in order that tariff legislation may be formulated. The Ways and Means Committee has its bill much further under way than is publicly admitted. If a three weeks' recess be given it is believed the House itself can be at work on the tariff bill early in December. On reassembling in November some other legislation, probably the bankruptcy bill, is to be taken up until the tariff is ready. If the compromise financial measure be passed by common consent Federal elections will be permitted to go over till the regular session.

Routine Proceedings.

When the Senate met Tuesday morning there was no quorum, and a stay of proceedings was necessary until members strolled in one by one to a sufficient number. Mr. Stewart then presented resolutions adopted at a mass-meeting held in Cleveland, Ohio, favoring an investigation to ascertain whether Senators are interested in national banks, railroads, and other special interests favored or fostered by legislation. The repeal bill was then taken up. Mr. Stewart, who was recognized, said he would yield to Mr. Dubois, who had given notice of an intention to speak, and Mr. Dubois in turn yielded to Mr. Perkins, of California. After some unimportant routine business the House proceeded to the consideration of the federal election law repeal bill.

The Senate quarreled nearly all day Wednesday over the Dubois resolution to postpone action, until January, upon financial, tariff, and federal election matters. Senators Dubois, Mitchell, Chandler, Hoar, Peffer, Butler, Wolcott, Gorman, Teller, and Pasco were mixed up in it, and beyond the exhibition of some rather warm feeling nothing of importance was accomplished.

The storm center shifted from the Senate to the House, Thursday. The federal elections bill was the bone of contention. Mr. Fithian, of Illinois, called Mr. Morse, of Massachusetts, a liar, and proceeded to prove it when the Speaker quelled the tumult by declaring both gentlemen out of order. Beyond this nothing of importance was done, though Representatives Johnson, Breckinridge and Black joined in a debate that was decidedly acrimonious. The day in the Senate was as calm as the proverbial mill pond. The repeal of the Sherman law was the subject of debate. A number of appointments were confirmed, and the body adjourned.

In the Senate, Friday, Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition signed, he said, by 144 manufacturers of Philadelphia, in favor of legislation to preserve the protective character of the tariff and the integrity of silver as a money metal. The petition favors the admission of American silver bullion to coinage upon the payment by the owner of a seigniorage absorbing three-fourths of the difference between the London price of bullion and its value when coined. It was printed as a document. The repeal bill was then taken up, and Mr. Harris of Tennessee addressed the Senate. He favored the coinage of the entire American product of silver, at any ratio to be agreed upon, saying that that of 16 to 1 would be satisfactory. The debate on the Tucker bill being resumed in the House, Mr. Lacey of Iowa took the floor in opposition to the repeal of election laws, and laid great stress on the arguments in favor of the constitutionality of these laws. Mr. De Armond of Missouri followed in support of the repeal.

Saturday closed the eighth week of fruitless debate in the Senate, and as before, the repeal of the Sherman law was the subject of attention. But little other business, and that unimportant, came up. The session of the House lasted only three hours. Mr. Sayer of Texas, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, presented for immediate consideration a bill to extend the time for the completion of the work of the eleventh census until June 30, 1894. The bill was passed without objection. Debate on the bill to repeal the national election laws was then resumed. The feature of the debate was the speech of Representative Patterson of Tennessee. He admitted that violence and even fraud might have been used in the South, but asserted that the Anglo-Saxon race was in the nature of things certain to dominate eventually in a race contest. He maintained that President Lincoln went to his grave never dreaming of universal negro suffrage; that not a soldier who followed the flag of the Union and fought its battles dreamed of it during the war or immediately after. "The greatest calamity," said he, "that ever happened to a free people was the assassination of Lincoln. Had he lived and been permitted to carry out his policy there would have been peace and prosperity in the South twenty-five years ago."

That Keeri had foreseen about how the matter would turn, was sufficiently evinced by his conduct. Beyond the observations we have recorded, not a word escaped him; but he stood leaning calmly against the door of a pew, in the attitude of a man who considers himself master of the situation.

As to Alma and Ralph, they had taken very little notice of the intruder, the prompt action of Bullet having assured them that he would do all that could be done in his own interest and that of the bridal couple. Alma, it is true, could not refrain from darting sundry glances of scorn and indignation at the rejected suitor, and Ralph was only restrained by a sense of dignity from the instant chastisement of the intruder; but both of the contracting parties may be said to have rather endured than resented the intrusion.

"Well, what is decided?" whispered Alma to her father, as Bullet returned, flushed and excited, to her side.

"We must go home immediately," was the answer, in a correspondingly low voice "The conveyance in still in waiting. "I'll explain all as soon as we are by ourselves."

This conclusion was so different from that expected by Alma that she could neither restrain her tears nor her anger.

"Is that tawny rascal, then, so high and mighty that we must be his humble victims?" she demanded, excitedly.

"Hush! Let us have no further scene here," enjoined Bullet, nervously. "Nothing is particularly amiss—if you do as I tell you. The priest has given me instructions. We must leave at once."

The gravity of her father's tones impressed the girl even more than the words, and she no longer delayed the departure. Keeri waited in his serene attitude until the bridal couple and Bullet had returned to their carriage, and then he stalked quietly away, paying little heed to the suppressed jeers and reproaches of which he was the object from the younger portion of the guests, whose pleasure he had thus troubled.

In three minutes more the little church was deserted, and the bridal party were leaving the town behind them.

"To go home is our first step, of course," whispered Bullet, indicating by a nod an unwelcome listener in the person of the driver of the carriage. "It's only at home that I shall be able to talk with you freely."

Hardly a word passed until the ride was over, although it was one, it will be remembered, of nearly an hour's duration.

"You may wait," said Bullet to the driver, when the party had alighted. "I shall probably require your services further."

The bridal couple were soon seated with Bullet in the privacy of their little sitting room, and then the bold and still angry eyes of Alma turned inquiringly to her father.

"I can now tell you all," said the ex-sailor in a whisper, after looking nervously around. "That wretched Keeri had the basement of the church full of sailors from the dock and Kanakas from all points of the compass. He must have had, the pastor thinks, fifty or sixty armed men at his heels, and he came there intent upon an unheard of disturbance. To kill Mr. Benning outright, and to carry you off again to the hills, Alma, were two well-defined points of his plan; and my own life, of course, was not accounted of the value of a feather. To save not only our own lives but those of our invited guests, the pastor enjoined me by everything sacred to take the course I have taken."

"You have done well in heeding the pastor's advice, of course," said Ralph; "but it is not necessary that Alma and I should abandon our idea of getting married. We can all slip off quietly to some near village of the interior, and there have the marriage ceremony performed, and the whole affair ended, I should say, within two or three hours."

"The very course I was intending to take—the very course, in fact, advised by the pastor," cried Bullet, jubilantly. "It was in this view that I have kept the carriage in waiting. In this way we shall turn the tables completely upon Keeri; for after you are once married, of course, all his schemes and machinations will fall to the ground, for the simple reason that they will be utterly futile."

"Let us be off at once," proposed Alma, arising. "There's the little chapel on the other side of Pearl Bay—Mr. Hapgood's—scarcely five miles distant, and that is probably as good a place for us as any other."

"At any rate, it is the place I have mentally selected," said Bullet, giving his daughter a look of secret intelligence. "You and Ashley had better look to your toilets, and we'll be off for Mr. Hapgood's in a few moments."

It seemed to Ralph that Bullet was anxious to say a few words in private to Alma, and he accordingly availed himself of the suggestion about his toilet to retreat to his own apartment. Alma, in like manner, was about retiring to her room when her father intercepted her on the stairs.

"Just one word, but a very important one," he whispered. "All I've said about Keeri's band of desperadoes is a lie, made up under the spur of the moment. The real difficulty is, as the pastor informed me, that Keeri came to the church with the intention of declaring who Ashley is, and with the further intention of showing that we also know who and what he is."

"But how can Keeri have learned Ashley's identity?" breathed Alma.

"The Lord only knows; but, perhaps, from the three sailors of whom I have spoken—the three who have been hanging around Honolulu all these weeks, and who have shown clearly enough, in one way and another, that they are in the secret of Ashley's identity. You see, therefore, that it was very considerate of the pastor not to force Keeri to bawl out all he knows about Ashley, and you also see that it was equally incumbent upon me to beat a retreat."

"Exactly!" breathed Alma, with a fiercer look of resolve upon her countenance than Bullet had ever before seen upon it. "I see! I see! No time is to be lost. Let us be off for Mr. Hapgood's at once. By this movement we shall beat the Kanaka and make a success of our project."

In five minutes more the trio were on their way in the carriage around Pearl Bay to the little chapel of Mr. Hapgood. Not a soul had been seen approaching from the town, and the hearts of Bullet and his daughter beat high with the hope that their conspiracy would be crowned with success.

But Keeri was not to be so readily beaten.

The carriage had reached a lonely point of the road, in one of the valleys bordering Pearl Bay, when three ruffianly-looking men suddenly bounded from a place of concealment by the wayside, and hurled themselves upon Ralph and the ex-sailor, while the driver of the carriage turned like a tiger upon Alma, thus showing that he was in Keeri's service.

That Ralph fought with as much ability as courage will be taken as a matter of course, but what could he do against such odds and at such a disadvantage? The old sailor fell insensible at the first onslaught, and a crashing blow upon our hero's skull soon stretched him beside Bullet. Of what further then and there followed he knew nothing.

At least two or three hours must have passed subsequent to this furious assault before Ralph recovered his senses, but he finally gathered himself up into a sitting posture, after sundry preliminaries, and bent a keen glance in every direction around him.

"The villains!" he ejaculated. "They've fled, of course! They've not only given me the 'compliments' of Hank Ripple, as they said, but they've doubtless robbed me!"

He felt hastily in his pocket.

"Yes, they have taken purse and papers," he added. "And Maida? Ripple, too? Can it be that he has smuggled himself aboard the Nor'wester, as these deserters stated?"

Wiping his bruised head, he arose to his feet and bent his steps in the direction of Honolulu.

He had gone scarcely a hundred rods, however, when he met Kulu, that other Kanaka of our acquaintance—the servant of Bullet—the very man, it will be remembered, who had first encountered the young Chicagoan after the memorable injuries, many weeks before, which had robbed Ralph of his memory.

"Can I be of any use to you, Mr. Benning?" asked Kulu, after looking the wonder he felt at seeing him in such a plight.

Ralph halted with an inquiring glance.

"Are you speaking to me, sir?" he asked.

Kulu nodded.

"Then I beg to inform you that my name is not Benning, but Kemplin—Ralph Kemplin!"

"Oh, indeed!"

The Kanaka was silent a moment, recoiling in his amazement, and then he cried:

"You are aware, of course, that Mr. Bullet has been seriously injured—taken home in an insensible and dangerous condition?"

It was now Ralph's turn to recoil in astonishment, as he replied:

"No, I know nothing of any Mr. Bullet. Never heard the name before."

"But surely you must know that Miss Bullet has been carried off to the hills again by Keeri?"

"Miss Bullet? Keeri?" repeated Ralph, wonderingly. "Never heard the names before. I know nothing of these parties. What are they to me? Are you drunk or joking? Or do you take me for a fool?"

The Kanaka was reasonably brave, as we have asserted in a former page, but things were now getting too mixed for his comprehension, and he turned and fled in silence.

"Well, let him go," muttered Ralph. "He probably finds his fool's game a losing one. Let's see—let me think a little. This business with these three ruffians has really confused me. Ah, I have it all now. Maida—my dear Maida—has just sailed in the Nor'wester for the Arctic Ocean. The Yokohama is to sail for China to-morrow. Feeling lonely and gloomy I came out here to look at the fish-ponds and other curiosities, and here I have been nearly murdered, at Hank Ripple's suggestion, by those three runaways from the Nor'wester! Well, well," he added, with a glance at the sun, "there are still several hours at my disposal, and it will be strange if I cannot bring the villains to justice before I leave the island!"

With this resolve uppermost in his mind, he started anew at a brisk pace for the capital.

"And Maida? How can I reach her? How save her from that vile Hank Ripple?"

As indicated by his words, the recent blow upon Ralph's head had counteracted the injuries he had received from a former one from the same assailants. All that had passed since that memorable day was now in its turn utterly obliterated from his consciousness, while his old memory had been restored! He no longer knew anything about Benning, Alma, or Bullet! In a word, he was "himself again!"

CHAPTER X.

THE SITUATION CLEARING.

As Ralph Kemplin, "clothed and in his right mind," although bruised in body, continued his brisk walk towards the capital, he was struck with the length of the road.

"Seems to me I ought to have reached town before now, or at least be in sight of it," he muttered. "Queer enough!"

He continued to trudge on resolutely, notwithstanding the weakness induced by his injuries and the heat of the afternoon, and at length came out upon the crest of the hills adjoining Kalika Bay—the scene, it will be remembered, of the first assault he had experienced at the hands of Ripple's three ruffians long weeks before.

From this point Punch Bowl Hill is plainly visible, looming up behind and beyond the capital, and the amazement of the young Chicagoan, as he saw where he was, almost took away his breath.

"Why, I'm further from town after all these miles of travel than I was when these ruffians attacked me," he exclaimed, involuntarily. "Yes, yonder is the spot where they waylaid me! Doubtless I shall see our traces in the sand and other indications of the struggle."

He failed in this expectation, of course, but he did not relax his steady pace toward the town.

"They must have carried me inland a few miles to rob me at their leisure," was the conclusion he soon reached. "It may be they had a wagon in waiting."

As this theory made the whole situation plain to him, he dismissed the subject from his mind and began to look forward to what he should do upon his arrival at the capital.

"I'll first see the agent of the Nor'wester, who is also the agent of the Yokohama, and he will assist me in setting things to rights," was his speedy and natural reflection. "As to the question of money, that can be managed readily enough, even if I do not recover my drafts and other papers."

He held to his course with such resolution that he made prompt entry into town, arriving there before the agent to whom he had made reference had left his office, although it was now late in the afternoon.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Beards.

The Moors hold by their beards when they swear, in order to give weight to their oath, which after this formality they rarely violate. The length of beard seems to weigh with them more than the stock of brains.

Admiral Keppel was sent to Algiers to demand satisfaction for the injuries done to His Britannic Majesty's subjects by their corsairs; the dey, enraged at the boldness of the ambassador, exclaimed "that he wondered at the insolence of the English monarch in sending him a message by a foolish, beardless boy."

The admiral, somewhat nettled, replied that "if his master had supposed wisdom was to be measured by the length of the beard, he would doubtless have sent the dey a he-goat."

This answer so enraged the dey that he ordered his mutes to attend with the bow-strings, saying that the admiral should pay for his boldness with his life. Nothing daunted by this threat the ambassador took the dey to the window, and showing him the English fleet said, "If it was his pleasure to put him to death, there were Englishmen enough in that fleet to make him a glorious funeral pile." The dey, who wore a long beard, took the hint from the man who had none.

The Secret of Success.

Signor Scarem, the noted wild animal tamer, had put his trained tigers through their tricks. He had driven them round and round their cage, and they had crouched in a corner at the word of command, though he was but a weak human being, and they were mighty wild beasts, and could have torn him limb from limb had they realized their power.

He had no weapon in his hand, if we except a short whip which he occasionally cracked over the tigers' heads. His performance being ended, amid breathless silence on the part of the spectators, Signor Scarem stepped from the cage unharmed, and then the tumultuous applause broke forth.

People crowded about him to praise his courage, and one man said:

"Don't you regard that as very dangerous?"

"Not at all," replied the trainer. "Tigers are not dangerous as long as you keep on the right side of them."

"Which is the right side?" asked the questioner, quizzingly.

"The outside," replied the trainer, as he strode away to the dressing-room.

Clergyman and Baker.

A clergyman in Scotland desired his hearers never to call one another liars, but when anyone said the thing that was not true they ought to whistle. One Sunday he preached a a sermon on the miracle of the loaves and fishes, and, being at a loss how to explain it, he said the loaves were not like those nowadays; they were as big as some of the hills in Scotland! He had scarcely pronounced the words when he heard a loud whistle.

"Wha is that," says he, "ca's me a liar?"

"It is I, Willy MacDonald, the baker."

"Well, Willy, what objection have ye to what I ha' told ye?"

"None," said he; "only I want to know what sort o' ovens they had to bake those loaves o' bread in."—New York Ledger.

No Use for a Bed.

"I have never slept in a bed since the war," remarked an old soldier recently. "The reason," he continued, "is not because I am a crank. I simply am unable to go to sleep in a bed, and for twenty years I have not tried. During the war I was in service four years, and in all that time never slept in a bed. I had no home and consequently had no furloughs. The habit of rolling in a blanket and sleeping grew so fixed with me that when I got back from the war and settled down a bed was a nuisance. I have rolled and tossed and tried hard to sleep night after night, but was not able to keep my eyes closed until I sought the floor. For ten years I have tried to reconcile myself to a bed, but it was no use. Finally I gave it up, and now in my home in Boston I sleep in a room in which there is no bed. I simply roll myself in a blanket or two, according to the temperature, and I sleep soundly. My health is good, and I am sure that I shall live just as long as if I slept on a down mattress."

Life Compared to a Circus.

Take it all and all, writes "Amber," life is something like a circus tent pitched on the shore of the big blue lake of eternity for a fleeting day. If, as we stroll through the show, we persist in stirring up the tigers and aggravating the lion's whelps we need not complain that to us there seems to be nothing but wild beasts and snarling fangs in the big exhibit. If we spend our time in the sawdust ring laughing at the clown, or if we find our fancy chiefly tickled by the sylphs who bound through paper rings and cling like flies to the gleaming backs of galloping horses, our minds will take a different coloring altogether. But if we slip away often to the outlooks, where from out the rim of loosened canvas we can catch strong whiffs of a purer air and gaze far out upon the peaceful sea, then indeed shall we keep serenest minds and most healthful bodies.

What "Bankrupt" Means.

The word bankrupt comes from two Italian words, signifying a broken bench. The populace of Venice, Florence and other Italian cities often became greatly incensed with the money lenders, who were frequently Hebrews, and bursting into the market places, would steal the change and break or overturn the bench. A broken bench implied a money changer without funds, hence the term.

A Watch's Tireless Mechanism.

The main wheel of a watch makes 1,460 revolutions in a year; the second or center wheel, 8,760; the third wheel, 70,060; the fourth wheel, 525,600; and the fifth or scape wheel, 4,731,360. The number of vibrations is 141,912,000 in a year.

ALEXANDER and Julius Cæsar were both accustomed to whip their wives on the slightest provocation.

THE TIN PLATE FRAUD

A FARCE M'KINLEYISM'S GREATEST ACHIEVEMENT IS.

It Is Shown to Be a Most Miserable Financial Failure and a Curse to More Important Industries—Crying for More Pensions.

In Its True Light.

As was expected, Governor McKinley opened his campaign in Ohio by pointing with pride to "forty-two tin plate factories employing thousands of men, not one of which (he probably means industries) was in existence before the tariff of 1890." After stating that the product of his pet industry was nearly 40,000,000 pounds for the three months ending June 30, 1893, and that 45 per cent. of that was made from American black plates, he said:

> I assume that tin plate is to be made free, because the last House of Representatives, which was Democratic, made it free by a party vote. These splendid industries which have been built up in our country, and which have supplied employment for so many workingmen, are to be closed, and this, the greatest consuming nation of tin plate in the world, will hereafter buy this product from abroad, unless our labor is brought down to the degraded level of competing labor. I cannot believe that the people of the United States favor this policy. If they do, they are recreant to their own highest and best interests. The manufacture of the tin plate annually consumed by the people of the United States would keep an army of 60,000 workingmen in constant employment. The policy of my distinguished competitor, the Democratic candidate for Governor, is to take this employment from them, and give it to the cheaper labor of Europe. The tariff of the Republican party would employ these 60,000 workingmen in the United States at good wages and thus give to the agriculturist, to the manufacturers and to merchants 60,000 profitable consumers of their products.

Undoubtedly the tin-plate industry is the greatest achievement of McKinleyism. But should its putative father be proud of it? In the first place we will inspect the Governor's figures:

The official estimate for the quarter ending June 30, 1893, is 35,000,000 pounds. But nearly 20,000,000 pounds were made from imported sheets. As nine-tenths of the weight and of the value and three-fourths of the labor cost of tin plates is in the black or uncoated sheets, the Treasury Department has very properly decided that such sheets when merely dipped in imported tin, often by imported workmen, do not constitute "American tin plate." It was only by a patriotic move of Republican officials, who wished to magnify our production, that this foreign product was ever declared to be American. Our actual product for this quarter, then, was less than 16,000,000 pounds, about half of which was terne or roofing plate.

Next, as to that "army of 60,000 workingmen." The Hon. Thomas L. Bunting, President of the Tin Plate Consumers' Association, said in Congress, in 1892, that our average annual consumption of tin plate (after deducting 1,000,000 boxes for export) is about 5,000,000 boxes, and that the total labor cost of producing this is about $5,000,000. At $400, the average wages paid such help in this country, 12,500 people might possibly find employment in this industry if we should make all of the tin plate we consume. If we should employ an army of 60,000, the average wages would be less than $2 a week. The Governor can choose between the two horns of this dilemma.

As 16,000,000 pounds equal about 160,000 boxes we are now employing about 400 people in this genuine American industry. If, as Congressman Bunting estimated, 300 men at $400 a year could tin, wash, grease, rub, and dust the 5,000,000 boxes which we annually consume, we are now employing about 115 men in our tin-dipping establishments. About 500 men, then, should be employed in our tin-plate works. As, however, many of the plants are small and not run to good advantage, the number actually employed may be considerably greater. We will be very liberal and give it 1,500 men at $400 each, making a total for wages paid of $600,000 as the result of the McKinley tariff.

In order to estimate the profits of this industry to this country we shall now see what it is costing us. The duty on 500,000,000 pounds of tin plate is $12,000,000. Seven million dollars of this was added by McKinley for the express purpose of inducing tin-plate factories to sojourn with us. The first two years were almost a dead loss to this country, as the mills were not, in 1892, making more than 5 per cent. of our consumption. Now, after nearly three years of prosperity, greater than that of "any other new industry ever started in the United States," as McKinley tell us, we pay out $12,000,000 and take in $600,000! And Ohio's Governor considers this a great bargain. But suppose that the great expectations and promises of McKinley had been realized, and that we were now making all of the tin plate we consume, and that our factories were dependent upon the duty; we would then expend $12,000,000 in increased cost of tin plate and get back $5,000,000 in wages if Congressman Bunting's statistics are correct. But, it should not be forgotten that not all of this $5,000,000 is gain; the most of those employed in this industry could find employment in other industries—not pensioners upon public charity—where they could earn almost quite as much as in this pauper industry. The actual gain to the wage-earners employed in this industry, then, is very small.

But this is not all. Congressman Bunting showed that the net value of the raw materials—outside of the pig tin—in 5,000,000 boxes of tin plate is $3,150,000. He came to the conclusion that "consumers of tin plates, therefore, could afford to pay for all these raw materials, and leave them in the ground, pay for all the labor to make them up, and leave it idle, and still save $3,700,000."

Nor is this all, or even the greater part of McKinley's bad bargain. The increased cost of tin plate has had a most injurious effect upon all tin plate consuming industries. Some of these are the can-making, the roofing, and the canning industries. Through these the injury extends to the building trades, to small fruit and vegetable farming and to other trades and industries. We will take space to enumerate only a few of the industries struck by McKinley blight. The can-making establishments are great sufferers from the decreased use of cans due to increased cost. Mr. Bunting mentions eight that paid $82,576 for wages in 1891 and only $39,791 in 1892—a loss of $42,785 to labor. The wage-earners had to share with the consumers in paying the duty which McKinley says the foreigner pays.

There are 1,200 canning concerns in the United States besides 800 more meat, fish and oyster packers. The growers, pickers, packers, etc., engaged in producing the contents of these cans make up an army of 2,000,000. The $8,000,000 tax on tin plate used for canning purposes touches every one of these producers as well as the 65,000,000 consumers of canned goods, many of whom depend for cheap food upon canned vegetables, meats, etc. Thus the tomato farmer averages about five tons of tomatoes, worth $6 per ton, to an acre. The duty cost on the cans necessary to can five tons of tomatoes is $21.50. Without this duty the canner could afford to pay 70 per cent. more for tomatoes—13¼ cents per bushel. If he should pay the same for tomatoes he could afford—and increased competition would compel him—to deduct $8,000,000 from the selling price of his goods, in the interest of millions of poor consumers.

"The average yield of corn per acre," says Mr. Bunting, "is three tons, which at $6 per ton, nets the farmer $18; the duty cost on the cans to put up an acre of corn is $11.61. In the absence of a tariff on tin plates the farmer could receive 64 per cent. more for his crop and the canner still be able to sell his goods at the same price."

Millions of bushels of vegetables and fruits rot each year in this country because it will not quite pay to can them after paying McKinley taxes on tin plate. Millions of poor people in this and other countries suffer for the cheap food of which this duty deprives them. Instead of exporting millions of dollars worth of canned goods, as we would do if canning materials and supplies were untaxed, we now import large quantities of jams, jellies, marmalades, etc., from England. And McKinley takes a fiendish delight in strangling the American canning industry that his comparitively insignificant industry may have some political significance. He poses as a statesman because he has given life to a leech capable of sucking the life blood from creatures a thousand times larger and more valuable. Bosh! He should repent forever in sackcloth and ashes for having brought about such a condition. If the voters of Ohio give him his dues they will set him up in business with that other great Republican statesman, John J. Ingalls.
BYRON W. HOLT.

Crying for More.

The demand for more and larger pensions is little abated, notwithstanding the embarrassment to which the Treasury is subjected by reason of past extravagance in this direction.

Many bills of this sort have already been introduced. Mr. Houck, of Tennessee, proposes that all loyal citizens of the insurrectionary States who suffered arrest and imprisonment on account of their loyalty and were wounded or incurred disease during such imprisonment shall be pensioned. There are bills to pension soldiers of Indian wars; to restore pensions to pensioners of the Florida Indian wars who lost their pensions by going into the rebellion; to enable applicants for pensions under the General Disability act of 1890 to prosecute their claims in the absence of an honorable discharge; to graduate the pensions of soldiers who did not engage in battle or incur disability while in the service according to the length of their service; to raise the rate for total blindness to $100 a month, for total deafness to $50 a month, for total disability to $100 a month; to give to present pensioners an extra $2 a month for every thirty days they were confined in rebel prisons, and so on.

There seems to be no end to more or less plausible demands to be supported at the Government expense on account of war service. If a law were passed to pay every one who was mustered in a pension of $1,200 a year for life, there would be attempts to increase the amount, and to continue it to sons of veterans or other heirs.

The war ended more than twenty-five years ago. The cry for pensions and more pensions on account of it bids fair to continue forever. The number of those who served their country purely from patriotic motives and esteemed it a privilege to do so dwindles yearly. Honorable motives are yielding to mercenary ones. Unsatisfied by a national gratitude that has had no equal in the world's history, the Grand Army, without shame, assumes a role of mendicancy.—New York World.

Mr. Neal Means It.

Mr. McKinley wanted to know: Does my opponent, Mr. Neal, really seek to destroy this beautiful system of mine known as McKinleyism? Does he wish to eliminate protection from tariff? Can he really mean it? Mr. McKinley has his answer. Mr. Neal does mean every word of it, and he is not at all afraid to say so. He stands squarely on the tariff plank of the Chicago platform, a plank which he is understood to have sawed out and dressed himself, and he does not skulk behind any ifs or buts. In his opening speech at Newark, Mr. Neal said: "The greatest foe to the prosperity of the people is McKinleyism. So long as the Federal system of protective taxation is continued we can have no general and permanent prosperity in this country. To regain such prosperity we must apply the ax to the root of the evil and forever destroy the McKinley method of taxation." The whole unconstitutional system under which the taxing power is exercised, not to get revenue for public purposes but to enrich the few out of the earnings of the many, must be uprooted and cast out.

That is the Democratic platform. It is Mr. Neal's plaform. And it would be a good thing for the Democratic party, because it would be a capital thing for the country, if every Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee stood boldly and immovably upon the same platform, and rejected with scorn and indignation every suggestion looking to the continuance of a system the precise like of which the Supreme Court of the United States has denounced as "none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation." Mr. Neal means radical war on this system of licensed spoliation, and he will make things hot for McKinley in Ohio.—Chicago Herald.

Pauper Industries Ask Alms.

The hearings given by the Ways and Means Committee to the representatives of the protected tariff interests have closed. They have not developed any new points of importance. For the most part it was the same old whine: Give us protection or we shall either be ruined or compelled to cut down wages. When they were given all the protection they asked for they made no haste to put up wages. The workmen did not get the benefits which the manufacturer said was his motive in seeking higher duties. The latter paid his workmen as low wages as he could hire them for, without reference to the tariff. But he says that he will not similarly neglect to lower wages if he has a good excuse. He will not. He never does neglect that opportunity. But the story is told. The threats are all recorded. Now let the committee draft its reform bill. — New York World.

Out of Gear.

At the last meeting of the National Wool Growers' Association, two things were agreed upon by it—that there must be increased protection on wool, and a reduction of wages among employes. Let's see. High protection makes wages high—doesn't it? And low tariff makes low wages. Isn't that what we were told in the Presidential campaign of last year? Then, how—why—er—which—er—whence—what about the propositions of the National Wool Growers' Association?—American Industries.

THE first sea-going vessel of aluminium is being constructed in the dockyards of the Loire. It is a cutter which would weigh, if made of the usual materials, 4,500 tons, instead of its actual weight of 2,500 tons.

THE AUBURN COURIER
OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.
JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.
Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.
THURSDAY........OCTOBER 5, 1893.

HARDING, the last of the men who attempted to rob a train at Centralia, Ill., is in jail. All three are now in a fair way to be punished.

EIGHTY-THREE attempts at train robbery or train wrecking have been made so far this year, and one-third of the year still to come.

NEW pensions are being allowed now at the rate of about 1,700 a month. Yet republicans are blaming a democratic administration for being "opposed to pensions."

SERIOUS revolution going on in Brazil. The navy has rebelled against the present republican government and is fighting to restore the monarchy that was driven out a few years ago.

CHICAGO papers claim this season has been the driest Illinois has known for twenty years. They say there was little or no rain for 84 days or 12 weeks. In this county we have had several partial rains, but suffered a good deal.

PAPER money of all kinds now in use in the United States amounts to 1,112 millions, so says the treasury department. This means national bank bills, greenbacks, silver and gold certificates and all forms of authorized paper money.

CONGRESS is likely to settle its disagreements by requiring the actual coinage of a fixed amount of silver dollars each month and stop the buying and storing away of silver bullion. This is better than the present law, for the silver bullion may diminish in value, but the coined dollars will not.

WHEAT and wool have steadily gone down in price under the McKinley tariff, and yet republicans are going nearly crazy for fear that a democrasic congress will "disturb the McKinley law." All their cry is "Don't tinker with the tariff," though they themselves have "tinkered" it 26 times, and each time made it worse.

TERRIBLE mine accident near Ishpeming, Mich., last Friday at the Mansfield iron mine. Fifty men were at work in the mine which extends under the Michigamme river, when the timber supports gave way, and those who were in that part of the mine were either crushed or were drowned by the water of the river that rushed into the hole where the cave-in occurred. The bed of the stream below this point was dry for nearly two hours, till the mine was full. The loss of life is 28, and of property, nearly a million.

Court.

Work began at the old stand promptly at 9 Monday morning, with Judge Powers at the bat and Prosecutor Butler on deck. D. D. Metcalf is court room bailiff again and Joseph Link is bailiff for the grand jury. The members of the grand jury were all promptly in their room, and every one had to stick, though Doc. Baird tried hard to get off. He is in charge of Mr. Bachtel's flouring mill at Corunna and his place is hard to fill, but the judge could not see that the law would consider this as an excuse. So, Doc. stays The names of the men who have this important work this term are: Samuel Teeters, S. L. Campbell, T. F. Baird, John H. Baxter, Isaac Sawvel and John H. Merica. Before these men will come the cases of Deeters, who killed two people near Butler, those accused of robbing cars near Garrett, and those up for a similar offense at Butler. There are a number of lesser criminals who will be privileged to look in on the grand jury free of cost, as well as the odds and ends of misdemeanors that are usually brought up from all over the county.

We understand that the damage case against the B. & O. for killing Saunders, at Garrett, has been sent back from the U. S. court, to be tried here, as the amount claimed does not exceed $2,000, as required to get it into the U. S. court.

Business in general has started up briskly. The old case against David Heckathorn is finished and off docket, as he has paid up the costs. The Union Biblical Institute vs Joseph Gardner, note, gets $138.80.

In criminal cases, we find the men who stole goods from the cars at Butler have been cared for. Wm. Greenwood and John Leonard are their names and both plead guilty. Judge Powers gave them a chance to look out over the high walls and view the sand hills at Michigan City for 18 months.

Lew Mason, who stole a bicycle from Teeters & Clark, at Garrett, gets a year. Stealing bicycles will soon become as unpopular as stealing horses.

The grand jury is now wrestling with the other criminals now in jail, so we can say but little as to their chances yet. One of the jury, Pressler, was let off because he had moved out of the state, and S. L. Campbell, of Auburn, put in his stead.

The case between Hendry and the Insurance company, from Angola, comes on to-day, with Judge McClellan on the bench, and may take two or three days, as it is an important one.

Obituary.

Susan Foster Bumpus was Born at Bridgewater, Pa, July 7, 1820 and died in Auburn, Ind., Sept. 29, 1893, aged 73 years, 2 months and 23 days.

She was united in marriage to Russell Bumpus in 1840, in the city of Fort Wayne. They removed to Auburn in 1857, where they made their home till death called them away. Mr. Bumpus died about 14 years ago, and four of their eight children preceded the mother to that better land. Mrs. Bumpus was a woman of the highest Christain character, and of the most sterling womanly qualities, and she leaves a large circle of friends, not only in the church to which she was attached so many years, but will be equally mourned by those outside of it. The funeral was in the First M. E. Church Sunday, October 1, at 3 p. m. The sermon by her pastor, Rev. A. S. Wooton, was very impressive and listened to by a large audience. The interment was in Woodlawn.

The Postal Telegraph.

For the past two weeks the Postal telegraph has been hustling to get a direct line into Auburn from Ft. Wayne. Their only way to get business from that city had been over a leased line running from Antwerp, Ohio, to Ft. Wayne, and to get into the city that way, they had to send from Auburn to Sherwood and then via Antwerp to Ft. Wayne, and from Ft. Wayne it came back onto the main line here in the same circuituous route. Oct. 1, the Postal lease on the line from Antwerp to Ft. Wayne would expire, and as the Western Union had in the meantime got that line, it was plain the lease would not be renewed. Hence, the Postal must either lose its Ft. Wayne business or get a line direct from that city to connect with the main line at Auburn. So the work of setting the poles and running the wires began, as stated, about two weeks ago. A representative of the Postal was put into this place, and poles have been quietly unloaded at the west freight house. The building of the line began at Ft. Wayne, and by Friday last, they had passed New Era, coming this way. That day, another gang began putting down poles here, going south on the flats along East street, and Saturday the two parties met at the Dittmars farm south of town. By six o'clock that evening the wires were connected and then the first message over the new line was sent. It was none too soon, for promptly at midnight, the connection on the Antwerp leased line was cut off, for the lease had expired with the last minute of September. But the Postal now rejoices in a line of its own running direct from Ft. Wayne to Auburn, this giving it its share of business in that city. It also gives Auburn another telegraphic outlet, and makes us a sort of central station in the great Postal system. "All roads lead to Auburn."

Kendallville Fair.

Kendallville had a good week for the fair. The greatest interest seemed to center on the bicycle races on Wednesday. That day they had A. A. Zimmerman, the champion of the world, and with $1,200 given as prizes, there was a lively contest. The winners were: One-mile novice—Christian Byler, of Huntington; time 2:38 4-5. One-mile handicap—Geo. Banker, of Pittsburg; time 2:16. Half-mile open—A. A. Zimmerman, champion of the world; time 1:08. One mile district—G. E. Walling, Kendallville; time 2:45½. Two mile handicap—Marion Black, of Ft. Wayne; time 4:44½. Half mile, boys under 16—Lee Heller, of Fort Wayne; time 1:20. One mile open—A. A. Zimmerman, champion of the world; time 2:27 2-5. Consolation (open to all who did not win any of the foregoing races)—A. D. Kennedy, of Chicago; time 2:39 3-5. The trick riding of Mr. Sid J. Black, of Cleveland, was a great feature of the day. The attendance was fairly good and everything passed off pleasantly.

Tough Chickens Come Home.

Dell Points is back, boarding boarding again at the Hotel de Ralston. The story of his journeyings is not a long one, but full of interest—to Dell. It will be remembered that Sept. 15 he escaped from the jail by squeezing his naked body through the 8 by 10 hole through which food is passed into the room he then occupied. It was the woman's room in the jail, for Points had been put in there to separate him from the other prisoners, the jail being pretty full, and they had been trying to escape by sawing off the bars. After he got out there seemed no clue for a few days, but later Sheriff Ralston heard from his man at different places south of here, both in this county and over in Allen. At last the fellow seemed to be located at his mother's, near Mayeville in Allen county, and Monday evening the Sheriff deputized Henry and John West to go down and capture him if possible. They went to the house where Points' mother, now married to a second husband, lives. Henry knocked at the front door, while John stood ready to go where he was most needed. As soon as Points, who was on the second floor, found out what was up he opened a window and jumped out, but when he reached the ground he found John ready to receive him, and he was soon once more ornamented with handcuffs. He is now in jail and will have to stand his trial for the assault on Thomson near Butler. He seems to be an allaround tough. He was asked how he managed to crawl through so small a hole, and he says he greased his body with soap, and threw his clothes out ahead of him. It is hard to see how he could get throught so small a place even in this way.

It is an old saying, "Money makes the Mare go." We buy for cash; we sell for cash; we make the "mare go," both in buying and selling.

During the present Financial Stringency, money "talks." Our buyers have been in the market the past week, and as the goods come in, we are wonderfully surprised at the bargains our Spot Cash has brought us.

We buy low for cash, we sell low for cash. From all over this great county of DeKalb people are coming for our great bargains.

The people know a good thing when they see it. They find all the good things in our stock.

J. W. Moulton, of Nettawaukee, Kansas, is away ahead now, having paid his subscription to the Old Reliable COURIER up into '96. We hope he may live and enjoy life way beyond that.

Obe Leas, of Waterloo, was here Tuesday. He thinks a good deal of wheat has been sowed and some is up nicely, bur there is still a part to be put in, as the extremely dry weather made many wait for rain.

W. H. Mader has a memory that is worth hundreds of dollars to a printer if it could only be divided among at least 500 subscribers. He remembers the very day on which his paper falls due, and then pays it.

Walter Hartman returned to Ann Arbor Monday to resume his studies in the law department of the University. Miss Julia Hodge went there also the same day, as she is beginning a course in the literary department.

Mrs. Cal VanAuken is no better to say the least, but seems to be getting worse. Monday there was a consultation of physicians, and the conclusion they seemed to reach, was that her case was hopeless or nearly so.

Mrs. Mary W. Mott widow of the late Judge E. B. Mott, died Wednesday morning, Oct. 4, at ten minutes before seven, at her home north of Auburn, aged 87 years and 8 months. She had been lying quite low for some time. She was one of the most prominent and most widely known and respected of the early citizens of Auburn. An obituary will appear next week.

The road from town east to the Eckhart factory has been nicely graveled, and teams have run over the new gravel till it is hard and nice. This is the right way to do. The gravel was furnby the town board, and the farmers living out that way hauled it free of expense to the public. A little more of such public spirit would help several muddy roads in DeKalb county.

K. A. Johnson, of Corunna, was in Friday on some business for B. B. Dearborn. Mr. Dearborn has completely lost his sight and besides this he hears with difficulty. We are sorry to hear of these misfortunes to an old friend, for he has always been a busy man, and the confinement and inconvenience of such a condition must be hard to bear. But in all his troubles he never forgets to to pay for his favorite paper, the COURIER, before it is due.

Cook Ford and wife, and Mrs. Ford's parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Lewis, returned from the fair last Saturday. They all enjoyed it greatly. Uncle George is a gunsmith, and in his day was accounted a skilled one, but he found the big Krupp guns and Uncle Sam's monster shooting irons rather ahead of his art. But he examined them all just the same. We are pleased to learn that the old couple got back all right and stood the wearing trip nearly as well at the younger people.

Judge McClellan will occupy the bench as judge in a very important case this week, beginning Thursday morning. It is the case of L. A. Hendry, of Angola, against the insurance company, to collect the insurance money on his farm house that was burned. He had sold the property and the purchaser took out a fire policy on the house, payable to Mr. Hendry in case of loss. This is often done to secure a payment on property. But when the property burned the company refused to pay the loss, claiming that Hendry burned it down. It will be a hot fight probably Jacob Bishop, of Butler township, was in town Friday. He has good crops this year in spite of the poor season, but insists he makes it pay better to raise stock than grain. We believe he is right, at least it seems to have been that way for a few years past.

The changes in the rooms of the First National Bank that we spoke of recently are now under way. The brick wall next to the stairway has been removed, and the stairs taken out, and workmen are making the contemplated changes as fast as the difficult character of the work will allow.

When will the town authorities tackle that little mud puddle by the Farmers Bank? People have been compelled to jump it since the crossing was first built. It is where more people cross than any other, and on a rainy day, the view reminds one of a flock of sheep jumping a brook one after the other.

The attempted burglary at Baker's store at Concord has no new developments. The sheriff is pretty well convinced as to the guilty parties, but has no proof as yet. It appears that the man that Baker shot had on an overcoat he had stolen, and when shot, jerked the coat off and ran and was helped into a buggy, and so escaped. He evidently got a part of the charge of shot.

Albion New Era—Whenever a death is announced in the newspapers of Noble county, there is a firm in the south part of the state that gets out a sample memorial card and mails it to the family of the deceased. Recently the New Era announced the death of Hamilton Fish, president Grant's secretary of state, and a few days ago a memorial card was received at the post office, asking the post master to deliver it to the family of Hamilton Fish.

Judge McClellan finds his business so great that he is obliged to have the assistance of a secretary, and will hereafter be relieved from much hard routine work that he has usually done himself. This will give him more time on the study and preparation of cases. He is already engaged in several of the criminal cases that are to come up this term, as well as in the prosecution of several cases against Deeters for civil damages. The gentleman who becomes his private secretary is John H. Miller, of Toledo, who has been fully educated in work in this line.

L. J. Miller, the leading wheat buyer of DeKalb county, says he averaged taking in a car load of wheat a day last week, though people were then busy seeding, and the price was only about 60 cents. He says Cal. Husselman has given him a statement of the cost and the receipts on his wheat crop, which shows that even at the recent low prices, the crop netted about $50. So Mr. Miller figures that a good crop pays better at a low price than a poor one at a comparatively higher price. There is no doubt but wheat is lower than it should be, but it is also pretty plain that the profits of a crop depend largely on the kind of yield we can get from an acre.

Light rains last Saturday helped the wheat that was sowed. Monday night a steady warm rain set in again and kept it up for some time.

The new Postal line to Ft. Wayne starts out with one wire, but there are arms, etc., on the poles for a number of other wires, which we suppose will be put on as needed.

Earl Saxton is now clerking in Hoff's grocery, helping Charley in Frank's absence. Earl is a reliable young man and has had experience of several years in the grocery of Hebel Brothers.

The rains this week will help the hard ground a little, and perhaps those who could not plow will be able to do so now and get their last fields of wheat sowed. Many fields are coming up in fine shape.

A crowd of horsemen attending the Cook & Whitby's circus at Louisville recently, declared the English Derby races that they give, the most exciting they ever saw, being absolutely true to life—something never attempted before under canvas.

Why not have a man to watch the water holes on the main streets? If these puddles could be drained promptly so the gravel would not get soft and so cut up easily, we might prevent some mud holes and ruts. It would pay to try awhile, anyway.

In spite of the efforts of our local newspapers to discredit the County's financial standing, orders are selling again at par, and one party came into the county and wanted to get $10,000 to $15,000 of them, and would have given par or even a premium to get the right amount.

Our people were greatly surprised this week to learn that J. E. Ensley had got into financial difficulty, as it was supposed he was one of the most careful business men we have. But it seems that he got into debt in some way, and has given a mortgage on his property to secure a part of it. As nearly as we can learn the total of his indebtedness runs up to $7,000 or more. How it all happened we cannot say, and hope it may turn out better than reported.

Among the interesting features of Harper's Bazar, published September 23d, will be an illustrated article on "Italian Lace and Lace-makers," by the Countess Cora Slocumb di Brazza. This lady has taken great interest in the Italian exhibit at the World's Fair. A bright sketch, entitled "The American Husband," by Mrs. Oliver Bell Bunce; "The Worker or the Woman," by Helen Watterson; and "The Talk-Habit," by Anne H. Wharton, will add interest to this number, which will also contain a review of "The Prince of India," by Prof. Edwin A. Grosvenor, of Amherst College.

Queer Runaway.

Tuesday forenoon Gene Trout traded horses with two young men named Ferguson, sons of J. L. Ferguson, north of town, and they hitched their horse up to their covered buggy and started from the livery stable around the south side of the public square. In some way the horse got frightened and started to run and this threw the driver out taking the lines with him. The one in the buggy, wisely, no doubt, kept his seat. The horse ran west to the Swineford House corner, then north along Main street, then east along Seventh, "and thence south to the place of beginning," as lot descriptions have it, for the horse wanted to get back into the barn. Seeing he might do some damage, the door was closed against him, and he ran square against the hay scales a little beyond. This broke the shafts and threw the horse down, and he was caught and the unwilling occupant of the carriage jumped out. No great damage was done except to the buggy shafts. It was a wild ride around the square and turned out pretty fortunately.

Here's richness! The St. Louis papers have begun speaking of that town as "the electric city!"

General Wallace is in a great streak of luck. The London critics don't like his "Prince of India." That shows that it is not a dull book.

An Ashland (Ky.) saloon-keeper swallowed a live snake while drinking water. He will be used by the colonels hereafter as a horrible example.

When a serious man jokes his effort is quickly appreciated, but a funny man has to fight before people will believe anything he says is in earnest.

Under the accepted provisions of the social code "Baby Ruth" is now Miss Cleveland. This advanced dignity is due to the arrival of the fourth member of the distinguished household.

We notice on the list of patents lately issued one for "an outdoor mosquito cap." Probably few intelligent foreigners are aware that there are mosquitos in America big enough to wear caps.

"Every woman loves one man once in her life, and she never loves twice."—Paul Bourget. This Frenchman talks nonsense. He does not seem to be familiar with the genius of the women of his country, let alone that of those of other countries.

Warner, the big corset manufacturer of Connecticut, found it necessary to discharge several hundred of his women employes and provided board for them until such time as he should again require their services. This is another example of what helps make both the times and the world better.

Let there be an end of the gibes and sneers at the markmanship of the Chicago police. Officer Dabel killed a mad dog at the first shot Monday. It is true that the dog was tied and that Marksman Dabel incidentally shot himself while shooting the dog; but perfection cannot be looked for at once.

President Harper, of the Chicago University, finds that the pay of the average college professor is less than $1,500 a year. Well, this is a great deal more than the average man gets, and if the average professor is not satisfied he must make himself more than average. This is the good old way in all lines of business of increasing one's salary.

A Danville (Ky.) judge has instructed the grand jury to indict any man or woman in his bailiwick proven guilty of playing progressive euchre for prizes. It will be noticed that the blue-grass luminary carefully avoids any mention of poker or old sledge in his instructions. Discrimination may be invidious, but not to discriminate in Kentucky is worse—it's dangerous.

Emperor William says that Lorraine shall be always German, for "God and the German sword will protect it." Better leave God out. He does not deal in slaughter. But if he protects, whence the necessity of the sword of young William? Long ago Cromwell uttered the tremendous blasphemy: "Put your trust in Providence, but keep your powder dry." William is an equal blasphemer with old English Oliver. He is a little too fresh for this age.

Humor, like heroism, is found in the most unexpected places, even in the agony column of one's daily paper. Here is a delightful example: "My dear and faithful friend of twenty years, I cannot think we are never to meet again. Pray, pray, send your present address. I believe I am wrong in your name, as London letter was returned." Memory is notoriously untrustworthy, but to be "wrong in the name" of a friend of twenty years' standing is surely a little unusual.

A police inspector says that the work of the Indiana train robbers shows inexperience. That may be. Inasmuch as the robbers contrived to make off with all the money they could find, however, this information seems to be far more interesting than important. For once the detectives will be deprived of the well-worn expedient of claiming that the men from whom the money was robbed did the robbing. The express messenger would not have had to use dynamite to open a car he already occupied.

Some of the Canadian newspapers are raising a mighty hullaballoo because the United States Treasury Department has seen fit to stringently enforce the immigration laws. This action has interfered with that peculiar Canadian industry, the smuggling of Chinese and other undesirable immigrants over the border. The Dominion Government itself has been deriving revenue from the tax on Chinese, and therefore the howl has an official note in it. It is to be hoped that the customs officials charged with the duty of turning back proscribed immigrants at the Canadian border will not relax their vigilance for a moment. Canada should not be allowed to make money out of the traffic at our expense. If she loads up with undesirable foreigners let her keep them.

It is as gratifying as it is remarkable to note that train robbers invariably choose for their attacks trains that have on board very little express matter. The train just ahead or just behind the one that is robbed carries the wealth of Ormus and of Ind, but the obtuse bandits always grunt and sweat over safes containing nothing but mortgages, protested drafts, magazine poetry, and other non-negotiable paper. It must be disgusting for a train robber who has lain out in a swamp all night, at the risk of catching his death of cold, to open a package marked "value $10,000" and find that it contains a hoosier dialect poem or an address to be delivered at one of the world's congresses. Such, however, is the invariable luck of the train robber—according to the express company officials, who, of course, always tell the exact truth—and it is remarkable that the bandits do not forsake so unremunerative an occupation and go to work on the railroad.

Heroic measures will have to be taken to check the epidemic of train robbing which is sweeping over this country. The success of organized gangs of desperadoes in the thinly settled territory west of the Missouri River has evidently emboldened smaller rascals, and it is to be feared that all the petty thieves in the country will be trying their hands at holding up trains unless they are promptly and vigorously dealt with. The robbery of the Lake Shore express at Kendallville shows that the epidemic is spreading eastward. The railroad and express companies should take measures to meet the situation. If it is necessary to place armed guards on every train the question of expense should not be considered. The bandits are becoming bolder every day, and the fact that they usually escape injury or arrest has rendered them more reckless. Nothing but the knowledge that they will meet armed resistance will serve to quench their ardor. Half a dozen men armed with sawed-off shotguns on every express car would soon make train robbing unfashionable.

One of the most distinct impressions many will bring back from their travels is the discomfort they had to endure from the habit some people have of forcing a car window open and admitting a strong draft with the inevitable accompaniment of dust and cinders. The liking some travelers have for an open car window amounts almost to a lunacy and the pugnacity with which they will assert their supposed rights is often little less than brutal. The real inconvenience of an open car window is not felt by the person sitting beside it, but by those in the seat behind. They have to endure the draft and the smoke and cinders as best they can, while the one who opens the window gets all the benefit in the way of fresh air and an unobstructed view of the passing landscape. The only way to remedy the matter probably is for the railroads to provide special cars for those who want to breathe the air of heaven unobstructed only by dirt and cinders. Smoking cars are provided, and why should there not be cars set apart and labeled "for open-window fiends?"

The statistics of the number of children in Sunday schools in the various countries of the world, reported to the International Sunday School Convention recently in session in St. Louis, will not be found gratifying to some neighborhoods. Massachusetts, for instance, will be surprised at the comparatively poor showing it made. There are 511,991 children of school age in that State, but 274,398 of them, or 55.55 per cent., do not attend evangelical Sunday schools. So considerably more than half of the children of Massachusetts do not come under the influence of the evangelical churches. An effort will be made to explain this on the ground of the large percentage of the foreign born and of those born of foreign parentage in the population of the State. This element of the population amounts to 57.33 in Massachusetts, but in Rhode Island it is 60.19 per cent. In the latter State, however, the percentage of school age children not in evangelical Sunday schools is 41.32, or 14.23 per cent. less than in Massachusetts. The tendency of the population to large cities where children leave Sunday school at an earlier age than in the country and the slackening up of efforts on the part of the churches are probably the real reasons for the decrease in Massachusetts.

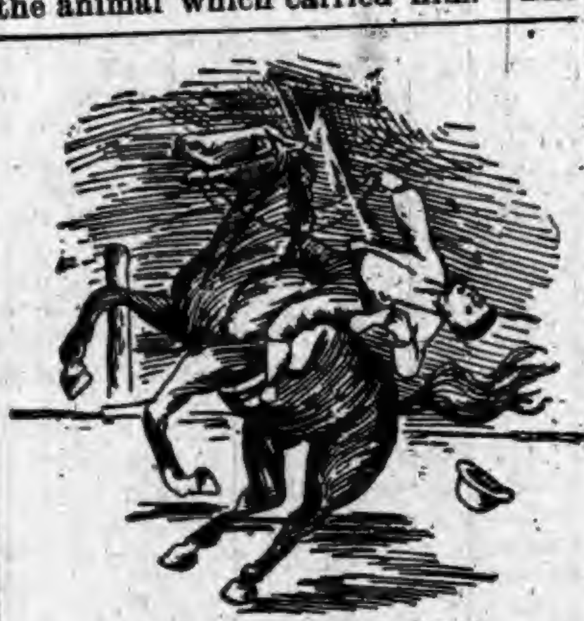
MANY VICTIMS OF LIGHTNING'S DEADLY BOLTS.

Over Two Hundred a Year Killed in This Country—Examples of Fatalities—One Found to Have Extraordinary Tracings on His Body.

Work of Deadly Fluid.

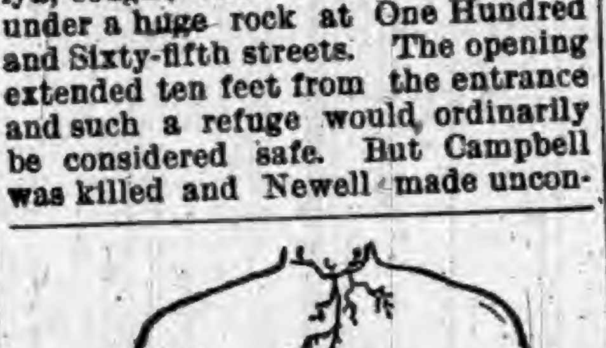
Last year over 200 persons were killed by lightning in the United States alone, and it is believed the electric bolt is yearly responsible for more than 1,000 deaths throughout the earth. From 1885 to 1892 2,270 were killed by it in Russia and Europe. During the same period 1,700 were destroyed in Austria. Deaths from this cause are also numerous in France.

During a recent wide-spread storm in this country, it was demonstrated that lightning seeks its victims pretty much everywhere, even where precaution is taken to avoid its deadly flashes. In Gloversville, N. Y., it smote a young horseman, named Fred Peek, instantly killing him and the animal which carried him. The storm had ceased, and the fatal stroke came from an almost clear sky—an extraordinary occurrence.

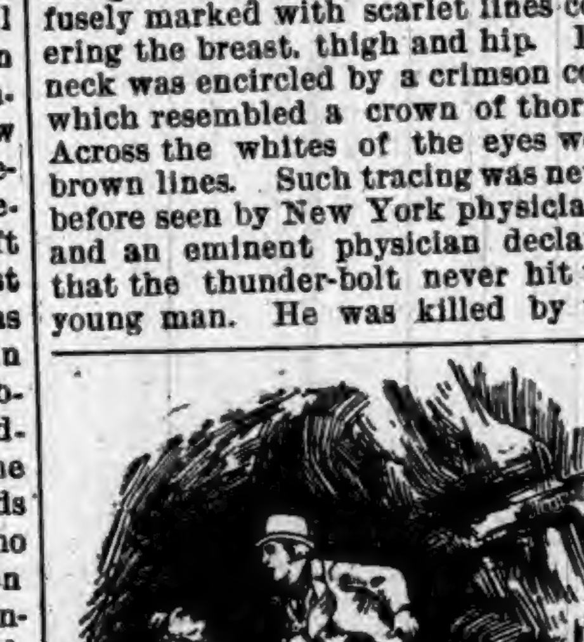


KILLED ON HORSEBACK.

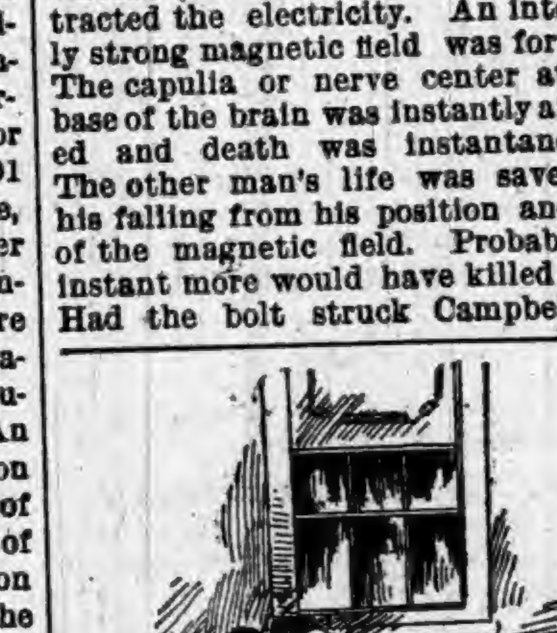
In New York City, Martin Campbell and Edward B. Newell, of Brooklyn, sought shelter from the storm under a huge rock at One Hundred and Sixty-fifth streets. The opening extended ten feet from the entrance and such a refuge would ordinarily be considered safe. But Campbell was killed and Newell made unconscious by a bolt. On examining Campbell's body it was found profusely marked with scarlet lines covering the breast, thigh and hip. His neck was encircled by a crimson cord which resembled a crown of thorns. Across the whites of the eyes were brown lines. Such tracing was never before seen by New York physicians, and an eminent physician declared that the thunder-bolt never hit the young man. He was killed by the intense magnetic field it created. These rocks were full of iron and attracted the electricity. An intensely strong magnetic field was formed. The capulia or nerve center at the base of the brain was instantly affected and death was instantaneous. The other man's life was saved by his falling from his position and out of the magnetic field. Probably an instant more would have killed him. Had the bolt struck Campbell he would have been charred beyond recognition.



LIGHTNING MARKS ON CAMPBELL'S BREAST.

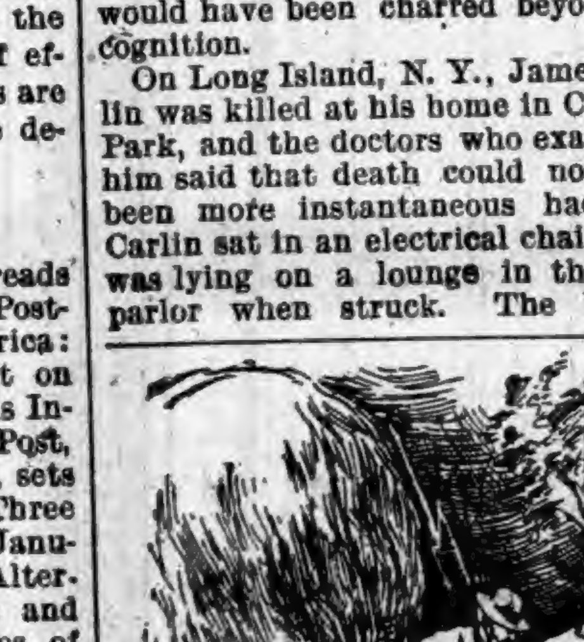


THE CURRENT FOUND THEM IN A CAVE.

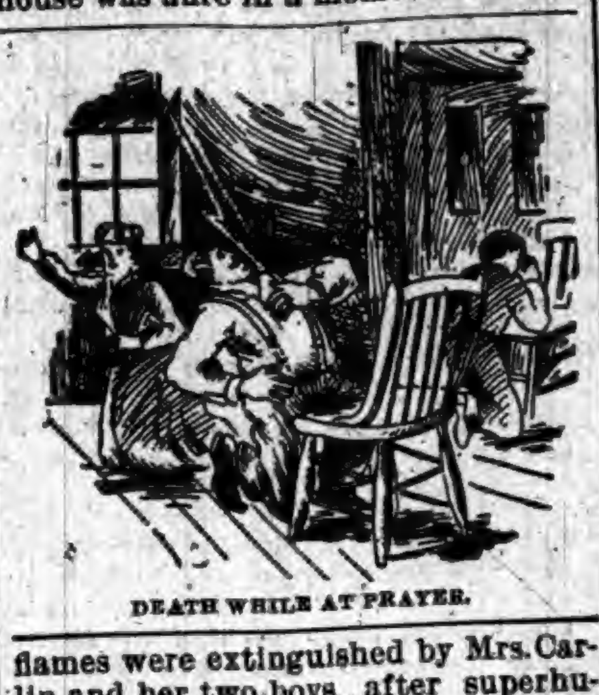


FATAL AS THE ELECTRIC CHAIR.

On Long Island, N. Y., James Carlin was killed at his home in Chester Park, and the doctors who examined him said that death could not have been more instantaneous had Mr. Carlin sat in an electrical chair. He was lying on a lounge in the back parlor when struck. The lounge stood next to a window which was closed. Close to it was a conductor from the roof. The lightning was carried down this, tore its way through scattering lath and plaster, ran through Mr. Carlin from head to foot, flew around the room, swept through the kitchen by an open door, and thence passed through another open door to the yard, where it buried itself in the ground, after leaving a burned track through the house. The house was afire in a moment, but the flames were extinguished by Mrs. Carlin and her two boys after superhuman work. They were horror stricken when they discovered Mr. Carlin was killed. His body was black where the lightning passed across him. His wife was always afraid of lightning. She shut every window when the storm broke, and sat in fear and trembling, as was her custom on such occasions. Her husband was absolutely fearless of lightning. The conductor pipe stopped three feet from the ground. Had it been carried to the surface it would not have entered the house and the killing would not have taken place.



KILLED IN THE HAYFIELD.



DEATH WHILE AT PRAYER.

In Russia, in Northern New York, Edward Fletcher, a farmer, while loading hay was instantly killed. The steel tines of the pitchfork attracted the lightning, which, after passing through Mr. Fletcher, shocked his son, who was assisting him. The horses ran away and the hay took fire and was consumed. Neither horses nor wagon bore marks of the bolt.

In Nebraska a family named Carney shut themselves up in a room on the approach of the storm, and when it broke the family were kneeling in prayer. While in this attitude the head of the family was killed by the fiery fluid, while those about him escaped with slight injuries.

WAS A WOMAN OF BUSINESS.

A Nebraska Widow Who Picked a Husband and Married Him in Short Order.

We were camped alongside of an emigrant train in Nebraska, says a writer in the Louisville Commercial, and just after supper a woman about 40 years of age, who was smoking a pipe, came over to our fire and sized the crowd up, and said:

"I've got sunthin' to say. I'm a plain-spoken woman. When I've got a thing on my mind, I don't beat around the bush."

We looked at her with curiosity and surprise, and she leaned against the wheel of a wagon and continued;

"I've been a widder for three years. Over thar I've got a span of mewls, a good hoss, a new wagon filled with housekeepin' stuff, and I kin rake up about $80 in cash. I cum along with the party to take up a claim. I'm good-tempered, healthy and can swing an axe or hold a plow with most anybody. As I said, I'm a plain-spoken woman. If there's a critter among you who wants to get married, let him stand up while I take a look at him."

The eleven of us promptly stood up.

"Git into line," she continued, with a wave of her hand. "I hain't after beauty or eddecashun, but I can't take up with a fellow who'd skeer a wolf to death."

She passed down the line and then returned half way and said to a middle-aged man named Remington:

"You'll do, I reckon. There's a preacher in camp, and 'twon't take fifteen minutes to settle things. All of you as want to see the marrying come on."

We followed the couple, who were made man and wife inside of twenty minutes, and next morning as we passed the wagon on the road the woman looked out and bowed and said:

"Sorry for the other ten of ye, but perhaps you'll meet up with the other train soon and strike luck."

Practical French.

Two French teachers were discussing matters relative to their profession.

"Do your pupils pay up regularly on the first of each month?" asked one.

"No, they do not. I often have to wait for weeks before I get my pay, and sometimes I don't get it at all. You can't well dun the parents for the money."

"Why don't you do as I do? I always get my money regularly."

"How do you manage it?"

"It is very simple. On the first day of the month, if money for lessons doesn't come, I give the following sentences to translate and write out at home: 'I have no money.' 'The month is up.' 'Hast thou any money?' 'I need money very much.' 'Why hast thou not brought the money this morning?' 'Did thy father not give thee any money?' The next morning the money usually comes."—Youth's Journal.

Antiquarian Treasures.

Recent excavations near Bologna have unearthed ancient tombs containing many pottery vases and a wealth of bronzes—pins, knives, razors, horse bits, buckets, and boxes. The most uncommon find is a small chariot of bronze, which has been mounted in the museum of Bologna. In the Etruscan tumulus of Pietrera other excavators have found stores of cups called buccheri, one of which has zones of animals stamped on its sides. Some are covered with gold leaf. Parts of two exquisite gold bracelets with pendants of human heads and figures in embossed gold leaf are in this find, together with a necklace of seventy hollow beads, ribbed, and with thirty gold pendants in the shape of busts of women with breast plates attached. These and other objects will be placed in the museum at Florence.

Fish Killed by Lightning.

A peculiar result of lightning was noticed near Dijon, in France, after a severe thunder storm. A bolt struck a small pond just outside the city and it was discovered that the electric shock had killed all the fish in the pond, about 1,000 in number.

The Population of the Earth.

In an appendix to "Petermann's Mittheilungen," just issued, there are complete statistics of the population of the earth, in which a table of the great cities (with more than 100,000 inhabitants) is of great interest. Of such cities England has thirty, Germany twenty-four, France and Russia each twelve, Italy ten, Austria-Hungary six, Spain five, Belgium, the Scandinavian States, Roumania and the Balkan Islands each four, the Netherlands three, Portugal two; the total in Europe being 116 great cities. Asia has 105, China having fifty-three and British India thirty. In Africa there are seven, in America forty, of which the United States have twenty-six, South America nine. Australia has only two large cities.

A Rival to the Shetland Pony.

There is a rival in the Southern marts to the Shetland pony, which the Southern Cultivator explains as an outcome of the war and called creole. He is a miniature horse, and originated during and since the war in the prairies along the coast from Mobile to the western limit of Louisiana. Many planters during the war allowed their thoroughbred mares to escape, and, breeding in the wild state with the natives, the size has gradually diminished until many of them do not reach thirteen hands, and few go over that.

The good blood in them shows in their symmetry, and their better style and action commend them to a boy. They are too mettlesome for a child of four or five years, but for a girl from seven when they fill the bill. For driving purposes they are not as good as the Shetland, as the infusion of thoroughbred blood makes them impatient of so ignoble work. Their gait is a long gallop.

It Was All a Mistake.

"Yes," said the red-eyed man, "it is true that I was in Texas, but it was all through a mistake."

"Tell us about it."

"Why, I thought I had discovered a lead mine, and was taking from twenty to thirty pounds of pure lead a day with just a ditching shovel. Come to investigate and I had opened up an old graveyard where a lot of old-timers who had died with their boots on were buried. They arrested me for grave robbing."

Ingenious Ants.

The green ants of Australia make nests by bending leaves together and uniting them with a kind of natural glue. Cook saw hundreds at a time on one leaf drawing it to the ground, while an equal number waited to receive hold, and fasten it.

MISS MAGGIE JACKSON, of Bowbreak, St. Landry Parish, La., says: "I was lying sick for some time with female complaints, and all the medicine my friends gave me did me no good. Death was approaching; all my friends had given me up to die. I heard of your wonderful medicine, and I bought two bottles of it, and before I had taken the last, I got entirely well. I am still enjoying good health, and expect to praise your medicine every where I go."

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Read the Label. Send for Book.

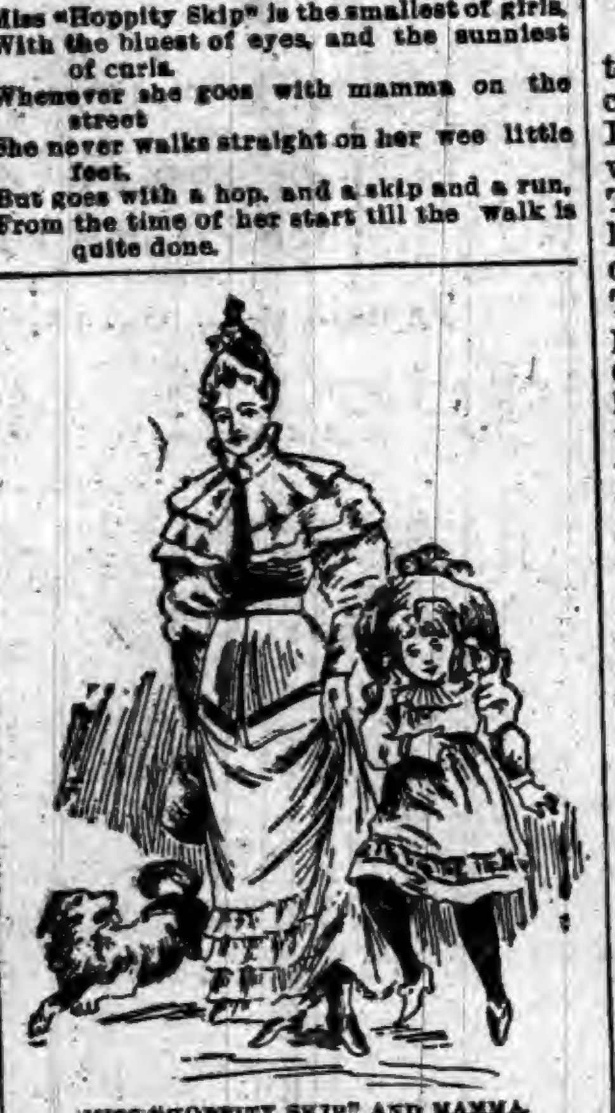
Quaint Sayings and Cute Doings of the Little Folks Everywhere, Gathered and Printed Here for All Other Little Ones to Read.

Miss "Hoppity Skip."

Miss "Hoppity Skip" is the smallest of girls,
With the bluest of eyes, and the sunniest of curls.
Whenever she goes with mamma on the street
She never walks straight on her wee little feet,
But goes with a hop, and a skip and a run,
From the time of her start till the walk is quite done.



MISS "HOPPITY SKIP" AND MAMMA.

Miss "Hoppity Skip" has a big doll from France,
And she and Miss Dolly love dearly to dance
In the garden together, where each saucy breeze
Drives the leaves in a hurry quite off from the trees
To join in the dance with Miss "Hop-Skip" and Dolly,
While Doggie barks loudly and thinks it "real jolly."

Miss "Hoppity Skip" is a comfort to me,
For no matter, my dears, what the weather may be,
You'll always find sunbeams on her little face;
And never a sign of a cloud can you trace
In the sunny blue eyes which reflect from her heart
The brightness of which her wee self is a part.
And I love her, I love her, this smallest of girls,
With the bluest of eyes and the sunniest of curls,
Who hoppity skips in my heart all the day,
And drives all my worries and troubles away.

The Broken Pane.

Harry Bently was playing in front of Mr. Moss' door, when he unfortunately threw a stone and broke a large window. Looking with dismay at the shattered pane, he exclaimed in terror, "O! what shall I do? Papa will punish me and Mr. Moss will probably put me in jail."

Then a sudden thought arose: "Perhaps he could run away and never be blamed for the accident," and he was about to act upon this thought when another and better one presented itself. "Papa always tells me to be honest, and that would not be honest. Some one else would be blamed, and that would be very unfair. O dear, how dreadful it is!" and with that Harry rushed up to the neighbor's stoop and gave the bell so violent a pull that the maid of the kitchen hurried out to see what was the matter.

"Is Mr. Moss at home?" asked Harry looking flushed and guilty.

"Yes, and he is that!" answered Bridget, leading the boy into her master's presence, and then returning to her work. "O Mr. Moss," cried poor Harry, "I have broken one of your front windows. Please don't tell my father, and I will work and pay for it!"

Mr. Moss was a kind man and saw at once that the boy before him had conquered a strong temptation in confessing himself to be the author of the mischief; therefore he laid a soothing hand upon his head and said: "Don't be alarmed, Harry, my boy, but tell me how the accident occurred."

"I—just—threw—a—stone—and—it—hit—the—window—and—I—did not—mean—to," sobbed the frightened child.

"I believe you, my boy. Don't cry, you need not pay for the window. I am pleased to know that my small neighbor, whom I have scarcely ever noticed, is so honest. I think the accident may make us friends."

Harry, smiling through his tears, said once more: "But I want to pay for the window, Mr. Moss. Papa always expects me to pay him when I carelessly break anything of his, and he will expect me to pay you."

"Well, my little man, the pane of glass is worth a dollar, including the setting, and if you will come down to my store for four afternoons this week, after school is over, I will allow you 25 cents each time for running errands for me. It is a busy week, and I shall be glad of the help."

"I shall be only too happy if papa is willing," replied the relieved boy.

After a little further conversation Harry returned to his home and obtained the ready consent of his papa to work out the debt, which he did.

Harry's parents were poor, but Mr. Moss had ample means. In his kind heart the gentleman resolved to befriend his noble little neighbor all in his power.

Therefore, from Harry's honesty springs forth the most unexpected fruit. A new suit of clothes came first, and after this, numberless gifts such as the boy and his parents could both appreciate and enjoy, and Harry realized that right-doing brings a rich reward.

We may not always reap a reward in this world's goods for honesty and truthfulness, but we shall gain the Lord's blessing. We can never gain anything by wrong-doing, for the "face of the Lord is against them that do evil." Therefore, children, be like Harry, honest and truthful even when it requires great bravery to be so.—Christian Intelligencer.

Two Swedish Babies.

Two Swedish peasant women attracted considerable attention recently at the immigrants' bureau at Ellis Island by the aboriginal way in which they carried their babies. The little ones were tucked in a leather bag suspended from the backs of the mothers from shoulder straps. The babies would have looked like papooses if they had been a little darker. Peasant mothers of Sweden have so much hard work to do afield that they have to take their babies with them. To have their hands free they must put their infant burdens on their backs. Larger bags are used for twins. When the two hardy mothers get out into the West they may find life easier than they did in Sweden, and when they have American babies doubtless they will be able to carry them in the American way.

Why Hal Was Crying.

Hal, who had gone away alone upon a visit, was surprised after he had gone to bed by an aunt who found him crying bitterly. "What's the matter?" she inquired. "You aren't homesick are you?" "No," he sobbed, looking up at her through his tears, "only I was thinking how much they must be missing me at home."—New York Times.

What Willie Thought.

A thunderstorm came up very suddenly, accompanied by a high wind. When the black clouds rolled over the sun and it began to grow dark six-year-old Willie sagely remarked to his mother, "The wind blowed the sun out."

Rapid Breathing as a Remedy.

About fifteen years ago Maj. Gen. Drayson of the British Army often suffered, especially at night, from a severe pain in the region of the heart. He believed he was doomed to die soon of heart disease. About that time certain of his experiences in the mountains of India led him to think that his heart pain might be due to insufficient oxygenation of the blood. He therefore tried to relieve it by breathing rapidly—at the rate of about forty breaths a minute. In a few seconds the pain ceased, and did not return that night.

After that he says he always resorted to the same expedient, and invariably with success. As time went on the pain became not only less frequent but less severe, and now if there is the slightest indication of it rapid breathing prevents its arrival at maturity.

He therefore brings forward many instances in support of his belief that some of the advantages of moderate exercise are to be gained by simply breathing rapidly. Rapid breathing is an effect of exercise, and this is beneficial because the rapid breathing gives the blood plenty of oxygen.

Invalids or others who cannot take exercise can obtain some of its good effect by deliberately passing much pure air through the lungs. Rapid breathing is particularly helpful in cases of sleeplessness and restlessness.

The air must of course be pure, else rapid breathing can have no good effects. Hundreds of thousands attribute disease to themselves when nothing is wrong except their habit of breathing air impure from tobacco smoke, gas burning or simply from a lack of ventilation.

Impure air makes impure blood and impure flesh. Thus those who consume such air fall quickly into and before disease. They cannot endure an open window or door, because they feel cold, this sense of coldness being in many cases simply a symptom that the blood has been vitiated by the breathing of poisonous air.

To breathe air laden with human exhalations is not a whit more sensible, as Gen. Drayson observes, than to drink liquid sewage for a beverage.—Youth's Companion.

What She Had to Do.

A man and woman who are married went up to a Lake George hotel a week or two ago for a little outing. They found things rather dull, and after a week of it the man told his wife that he had been called back on business, but that she would have to stay until the end of the three weeks planned for the trip. She protested that she would be lonely and all that, but the man was obdurate, and the result was that she stayed. An arrangement was made, however, that she should telegraph to him if it got too stupid, and he would wire back whether or not she could come home.

The man came home and the woman moped. She stood it for three days and then, when a rain-storm came on and everything was so dull and miserable that she could stand it no longer, she telegraphed to the man:

"It's raining. What shall I do?"

He had been having a very lively time for those three days. He was perfectly satisfied to have his wife stay at Lake George for the remainder of the alloted time. So he went to the telegraph office and wired her this heartless message:

"Steal an umbrella if you haven't got one."

There is talk of a bill of separation in that family.

Searching for Treasure.

Recently some old and musty documents were found in the City of Mexico, by which it was learned that treasure consisting of jewels and gold coin, amounting in value to $2,000,000, is buried in the city. The documents state that the wealth was secreted by order of Emperor Maximilian. The discovery of these documents produced a sensation among those who were permitted to share the secret, and preparations were at once made for unearthing the treasure.

Burns.

A piece of cold charcoal laid upon a burn is said to instantly subdue the pain.

A Matter of Health.

Housekeepers faintly realize the danger of an indiscriminate use of the numerous baking powders nowadays found upon every hand, and which are urged upon consumers with such persistency by peddlers and many grocers on account of the big profits made in their sale. Most of these powders are made from sharp and caustic acids and alkalies which burn and inflame the alimentary organs and cause indigestion, heartburn, diarrhoeal diseases, etc. Sulphuric acid, caustic potash, burnt alum, all are used as gas-producing agents in such baking powders. Most housekeepers are aware of the painful effects produced when these chemicals are applied to the external flesh. How much more acute must be their action upon the delicate internal membranes! Yet unscrupulous manufacturers do not hesitate to use them, because they make a very low-cost powder, nor to urge the use of their powders so made, by all kinds of alluring advertisements and false representations. All the low-priced or so-called cheap baking powders, and all powders sold with a gift or prize, belong to this class.

Baking powders made from chemically pure cream of tartar and bi-carbonate of soda are among the most useful of modern culinary devices. They not only make the preparation of finer and more delicious cookery possible, but they have added to the digestibility and wholesomeness of our food. But baking powders must be composed of such pure and wholesome ingredients or they must be tabooed entirely.

Dr. Edson, Commissioner of Health of New York, in an article in the "Doctor of Hygiene," indicates that the advantages of a good baking powder and the exemption from the dangers of bad ones in which the harsh and caustic chemicals are used, are to be secured by the use of Royal Baking Powder exclusively, and he recommends this to all consumers. "The Royal," he says, "contains nothing but cream of tartar and soda refined to a chemical purity, which when combined under the influence of heat and moisture produce pure carbonic, or leavening, gas. The two materials used, cream of tartar and soda, are perfectly harmless even when eaten, but in this preparation they are combined in exact compensating weights, so that when chemical action begins between them in the dough they practically disappear, the substance of both having been taken to form carbonic acid gas." Hence it is, he says, that the Royal Baking Powder is the most perfect of all conceivable agents for leavening purposes.

It seems almost incredible that any manufacturer or dealer should urge the sale of baking powders containing injurious chemicals in place of those of a well-known, pure, and wholesome character, simply for the sake of a few cents a pound greater profit; but since they do, a few words of warning seem to be necessary.

A Substitute for Leather.

Leather possesses such excellent qualities for the many purposes to which it is put, that it would seem idle to seek a substitute. Nevertheless, there are many persons who, while they find that leather serves as an effectual protective covering for the foot, and also that it is often obstinate in adapting itself to the requirements of individual feet or to the more or less physical abnormalities to which so many are subject. In such cases, if comfort is to be expected, only the most suple and yielding quality should be worn. At the same time, of course, it should be waterproof and durable. These qualities, so far as we have been able to judge, belong in a satifactory degree to an interesting and new material called "flexus fibra." It appears to be a flax-derived material, suitably prepared and oiled, so that to all appearances it is leather. It is particularly supple and flexible and takes a polish equally well with the best kind of calf.

A Paper to Prevent Forged Documents.

It is very desirable that dishonest persons be prevented from duplicating certificates of stock, bonds, drafts, and such valuable documents; and many devices have been employed for this purpose. A new process has just been introduced in making a paper which will at least be difficult to imitate successfully. Ink is applied to a lithographic stone, and another similar stone is placed on its face and rubbed together until the ink is so distributed that a variegated design is produced. When the ink is dry, the design is transferred to paper after the usual manner in lithographic printing. Of course, any color may be selected for the ink. It is manifest also, that the design thus cheaply produced can be varied indefinitely until a pleasing or effective one is obtained. A counterfeit is detected at once when compared with a sample of the genuine paper.

Iron Paper.

In the great exhibition of 1851 a specimen of iron paper was exhibited. Immediately a lively competition ensued among ironmasters as to the thinness to which cold iron could be rolled.

One ironmaster rolled sheets the average thickness of which was the 1-1800th part of an inch. In other words, 1,800 sheets of this iron pilled one upon the other would only measure one inch in thickness.

The wonderful fineness of this work may be more readily understood when it is remembered that 1,200 sheets of thinnest tissue paper measure a fraction over an inch.

These wonderful iron sheets were perfectly smooth and easy to write upon, notwithstanding the fact that they were porous when held up in a strong light.

Knew What He Was Doing.

The family tutor was invited to dinner and surveyed with intense satisfaction the half-dozen wine-glasses ranged in front of his plate. The footman came round with the wine. The young man presented the smallest of the glasses. "It is vin ordinaire," observed the waiter. "Ah! precisely," replied our ascetic philosopher; "I am reserving the larger glasses for the finer sorts."

Good Friends.

Cleverton—Have a cigar?

Dashaway—I don't care if I do, old man. I know it's a good one if you have it.

Cleverton—You flatter me.

Dashaway—No. I don't flatter you. I flatter your friends.—Detroit Free Press.

A Slander.

"Well, my boy, how do you find yourself?"

"I don't" responded the detective, with an air of offended dignity.—Indianapolis Journal.

Cranks.

Cranks are the fleas of civilization. We may destroy them, but they stir us up, and show where the sore spots are. —Exchange.

ORTHODOX young women consider the osculation of moustached young men, as hair-tickle.

Savage Indifference to Pain.

Generally speaking, the more civilized and refined races are more sensitive to pain than barbarous and uncivilized races. This was proved by Dr. Felkin in a series of carefully planned experiments which he made upon Arabs, negroes, and Europeans. The stoical fortitude of the Arabs he considered due to peculiar mental characteristics, of which mental repression, self-control and dogged endurance were the leading features. The indifference to pain in negroes, he thought was due to diminished general sensibility, and he was led to believe that the relative sensibility of Europeans, Arabs, and negroes was in the proportion of one, two, and three. A New Zealander has been known to chop off his great toes so that he might get on a pair of boots which had been given to him. On one occasion a native Australian came to a settlement to get a wooden leg, his own leg being burnt away at the knee. It had been wounded so severely that amputation was necessary, and, as his tribe had no appliances to stop the flow of blood, his leg had been simply burnt off. — Brooklyn Eagle.

Bismarck Kisses Pretty Girls.

Bismarck has won the hearts of all the German women by his exhibition of that fondness for kissing fresh young faces for which Gen. Sherman was so famous.

Lillie Finzelberg, a young German sculptress, went with her sister to call upon Bismarck in Kissengen. His habit is to let devoted women kiss his hand. When leaving these young women tried to kiss his hand, but the prince said: "Hold on; we will do that much simpler."

He then laid hold of the two girls and gave each several loud, hearty kisses. The result is that both young women have become famous throughout the empire.

Bismarck's habit of letting women kiss his hand has given rise to a strange custom. In certain circles women make collections of celebrated men. Some of these are valuable and most interesting—more so than all the stamp and coin collections in the world.

Real Bismarck kisses, however, are exceedingly rare, and the Finzelberg girls are the envy of all kiss collections.

Authors and Copyrights.

Frederick Wicks, well known in the English publishing world, writes to the Athenæum that it is a fact that authors retain the copyright in matters contributed to periodicals, unless an express assignment is made, or "copyright included" is written on the receipt for payment, and that the author can reprint the very day after the issue if he chooses, even without asking permission, while the publisher cannot reprint in any form except as a number of his periodical. Whether this is the law in the United States or not has doubtless not been decided yet, but American courts usually follow British precedent in such cases.

Hard Times in Australian Society.

"Bread and butter dances" are the latest form of amusement inaugurated by the Sydney ladies. The name does not signify that the functions are exclusively for "bread and butter misses," but that the refreshments are as simple as possible, in order that the charity in aid of which the dance is given may benefit as largely as possible.

The price asked for the tickets is exceedingly moderate, and such inexpensive informal gatherings are likely to be very popular just now, when, owing to the recent commercial failures, Australian hostesses are not in a position to entertain on the same elaborate style as in better times.

Two Smart Women.

"I am told that your husband plays poker every night at the club—plays for money, too," said an anxious mother to her married daughter.

"That's all right. He gives me all his winnings."

"What! Do you—"

"And he always plays with Mr. Nexdoor."

"What difference can that make?"

"Mrs. Nexdoor makes her husband give her his winnings, and then she gives the money to me, and I hand her what my husband won from hers, and so we both have about twice as much money as we could get out of them otherwise."

Facts for the Traveling Public,

Emigrants, commercial men, tourists, mariners and miners relating to the preservation of health under conditions unfavorable to it, may be gleaned with profit from the oft published testimony of such persons relating to the protective and remedial qualities of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a very valuable remedy to those who traverse "the briny deep," or are subjected to malarial influences or out door exposure. With as much certainty as Dr. Koch's celebrated lymph destroys the organic microbe, the Bitters counteracts unhealthful germs in malaria-tainted air and brackish water. It prevents and removes disorders caused by poor and unaccustomed food, and restores tranquillity to worn out nerves and weary brains. Rheumatism, kidney and liver complaint, cramps, colic and dyspepsia are among the ailments that it subdues.

How It Would Strike Him.

"I am going to ask Mr. Bullion for his daughter's hand to-night, and I am so nervous I can't think," said Tapperton.

"No use being nervous," replied Mr. Billington, who knows Mr. Bullion. "Mr. Bullion is very approachable."

"Eh? Won't he kick me out?"

"Not a bit of it."

"Won't he get mad?"

"No, indeed?"

"I am overjoyed. What do you think he will do?"

"He'll laugh."

Disaster at a Wedding.

At the wedding of George III. a stout Duchess whose name is not given, had the misfortune to sneeze during the ceremony, and thereby burst her stays. A shawl was thrown over her, and she was taken to the vestry for repairs.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

"I have been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for some time, and every dose helps me. My little boy, six years old, had sores on his feet, and he could not wear any shoes. Wherever the skin cracked bad sores would form, presumably on account of the blood having been poisoned by ivy. Many remedies failed to do him any good. Finally I gave him and after a week the sores healed and disappeared. After taking two bottles he was entirely cured and his general health was greatly benefited." MRS. C. S. TITUS, South Gibson, Pa.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, always reliable and beneficial.

"THERE are dictionaries and dictionaries, but the noblest Roman of them all is Webster's." This was said of the latest "Unabridged" by a prominent writer. As it was true of that work, how much more applicable the statement is to its successor, the "International," which after a vast outlay has been brought to completion and placed upon the market. This new Webster, by natural right, has taken a warm place in the regard of the English-speaking people. It is recognized as the standard authority. While compact, it is sufficiently comprehensive, and while strikingly attractive typographically, and rich and substantial in binding, it is still within the reach of about all who wish to possess a work of this kind. In these days of sensational publishing and advertising it is refreshing to observe with what conscientious scholarly labor this new Webster has been produced and the conservative methods by which it is being presented by the well-known Merriam publishing house of Springfield, Mass.

A Dirty Poet.

Paul Verlaine, the popular but poor poet, whose spirit inspires La Plume in Paris, is thus described: "In his face an expression of anxiety 'older than the flood,' but for the rest a bearing and personality so instinct with ease and glorification that one thinks at once of some Greek philosopher—Socratus, whom indeed he resembles in the massive brow and the little turned-up nose. White linen and dainty clothes he knows nothing of. His dress is all awry, with torn button holes minus the buttons, and from beneath the gray beard peeps a gray wool shirt by no means clean.

Nature Makes Fun.

Gerard Leon and his troupe of highly educated, trained Spanish mules are the greatest fun makers ever presented; their antics and tricks are entirely new and original, and they hold up to nature, as it were, in a grandly ridiculous light, the finished and polished performance of their asinine fold and celebrated pets of the equine world.

Among the most attractive features are our trained and educated animals, charming intelligent creatures, whose bewildering performances are without parallel. Competent and experienced trainers are employed the year round, developing and expanding brute education. Animals that will talk. Animals that will please. Animals that will amaze. Animals that will amuse. Animals that will astonish. Cook & Whitby's big show, Waterloo, Saturday, Oct. 7.

Chicago and the Fair.

Starting from near the Caravels, or Columbus' ships, which are now manned by U. S. seamen, instead of Spaniards as when we last saw them, we can pass through the Agricultural Machinery building. Here are the plows, separators, fanning mills, etc. The most ancient of all these is the plow exhibit, of course, as plows were the first agricultural implements used. Here are shown some ancient plows from Egypt. They are entirely of wood; the pointed piece that does the plowing, has the handle on it, being the top of the same piece, while the beam was fastened to it by a tenon A Mexican plow near by had a beam about 16 feet long, it being merely a large pole. Several of these old wood plows have odd shapes, just as they could find a crooked tree, or a strong limb that could be made to do the work And there was the yoke that was fastened to the oxen's horns, by which they pulled the plow, as well as the rawhide lines used to guide them. Near by were scores of bright steel plows, some of them nickel plated. There were also some of our own early plows that look quaint enough now.

TUNIS BUILDING.

This had many strange things, like wooden shoes with enamel leather at the point, fans which are made on one side of the handle and look like a flag when the wind blows it out straight. They have fine cloths and leather, fine old-fashioned arms, as well as modern. There is a marble bottomed canopy bed of some wealthy citizen. The posts and sides are of ebony, richly inlaid with mother of pearl. The marble bottom or bed is in sections of finely colored and polished marble. There were also valuable "mosaics." These are pictures made by setting together small pieces of various colored stone, and so blending the shades of color as to form a picture. It was often so nicely done that visitors not well informed spoke of them in our hearing as "old paintings."

INDIANA DAY.

This was last Wednesday, Sept. 27, and besides the usual attractions, the promised presence of famous Indiana citizens drew an unusual number of Hoosiers to the White City. Ex-president Harrison Gov. Matthews, J. Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet, and other noted Indianians were there. The Indiana building was lovely with flags and bunting, and on the south porch the governor introduced the distinguished speakers. Gen. Harrison made an excellent address, as he always does and was heartily cheered. J. Whitcomb Riley, however, had the most applause, as he recited the poem that made him famous,

> "When the frost is on the punkin,
> An' the fodder's in the shock."

This was very appropriate, as that and the previous morning had brought us the first real frosts of the season Ex senator Palmer, of Michigan, made a witty speech as did also Mr. Sherley, of Kentucky, who is now assisting Mr. Riley in his entertainments. The venerable Fred Douglas of Washington, D. C, the most famous and perhaps the ablest of the old time slaves, was present, but refused to answer to the urgent calls for a speech. He merley rose and bowed and was lost sight of in the immense crowd that covered several acres. Senator Voorhees, Col. Dick Thompson and Gen. Lew Wallace could not be present. After the speaking, Gen. Harrison and Gov. Matthews held a reception and everybody shook hands with them. It was a great gathering that day, the paid attendance showing over 196,000, one of the greatest "state days" so far, we believe.

WISCONSIN'S PEARLS.

In the department of mines and mining, one is struck with the wonderful variety and beauty of the things dug from the earth. It would take a large book to hold even the names. The objects that attract the most attention, however, are the specimens of gold and of silver and the valuable pearls found in the ordinary streams in certain places in Wisconsin. These pearls are not large, but very beautiful and of fine quality, which makes them valuable. They run all the way from $3 up to $5,000. Most of them are the usual pearly white, but now and then one sees a lovely pink one and sometimes with other tints.

MONTANA'S SILVER GIRL.

As for silver and gold, there is a great abundance in several state exhibits, and in a number of foreign exhibits, but the one that is most sought after by sight seers is the solid silver statue furnished by Montana. It is life size and is modeled from life, being a representation of Miss Ada Rehan, the popular actress. It contains silver to the value of $75,000, and stands on a gold base, which is marked at $224,000 in value. Many, however, insist that the gold base is merely laid with gold leaf. It is a wonderful affair, anyway, for even as a work of art, it is up to the average, but no doubt it is the metal that forms the chief attraction for the crowd.

Strange, beautiful and valuable minerals and metals from all over the world may be seen in the various exhibits, some specimens of recent discovery and now shown for the first time. Of these, we believe the "Rubellite" from California is new. It is a sort of half formed crystal, embedded in grey or light brown rock, the crystals being of a delicate coral pink hue, and so arranged as to present new and strange forms in rock. The finest pieces are to be seen up in the California building. Wonderful forms are seen in the Canada exhibit, of nickel, asbestos etc. But there is no use to follow this endless subject further. One should have months to study specimens, for even miners have kicked aside as worthless, the unattractive rocks that were later found to contain some form of gold or silver.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 589 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

In Perfect Harmony.

Perhaps some of our readers would like to know in what respect Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is better than any other. We will tell you. When this remedy is taken as soon as a cold is contracted, and before it has become settled in the system, it will counteract the effect of the cold and greatly lessen its severity, if not effectually cure the cold in two days time, and it is the only remedy that will do this. It acts in perfect harmony with nature and aids nature in relieving the lungs, opening the secretions, liquefying the mucus and causing its expulsion from the air cells of the of the lungs, and restoring the system to a strong and healthy condition. No other remedy in the market possesses these remarkable properties. No other will cure a cold so quickly or leave the system in as sound a condition. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of Its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1873—Continued.

The press discussion of railroad prospects, the energy and unstinted generosity of citizens and the promising features of location, attracted attention to Auburn and brought consequent increase of strangers on the lookout for manufacturing sites or business facilities. During February there came two men from Hicksville, Ohio, to Auburn, to interest our people in the manufacture of wagon and carriage hubs and spokes. They claimed experience in the business at home, represented that such a factory would prove a paying investment here from abundance and cheapness of proper timber and convenience for shipment of product.

They proposed the formation of a joint stock company with a capital of $20,000, of which they would take $8,000, and give Auburn people a controlling influence by assuming the remainder.

The proposition was favorably received. Several leading citizens subscribed the required amount of stock and by June, a company had been formed in which Messrs Miller and Casebeer were leading members. A fine building site was secured on land owned by George Ensley adjacent to the railroad and just west of the lower mills, in what is now called the "south end" of Auburn.

Constructive work began on the largest building, whose dimensions are 100 feet long by 40 feet wide, and the frame of this structure was raised on August 14. A strong force of workmen were employed and by the last of the month, the roof was in place. In October, the factory engine, a fine and powerful machine from Murray's foundry, Ft. Wayne, had arrived and was placed in position; machinery had been brought from Hicksville. Material had been purchased from farmers and accumulated, and in November the business was in full blast and gave employment to about twenty-five hands. A musical and far sounding steam whistle calling the men to work, proclaimed a forward step and high hopes were centered upon this factory.

The interior presented a cheering appearance with the din of operation and activity of workmen. In swift succession, logs were sawed into sections, formed into hubs, cored and mortised, while other logs were speedily transformed into spokes. Culls were rejected and soon the store house was piled high with the painted manufactured material awaiting sale and shipment.

The very celerity of the transformation of raw product to finished fabric proved a fatal defect in that most important item, the demand for and acceptance of, the hubs and spokes. For lack of proper seasoning, with inexperienced workmen and resultant defective work passed by the factory inspector, entire car loads were rejected by wagon makers; the reputation of the factory proportionally suffered; the company fell behind in their finances and eventually suspended operations indefinitely. But, while capital was sunk in the venture and a costly lesson was taught in unskilled manufacture, the plan was faultless and the factory was a timely help, supplying a ready market to farmers for the almost useless timber and by the disbursements to employes, gave substantial and appreciative benefit to Auburn.

Sensitive to reputation, our people were encouraged by well founded outside praise, and the editor of the Logansport Pharos, having paid the town a visit, wrote as follows: "Auburn, the countyseat of DeKalb, is improving rapidly and excellent buildings are being erected. A large brick block opposite the court house on the north was nearly completed last fall. It will be finished during the summer. A fine hotel is being built and many substantial dwelling houses were erected last season. The total number of business and residence houses built in 1872 was ninety-three. On every hand may be seen evidences of prosperity and it is apparent that Auburn is 'out of the mud.' The court house is occupied by competent and obliging officers, but the grounds are surrounded by a very shabby fence, which, however, is soon to be replaced by a neat, new one."

And in September, W. C. McGonigal, then of the Steuben Republican and familiar with the vicissitudes through which the town had passed, truthfully stated: "Those who knew Auburn a few years ago would not now recognize the place. Two railroads have brought life to the town and energy to its citizens. Five brick buildings have been recently erected, among them a large three-story hotel built and nearly completed for S. C. Swineford on the site of the Weaver House. A stave factory employs thirty-five hands and a hub and spoke factory is nearing completion that will require as many more.

New dwellings are constantly going up. A passenger depot and grain house on the Eel River railroad will be ready as soon as trains can be placed on the track. The town is wide-awake and everything denotes a steady and substantial improvement."

Despite these kindly and encouraging expressions, Auburn had its serious and still exciting drawbacks, minimized now by cement walks and crossings of which we are proud and by streets in fine weather, beautiful in perspective, bordered by shade trees, neatly graded by road machines and wet down by indefatigable sprinklers.

Auburn was not out of the mud, realistically speaking, and the COURIER with no roseate view of the situation, prior to the spring election justly complained that the "miserable condition of our streets, drains, crossings and sidewalks was never more apparent than in March, 1873."

No one can have passed along our sidewalks during the spring of 1893 with all that had been said and done in the interval of twenty years, without thought of the necessity for some system of drainage and the knowledge that the remedy proposed by the COURIER is equally applicable to the situation at the present day.

It was then urged: "First of all, a channel must be made for Cedar Creek. The consequent benefit cannot be estimated." A drain was demanded from "Kuhlman's addition in the northwest part of town, near the Rickel, Martin Ashley and Altenberg properties, clear through south of the town," and this would relieve ponds of stagnant water and provide outlets for lateral drainage so much needed.

(To be continued next week.)

Chicago and the Fair.

THE EASTERN INDIANS.

Near the south loop of the Intramural railway and not far away from the agricultural machinery building we find a few bark wigwams. These contain a few Penobscot and Iroquois (New York) Indians. In the largest we met the present president or head of the Six Nations, Mr. LaForte, who is a fine looking man, very intelligent, and who freely admitted that his people lived in as good houses as white people, and wore as good clothes, in fact, were generally wealthy. These wigwams and the Indian clothes his companions had on were simply to show people exactly how things once were with them. Of his companions, one was "Deerfoot" once a famous runner and heard of over the world, though he now said in a quiet way, "I've quit that." The Third man was Solomon Bail, quite an old man, who is the grandson of the famous Indian chief "Cornplanter," a man who lived in Washington's day, and with whom Washington had made treaties. He seemed tired of being made a show of. Not far away one passes the "Big Tree Restaurant," so called because one plank of a "big tree" from California makes a sidewalk along it, and a piece squared four feet each way is used for a counter inside the building, each being 110 feet long. Near by this is what looks like a large steep hill of red sandstone. It is a model of the "Cliff Dwellers'" home, showing the strange way of having small rooms for houses cut into the cliffs, making a wild but rather safe home. These cliffs on the fair ground are made of tin painted to resemble sandstone.

THE KRUPP GUNS.

Near the Leather Exhibit at the south end of the grounds, the great German gunmaker, Krupp, has his building and his big guns. About ten o'clock each day there is an exhibit of the working of these monsters, and this generally draws a crowd. Uncle Sam has an exhibit of great and small cannons further north, and the chances are that our home-made guns are the equals of any made in the world.

ELECTRICITY DEPARTMENT.

This building contains too many delicate, complicated and bewildering machines for a non-expert to describe. One should see it after five p. m. when the various colored lights flash out again. Light will flash along a line of bulbs, change color, etc., in a wonderful manner. At one point there is a great post about which are closely wound spirals of incandescent bulbs, while near by one may see the cylinder which turning like that in a music box works the keys and wires that send alternate flashes of light up and down and around in the spirals about the post. It is wonderful. But the grandest sight one may ever see is to stand near the great fountain at the approach of darkness and see first the bright line of incandescents flash up at the water's edge all around the three sides of the great lagoon, and then later flash in the same way along the top of the great square of buildings standing around the same lovely body of water, then along the top of the great colonnade called the "peristyle" towards the lake, and lastly on the buildings to south and north and finishing up by rows of lights all over the Administration building, showing up its great dome and all its beautiful curves and ornamental work in such a way as to be seen miles away. And as we whirl off homeward in the darkness it stands out a thing of grandeur and beauty such as the world never saw before.

A Movable Fire.

[From Harper's Weekly.]

It appears that in some sort of civic demonstration in St. Louis the other day—perhaps the celebration of the founding of Chicago, or something of that sort—two immense floats representing respectively the Monitor and the Merrimac, were in the procession. It was an evening parade, and in some way while passing down Grand Avenue the unfortunate Monitor caught fire. A thoughtful citizen turned in an alarm, and the fire department responded with promptness. It happened that the captain of the Monitor was a new man in the navy, having before been in the merchant service or commander of a truck, and, hearing the noise of the engines behind him, he was impressed with the notion that the whole Confederate navy was coming down upon him. He concluded that the time for flight had come, so hitting the mules a crack with his whip he went tearing away at the rate of some twenty knots an hour, with his craft blazing fiercely. The astonished firemen at first paused, but soon saw where duty lay, cracked their whips and tore away after the fire. Interested citizens followed on foot, and small boys brought up the rear.

How long this thing kept up we are not told, but we are assured that Hampton Roads on the last day's fight was a quiet place compared with Grand Avenue. It was evidently the object of the crafty Monitor commander either to get out to sea or to run in under the guns of some friendly fort. But the St. Louis fire department, though accustomed to lying in wait and springing upon its victims with a single bound, showed that it could course a fire when necessary. It was used to old-fashioned fires, but if a fire was skittish and got up and ran, the department was willing to do what it could to catch it and hold it still while it put it out. So while the Monitor stood out to sea, carrying every possible pound of mule, the engines and hose carts followed close in her wake. Finally the ill-starred craft being burnt to the water's edge, the fire went out, and the hulk drifted down a side street with the noble commander clinging to a floating mule. The fire department returned to headquarters.

He was a Collector Too.

[From Harper's Young People.]

Boys who collect coins and odd souvenirs of great men will be amused by this story which was circulated in Paris some years ago. The famous and much admired poet Beranger while walking along one of the boulevards one afternoon encountered a very miserable beggar on the way. The beggar's appearance and pathetic story so moved the poet that he dropped two sous into the poor fellow's hat and passed on.

A wealthy Parisian observing the poet's kindly act, hastened up to the beggar and said, "Here, my man, I'll give you five francs for those two sous that gentleman just dropped in your hat."

"What is that for?" asked the beggar, astonished greatly by this unusual request.

"I want them for my collection; the man who gave them to you is Beranger the poet."

"What—him?" asked the beggar, pointing toward the fast receding figure of the donor.

"Yes. That's Beranger."

"That being the case," returned the beggar, "I think I'll keep the coins. I'm a collector myself.

WRECK AT WHITING.

THE PENNSYLVANIA FLYER OFF THE TRACK.

The Fireman Killed and Several Injured—The House Passes the Federal Election Repeal Bill—The Republicans Carry Indianapolis.

ANOTHER WRECK.

The Pennsylvania Flyer Off the Track.

The Pennsylvania Flyer on the Fort Wayne road ran into an open derail at Whiting, Ind., causing the engine, mail car, and two Pullmans to leave the track. The fireman, Henry Werner of Fort Wayne, was buried beneath the engine and scalded to death by escaping steam. The train was composed of a mail car and nine vestibule cars. The train was running but ten miles an hour. Had it been running at full speed, the death list would have been very large. The fire company was at the scene in five minutes and extinguished the rapidly gaining flames. There were more than four hundred passengers on the derailed train. The engine and the mail car are both total wrecks.

Following is the list of injured:

John Christie, engineer, Englewood, Ill., pinned under engine; four ribs broken; various internal injuries, will die.

James Breen, conductor, Fort Wayne, Ind., jumped from mail car; both legs broken; will recover.

C. P. Barber, mail agent, Columbia City, Ind., thrown against letter rack, head bruised; not serious.

Edgar V. Banks, mail agent, Lima, Ohio, back sprained by jumping; not serious.

H. E. Noble, mail agent, Fort Wayne, breast injured; not serious.

Burglars Raid a Michigan Town.

Later the gang was discovered in Pond's Marble Works drilling the safe. Watchmen Cady and Baker opened fire on the gang and several shots were exchanged on both sides. The gang escaped unharmed, but Cady received a bullet in the hand and Baker one in the leg.

Insurgents Capture a Government Fort.

The Indianapolis Election.

The municipal election held at Indianapolis resulted in a sweeping victory for the Republicans, who elect their candidates for Mayor, Clerk, Police Judge, and Councilmen-at-large by majorities ranging from 2,500 to 3,000. The Mayor having the appointment of all the boards, the effect of today's election is to place all departments of the city government in the hands of the Republicans.

Dynamiter Captured.

San Francisco special: The police have arrested the man Johnson, the union sailor, who, it is said, took a satchel of dynamite to the Mission Street lodging house, and who is said to be one of the conspirators that caused the explosion at Curtin's boarding house, on the water front. The man was found in hiding on a ship at Oakland Mole. The police spirited the man away.

The American Yacht Wins.

In the International Yacht race between the American yacht, Vigilant, and the English yacht, Valkyrie, the former won.

Another Suspect Arrested.

Cadillac (Mich.) special: A stranger came here last week who registered as "Charles H. Smith, from Nowhere." About the first thing he did was to buy a lot of revolvers, and he acted so suspiciously that the officers arrested him. Four revolvers, four gold watches, a pocket compass and other valuables were found on his person, while his two grips, both very heavy, were full of specie.

The police believe the man is one of the Kendallville robbers. He is about 5 feet 4 inches tall, weighs 185 pounds, wears good clothes, a blue coat and Stetson hat, has a long, black beard of the Burnside kind, looks intelligent and is about forty years old. He won't say a word. When the officers arrested him he tried to use one of his revolvers. Smith's grips contained $1,750 in money, diamonds, and jewelry.

RATHER GLOOMY

Is the General Outlook for Business.

New York special: R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade:

It is difficult to detect any signs of improvement. While there has been some addition to the number of manufacturing establishments and the number of hands at work during the past week, it is becoming painfully clear that the orders obtained do not suffice to keep employed at full time even the limited force at present engaged. The business transacted is still far below that of last year in volume, in railroad earnings the decrease being 10.6 per cent., in spite of large World's Fair business; and in payments through the principal clearing houses outside of New York the decrease is 26 per cent.

Reports from other cities discloses a distinct check in business. There is on the whole less activity and less confidence regarding the future than there was a week ago, and this in many cases attributed to the uncertainty regarding the monetary future which delay in the Senate causes. While the volume of all kinds of money in circulation has increased $21,377,247 during the month of September and is now greater by almost $10,000,000 than it was last year, the embarrassment is now, as it has all the time been, due to a lack of confidence rather than to a lack of currency. It is observed that while the bank circulation increased in September $5,052,317, the amount of bank notes in the treasury has increased $4,657,894, and several of the banks which took out additional circulation have retired it and sold the bonds deposited. The stock of money in New York banks has increased rapidly, and the retirement of clearing house certificates here and at other cities shows a great improvement in the monetary situation, and yet there is but little increase perceived in that confidence upon which commercial or industrial loans mainly depend.

RAN RIOT.

Strikers and Policemen Have a Battle.

Indianapolis special: The special police were in place again at the Big Four shops in Indianapolis, Friday morning and expecting more trouble. Two specials refused to go on duty and turned in their badges. The boiler makers were also at work. When it became known, that the police were back, the crowd soon gathered. If a guard appeared in front of the lines of cars he was at once assaulted by a shower of rocks and compelled to retire by the young men who sympathized with the strikers.

The first serious outbreak occurred at the Moorefield shops Friday evening when an engine and one coach backed into the round house for the purpose of taking the non-strikers into the city. Three hundred men and boys gathered in the streets, and when the train started the crowd yelled at the workmen and some one threw a stone. In a moment hundreds of stones were thrown against the car. After the train proceeded, a man supposed to be John B. Stokes, a special officer employed by the company, stepped to the door of the car and fired into a crowd of school children standing on the sidewalk. They escaped injury but J. B. Pitts a fireman employed by the company who was taking no part in the demonstration, was shot and fatally injured. The firing aroused the indignation of the crowd, which immediately opened and about fifty shots were fired at the train, but no one was injured. It is anticipated that when the new men go to the shops they will be fired upou.

ANARCHIST SHOT!

Execution of Pallas, the Dynamite Bomb Thrower.

Barcelona special: Pallas, the anarchist, who, on Sunday, September 24, made an attempt on the life of Captain General Martinez Calpos, by hurling two dynamite bombs at the officer, was shot in accordance with the sentence of the court martial before which he was tried. During the twenty-four hours previous to his execution Pallas was confined in the military chapel to which he had been escorted while singing an anarchist song. The prisoner refused to kneel when sentence was pronounced, but he consented to sign a copy of his sentence, at the same time exclaiming that he was signing the death warrant of his judges, feeling certain that his brother anarchists would avenge his death by killing those who condemned him to die.

Priests throughout the day did their utmost to prevail upon the desperate man to listen to religious consolation and die repentant. But Pallas sneered at the remarks of the priests, laughed at their word pictures of the hereafter and scornfully rejected all their efforts in his behalf

POISONED WATER.

Carbolic Acid Thrown in a Sheriff's Well.

An attempt was made to poison Sheriff Frederick of Lake County, Indiana, and might have cost several lives but for its timely discovery. Judge Langdon of Lafayette, Ind., who is hearing the Roby case, was a guest for dinner, and after being seated the girl brought in a pitcher of water, but before serving remarked that it tasted funny. An investigation showed that it contained carbolic acid.

Over 100 pails were drawn from the well and a chemical analysis made, which proved that some one had poured a large quantity of carbolic acid in the well. On account of the prize-fights and trials of the fighters there has been a great deal of ill-feeling stirred up in the county, and it is thought that some one who has been injured by Frederick is seeking revenge. It created a great deal of excitement, and the Town Board offered a reward of $200 for the guilty parties.

The Wratten Murderers.

Washington (Ind.) special: The feeling against the men who were arrested recently charged with the killing of the six Wrattens three weeks ago, is intense, and it was, no doubt, a good move to have the men taken at once to the State Prison at Jeffersonville for safe keeping. They most certainly would have been mobbed.

One of the prisoners, William Kase, is said to have given the authorities information that lead to the arrest of the man who slew the Wrattens. It is believed that Kase and the other prisoners, Brown and Williams, were parties to the crime, but that the real murderer is yet at liberty. Kase, no doubt, had a hand in it. He is a bad man, and comes from a family of criminals. A brother is now in prison on a life sentence for the unprovoked killing of a colored man.

A Demon's Deed.

Some time ago W. K. Hill and wife, who live at Bumtown, Ohio, separated, he going north to a farm, while she returned to her parents. He retained possession of their only child, a girl, but during his absence her mother took her away. Hill returned the other day, and going to his wife's home, tried to get her to live with him again. She refused and a quarrel resulted, in which his mother-in-law, Mrs. Samuel Blake, took part. Hill finally drew a revolver and shot her, killing her instantly, and then turned his weapon on his wife, the bullet entering her right ear. She fell fatally wounded.

Fatally Injured.

At New Haven, Allen County, Ind., occurred a very bad accident which may result in the death of James Foote, the 13-year-old son of Henry Foote. As the Wabash switch engine was setting a car onto a side track the boy attempted to cross the track ahead of it and the corner of the tender struck him on the side of the head, causing concussion of the brain. He bled profusely from the right ear and is lying in an unconscious condition. Dr. L. S. Null, the attending physician, says he is in a very critical condition and fears the result will be fatal.

No Further Rioting at Indianapolis.

Indianapolis special: The expected, as usual, failed to happen, and there was no further rioting at the Big Four shops Friday. The company made elaborate preparations to protect its property, but no mob materialized. The company went before the Federal Court and procured a temporary restraining order against sixty of the strikers, enjoining them from molesting the present employes of the company. President Ingalls has notified the Indianapolis authorities that he will move the shops from that city for refusing him police protection.

Unwelcome Guest Shot.

Gallipolis (Ohio) special: George Jackson, a well-known farmer of Walnut Township, gave an apple-paring party at his residence. Among those who attended was James Collins, but he was not invited, and had imbided freely of some intoxicating drink before his arrival. Collins acted insultingly and was invited away. He failed to go, when Jackson got his gun and fired at Collins, the shot taking effect in his breast, mortally wounding him. Jackson has been arrested.

Death of Ex-Senator Groome.

James B. Groome died suddenly at his home in Baltimore. Mr. Groome was elected Governor of the State by the Democrats in 1873 and stepped from the gubernatorial chair in 1879 to a seat in the United States Senate, where he served one term.

Help for Muncie.

Gov. Matthews has drawn his warrant on the State Epidemic Fund for $1,000, which will be used in maintaining the quarantine around the city of Muncie, Ind., to prevent the spread of smallpox to other sections of the State.

May Succeed Gen. Von Verden.

Berlin special: It is reported that Gen. Von Kaltenborn-Stachau, Prussian Minister of War, will be appointed commander of the Third Army Corps to succeed Gen. Von Verden, who died recently.

An Officer Arrested.

John D. Oaks, the special officer charged with the murder of James Pitts, the Peoria and Eastern fireman, in the recent riot at Indianapolis, has surrendered to the authorities. He denies that he fired the fatal shot.

Attached by His Father.

The racing string of horses of Charles Fair has been attached by his father, Senator Fair, to secure a debt of $70,000. Charles is said to be locked up at Maison Richie, a local restaurant of San Francisco.

The Roof Caved In.

A bad accident occurred at M. Kelly's coal mine at Danville, Ill. The roof caved in, killing Joe Miners and fatally injuring Avery Taylor. Jesse Start also received severe injuries.

Trains Collide.

A rear-end collision between two freight trains on the Pittsburgh & Erie Railroad occurred at Edinburgh Station, Pa., and eighteen cars of merchandise were badly wrecked. The trainmen escaped injury.

Head Badly Damaged.

Ben Neville of Clipper Mills, Ohio, was caught between two electric cars and seriously injured. His temporal bone was broken and several big gashes cut in his head.

Died Game.

Sam Mayer, a full blood, was hanged at Tahlequah, I. T., for the murder of James Christian early in July. He died game and confessed his crime on the scaffold.

Moonshine Blood.

A bloody battle took place between moonshiners and a posse in Knott County, Kentucky. Two men were killed and the still captured and destroyed.

Wanted in Indiana.

London special: Charles Poole, who is wanted in the State of Indiana for larceny, has been remanded for extradition to the United States.

Failure at Cincinnati.

George Felkkamp, manufacturer of chairs at Cincinnati has assigned. Liabilities, $29,000; assets, $25,000.

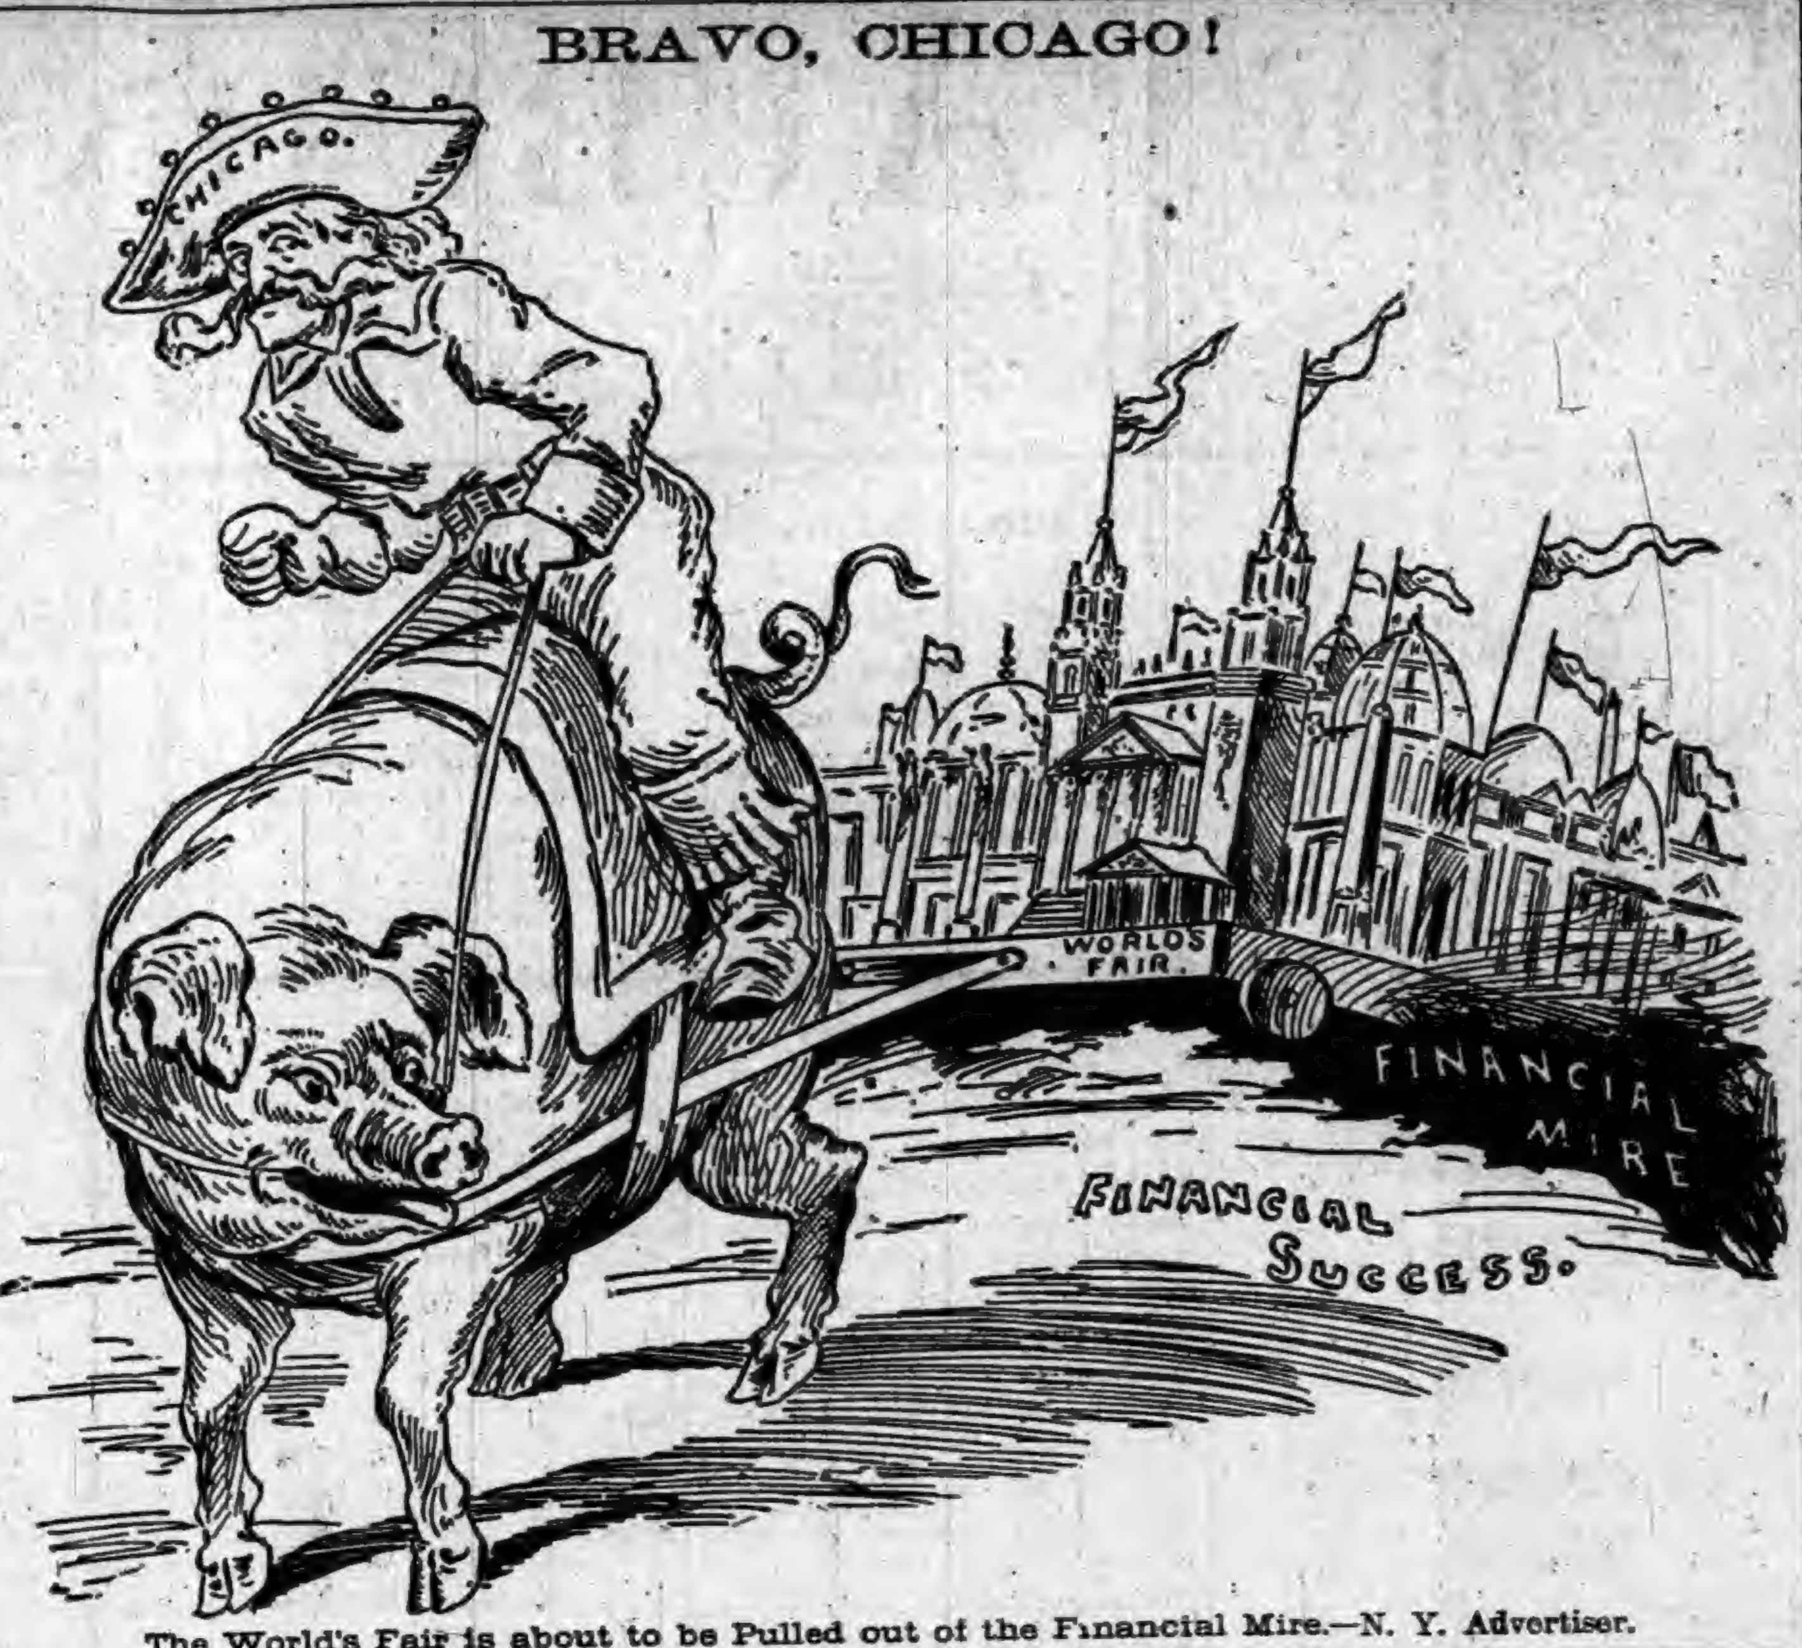
BRAVO, CHICAGO!



The World's Fair is about to be Pulled out of the Financial Mire.—N. Y. Advertiser.

SOME FAIR STORIES.

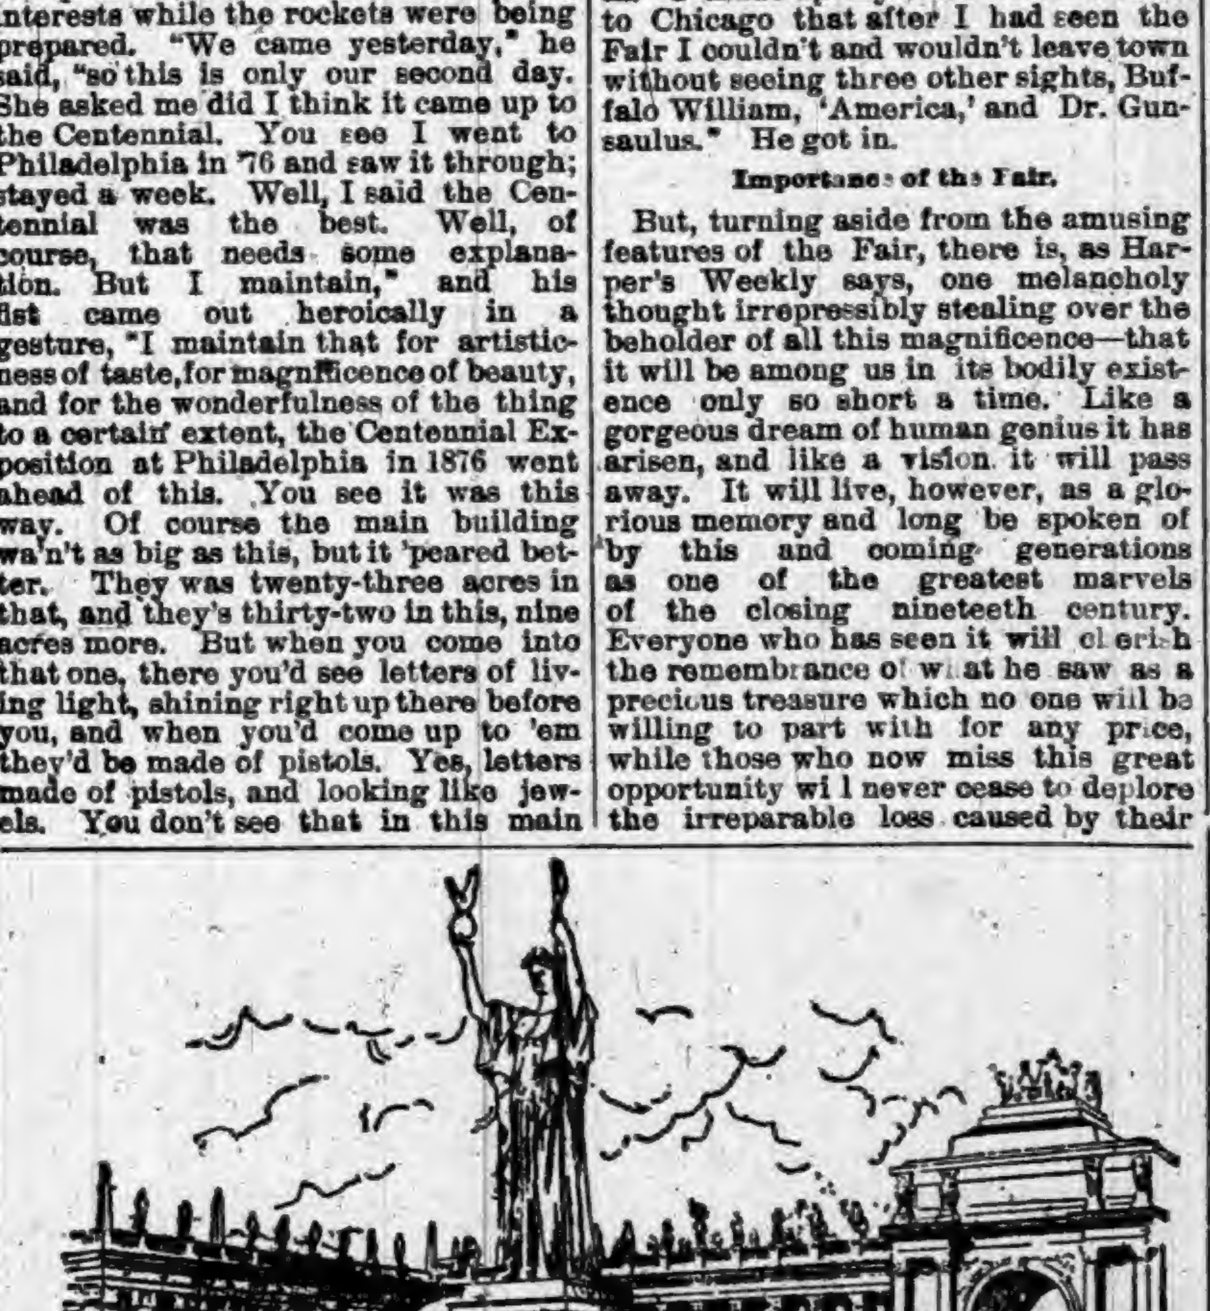
HAUNTED WITH THE MEMORY OF THE CENTENNIAL.

Wisdom in the Art Gallery—"The Faries' Wheel"—The Gondolas and Lagoons—Many Are the Amusing Incidents in the White City.

At the Big Show.

World's Fair correspondence:

Down on the lake front during the fireworks in the evening an oldish man, with a deep fringing rim of gray whiskers under his chin and up to his ears, gave me a chance to sit down on the end of the bench where he was watching the display. "Every inch of room counts here. Set right down," said he. "I found Her a place back up yender. I was glad She got a chance to set down." Having thus established his trustworthy status as the head of a household the good old fellow proceeded to "visit" with me, needing very few questions to unfold his history and interests while the rockets were being prepared. "We came yesterday," he said, "so this is only our second day. She asked me did I think it came up to the Centennial. You see I went to Philadelphia in '76 and saw it through; stayed a week. Well, I said the Centennial was the best. Well, of course, that needs some explanation. But I maintain," and his fist came out heroically in a gesture, "I maintain that for artisticness of taste, for magnificence of beauty, and for the wonderfulness of the thing to a certain extent, the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia in 1876 went ahead of this. You see it was this way. Of course the main building wa'n't as big as this, but it 'peared better. They was twenty-three acres in that, and they's thirty-two in this, nine acres more. But when you come to that one, there you'd see letters of living light, shining right up there before you, and when you'd come up to 'em they'd be made of pistols. Yes, letters made of pistols, and looking like jewels. You don't see that in this main building. And when I think over things like that, I say the Centennial was the best. She says I just got the Centennial so fixed in my mind I can't seem to consider this."



ADMIRING THE STATUE OF THE REPUBLIC.

"How about the buildings here?" "Well, as for buildings and right down up and down beauty to look at them, why, of course, these buildings go right off and leave Philadelphia sticking there."

The gratuitous information people give each other in the White City is exhaustless. For instance: "Who is this picture by?" asked one woman of another in the Art Gallery, and the answer came promptly, "By Gerome. He is an author, too. He wrote that book called 'Three Men in a Boat,' to say nothing of the dog."

Two Great Men.

Two men stood the other morning before the Bartholdi figures near the lagoon entrance of the Art Gallery. Their eyes were glistening with admiration, and one of them spoke to the other thus: "I should know it for Washington, though the comb-back of his hair ain't real natural; the other is Dee Layfatte—two great men together, greatest men ever lived in this country." His voice took on a splendid tone of conception of historical relation, and he repeated: "Yes, sir, they were the greatest men ever lived in this country. Talk about Cleveland! Talk about Harrison!"

The lagoons still give Fair visitors a deal of trouble. At the illumination one evening just after some sort of water procession had passed, a number of electric launches swung into line in the grand basin from the direction of the north lagoons. And a woman who had been trying to define the features of the boat to her companions welcomed the appearance of the familiar launches with a sigh of relief and the words, "Well, now here come the lagoons." It was another well-meaning woman who advised a friend not to leave the Fair without taking a gondola ride "on the galloons."

"The Fairies' wheel" is the astonishing name given to the big swing by a young person who must have thought it named by the law of contraries, for how could Titania and her train claim the Ferris for the fairies' wheel?

The environments of the Fair have their irresistible attractions for everybody, and nobody comes from a distance to Chicago without some very definite intention concerning other sights besides those in Jackson Park. Here is a striking example. At the door of a famous preacher's church, on a recent Sunday, a great crowd was struggling in vain for admittance, and numbers were being turned away. One man refused to go. "I've got to get in here," he protested. "Plenty of others feel the same way," said a good-natured bystander. "Yes, but I've got to get in," said the man of determination, with the ring in his voice of a great and irresistible longing that must be appeased at any cost. "I've got to get in. I made up my mind when I came to Chicago that after I had seen the Fair I couldn't and wouldn't leave town without seeing three other sights, Buffalo William, 'America,' and Dr. Gunsaulus." He got in.

Importance of the Fair.

But, turning aside from the amusing features of the Fair, there is, as Harper's Weekly says, one melancholy thought irrepressibly stealing over the beholder of all this magnificence—that it will be among us in its bodily existence only so short a time. Like a gorgeous dream of human genius it has arisen, and like a vision it will pass away. It will live, however, as a glorious memory and long be spoken of by this and coming generations as one of the greatest marvels of the closing nineteenth century. Everyone who has seen it will cherish the remembrance of what he saw as a precious treasure which no one will be willing to part with for any price, while those who now miss this great opportunity will never cease to deplore the irreparable loss caused by their gross neglect when they hear others tell the wonderful story. Even people of small means should not recoil from the expense of a journey, which in these hard times they may consider an extravagance, and they should not fail to bestow upon their children the boon of the enlightening and ennobling impressions which this grand spectacle conveys, and which in all likelihood will be the only opportunity in their lives to receive and enjoy.

BAD BLAZE AT OMAHA.

Destruction of the Farnham Street Theater Building.

The Farnham Street Theater Building, the second-best opera-house in Omaha, was totally destroyed the other evening by fire, which broke out in the rear of the fifth floor a few minutes after 5 o'clock. Four persons are reported to have been killed by falling walls. The fire department responded promptly, and a general alarm was turned in, but the fire seemed to have gained complete control. In a short time the walls of the theater building began to totter and crumble, and bricks were flying in all directions. The roof fell in while several firemen were upon the second floor, and they just succeeded in escaping by running down the side stairway. J. M. Gaynor, athlete and dancing master, was struck in the back by falling bricks and badly hurt. In the crowd many people were knocked down and trampled on.

The building was erected in 1882 by James E. Boyd, who has since been Governor. It was then and afterward knowd as Boyd's Opera House and was one of the best auditoriums in the West. A few years ago it was sold to the American Bank Building Company, which is owned by the American Loan and Trust Company, and was entirely refitted. It had cost originally $125,000 and is now insured for $90,000 in about twenty-five companies. "The Waifs of New York" company was playing in the theater and had just concluded a rehearsal. The entire loss on stock and building will exceed $200,000, of which perhaps $155,000 is secured by insurance. The origin of the fire is a mystery. It is rumored that it came from a cigarette left burning in the sawdust.

LIVES BLOWN OUT.

Terrible Tornado Ravages New Orleans and the Vicinity.

A terrific tornado struck New Orleans the other night from the northeast, sweeping to the south along the line of the Mississippi River through the parish of Plaquemines to the Gulf. The storm was one of the worst that ever visited that part of the country As far as can be learned it killed not less than twenty-four persons and wounded probably three times as many, some of them fatally, besides destroying a large amount of property at New Orleans. The wind reached a velocity of sixty miles an hour.

The revetment levee on Lake Pontchartrain, which protects New Orleans from overflow on the rear, was washed away and the water swept over it fifteen feet or more. Many of the yachts there were sunk or injured. In the Mississippi the coal fleet was scattered, the transfer boat of the Texas and Pacific Railroad badly damaged and several wharves carried away. The New Orleans and Northeastern had its track flooded for seven miles and so badly washed that it can run no trains. The track of the Louisville and Nashville was almost wholly washed out for fifteen miles. Three persons were killed and one wounded severely, if not fatally, by the storm in the city of New Orleans itself. Below the city it was far worse, especially in Plaquemines Parish. Here the wind reached a velocity of between 100 and 125 miles an hour and carried everything before it. The parish seat of justice, Pointe a la Hache, a town of 2,000 people, was the worst sufferer. In that town not a single house escaped injury. The Court House and Roman Catholic Church, the principal buildings in the town, and some twenty other buildings were destroyed. Four grown persons are known to be killed in Pointe a la Hache and several children, how many is not evactly known. In the immediate vicinity of Pointe a la Hache other deaths are reported and thirteen more in the country below. Gov. Warmoth said that this storm was the worst experienced in Louisiana since 1811. The hurricane of 1888 was not half so violent and detructive.

Mobile Has a Cyclone.

At Mobile, Ala., the wind blew the water in from the Gulf until the river reached Royal street, which is four blocks from the river and at an elevation of about fifteen feet from the main river height. There is no possible chance of estimating the pecuniary damage. All the wholesale and a portion of the retail district of the city was some four feet under water, and thousands of dollars' worth of goods have been damaged. It is conceded by all to be the worst storm that has ever visited Mobile. The towers on the court-house and Christ church may fall.

The train was running at the time, and the stern command of the conductor, and the lifting of his foot (as is claimed he did,) as if to kick him off, frightened the little fellow and he attempted to get off of the step. He swung around under the wheel and his foot was so crushed as to require amputation.

AN IDYL OF HONOLULU.

A Bold Stroke for a Husband. Written for This Paper.

BY LEON LEWIS.

CHAPTER X—Continued.

The surprise of this man, as Ralph, pale and perspiring, suddenly entered his presence, was most intense.

"Is it really you, Mr. Kemplin?" he demanded, offering his hand. "Take a seat, sir. Where have you been all this time?"

"Why, I have been taking a walk in the interior, Mr. Lane, as I told you this forenoon I thought of doing."

He sank wearily into the proffered chair, as he uttered these words, and Mr. Lane dropped into another, opening his eyes wide with a wondering astonishment.

"You've been ill, I suppose—or shipwrecked—but where?" asked Mr. Lane, with a gaze expressive of his curious interest.

"No; I've been waylaid by three runaway sailors from the Nor'wester, at the instigation of Hank Ripple," returned Ralph, in turn scrutinizing Mr. Lane, and wondering at his remarks. "They seem to have left me for dead, taking my purse and papers."

"And when was this done?"

"This afternoon—within an hour, in fact, after I left you!"

The gaze of Mr. Lane became concentrated still more strongly upon his visitor.

"See here, Mr. Kemplin," he said, "it has been three months since you took leave of me upon the forenoon in question!"

"Three months?" stammered Ralph.

It was now his turn to stare, and the wonder with which he took in the purport of the agent's words was akin to consternation.

"One of us must be dreaming," he muttered. "I'll go off to the Yokohama——"

"The Yokohama, sir?" interrupted the agent. "She has been to China and back since I saw you! She sailed, as intended, the morning after you vanished so strangely."

Ralph gasped for breath.

"Impossible!" he muttered.

"And here's a letter from your father inquiring after you," pursued Mr. Lane. "The date will tell you that you've been taking a Rip Van Winkle sleep of the strangest description."

The young Chicagoan looked shocked and bewildered as he took in the purport of the missive in question, and the agent resumed:

"Capt. Cross received a line purporting to come from you, and saying that you had suddenly decided to make a voyage with Capt. Stepp to the Arctic Ocean. This letter, I can now see, was the forgery of some enemy or plotter, for I am aware that you have not been in the Nor'wester, the survivors of the ill-fated ship——"

"Ill-fated? Survivors?" gasped Ralph, as everything seemed to reel around him. "Has anything happened to the Nor'wester?"

"She's a total loss, probably. Got nipped in the ice beyond Behring's Straits, after securing an immense cargo of oil. Mr. Hadley started out on a scout, with part of the crew, and was in turn followed by Mr. Grabell and several others, leaving Miss Stepp and her aunt with the Captain and a few frost-bitten sailors. Hadley and Grabell, with the most of those who left the ship with them, have arrived in town this morning, after the greatest perils and fatigues. As to the ship, Hadley fears that she has been crushed, and that the women are lost, with the Captain and those with him——"

Ralph raised his head imploringly. "Please go over all the facts again," he said. "I—I don't understand."

Mr. Lane complied, giving details. When the narration was ended, Ralph passed his hand nervously across his eyes.

"I must have been ill—fearfully ill—in some farm house—or elsewhere," he faltered. "I know nothing whatever of this lapse of time—nor where I have been—nor whom I seen—nor what I have been doing!"

"You don't?" cried Mr. Lane, starting up, abruptly. "I think I see, in part, how the case stands. You must be the 'singular stranger' who has been stopping at old Bullet's!"

"Bullet? Bullet? That's the man about whom some inquiry was made of me by a native as I came into town," said Ralph.

"Indeed? Then there's no doubt about it. You are the 'mysterious idiot,' to borrow a current phrase, who has been stopping at Bullet's. As to the native in question——"

Here a shadow darkened the door of Mr. Lane's office, and the man under discussion entered—Kulu!

"Good-day, Mr. Lane," he said, producing a package of papers. "I have followed Mr. Kemplin into town," and he indicated Ralph by a nod, "to repair, so far as in me lies, the imposition and wrong of which he has been a victim. About three months ago he was waylaid by three sailors near Kalihi Bay, and received such injuries on the head that he lost all knowledge of his past, where he came from, his identity, and everything else."

"I see," cried Mr. Lane. "The light is coming at last."

Finding such appreciative hearing, Kulu went on to relate the whole conspiracy, detailing how he had found the "mysterious idiot" and taken him to Bullet; how Bullet had learned his identity from his papers, and conceived the project of marrying his daughter to him; and how this project had duly culminated, through Keeri's jealous rage and violence, in the disasters of the morning.

"But all is coming out right, it seems," was the Kanaka's conclusion. "Mr. Kemplin is himself again, thanks to his latest beating. Keeri and his hired ruffians have been pursued, and the girl has been recovered. Old Bullet has been set upon his pins by a pint of brandy, more or less. And as to my humble self, I have taken advantage of the general commotion to enter Bullet's house and recover these papers, which a friend has read to me, and I've ridden into town at a gallop to make the whole matter plain to the man most concerned—Mr. Kemplin."

A few questions from Ralph and Mr. Lane brought out the whole situation in such clear colors that they comprehended all its phases and episodes, just as they are known to the reader.

"Well, this is the strangest case I ever heard of," said Mr. Lane, beginning to recover his equanimity. "It seems——"

Kulu started violently at this moment, and uttered a strange cry—half of wonder, half of fear.

"Cursed if there isn't the old whaler now!" he muttered, staring through an open window into the street. "And his daughter is with him. They've followed me to town, having missed the canoes, and seeing my horse hitched at your post, Mr. Lane, and knowing that I am here——yes, here they come!"

CHAPTER XI.

A JOYOUS RESTORATION.

The event verified the word, the father and daughter hurrying into the office—the former pale and with his head bound up, and the latter flushed and nervous.

"So! I've found you, villain, have I?" cried Bullet, angrily, as his eyes rested upon Kulu. "What do you mean by robbing me? Traitor! spy! robber! Where are those papers?"

"Draw it mild, old man," returned Kulu, coolly. "Having procured the reading of the papers by a friend, I was struck by their importance, and instantly came to the conclusion that I ought to serve Mr. Kemplin instead of serving you. As the papers are now in his possession, and as he is present to speak for himself——"

A yell of consternation escaped the ex-sailor as his gaze encountered the young Chicagoan, who sat looking from him to Alma with a strange smile of wonder and contempt.

The latter at sight of him had dropped into a chair, unable to articulate the least expression of her surprise at encountering him so unexpectedly in Mr. Lane's office.

"Ah—Mr. Benning!" stammered Bullet.

The scornful smile of Ralph deepened.

These, then, were the conspirators who had taken advantage of his misfortune.

"The Benning business is just now under a cloud," he said, quietly.

The words struck a chill to the hearts of the father and daughter, but the latter rallied her powers for a final effort.

"What! Don't you recognize me, dear Ashley?" she demanded, rushing to Ralph's side and throwing her arms around his neck. "Don't you know your own poor Alma?"

"Yes, the trouble is I know you too well," replied Ralph, as he gently, but firmly, repelled her embraces. "The conspiracy in which you and your father have been engaged attests that you have a fair share of brains, and you will not now fail to use them. You will accordingly comprehend that your projects are all detected and exposed, and that all that is left you and Mr. Bullet is a graceful retreat."

"What! do you mean to repudiate me, to prove false to your vows, after going to the church with me to be married?" demanded Alma, in a shrill voice of wrath that would have disenchanted the most ardent wooer.

"Ask Benning," returned Ralph, with smiling scorn; "ask Benning wherever and whenever you can find him! As to myself, Miss Bullet, my name is not Benning, nor am I your suitor, nor your friend, even; and it is hardly necessary to add that under no circumstances will I have any dealings with you or with your father!"

"Monster! I——"

"Silence, my child!" interrupted the ex-whaler, clapping his hand over Alma's mouth. "Our harpoon hasn't held worth a cent this time, and our whale has escaped! We shan't fill our barrels this v'yage, but there's no occasion to rage or snivel. Not a word! Let's retreat in good order. If you want a husband, there's Keeri still at our disposal——"

"So he is," exclaimed Alma, starting up and drying her eyes, "and I'll marry him before the day's ended!"

"Bravo! that's the true spirit," commented Bullet. "If you can't strike a forty-barrel whale, why, put up with one of twenty. Not a word to any of these ruffians. A dignified silence is our best reply to them."

And with this he stalked from the office, dragging his daughter after him, neither of them looking behind them.

"That disposes of all that business," commented Ralph, as the smile of scorn faded from his face and a look of keen anxiety settled upon it. "Let us now turn to more important matters. To begin with, Kulu, it seems that you are out of Mr. Bullet's employ?"

"That's clear enough, sir."

"Is there anything to prevent you from taking service with me?"

"Nothing, sir. I shall be very glad——"

"You are in my employ, then, from this moment. Like all of your people, you are, doubtless, something of a sailor?"

"I have been at sea ten years, sir."

"In that case hurry home as soon as you can and get your affairs in readiness to sail immediately."

"I don't need to go home, sir. I can leave my horse with my brother, who works just around the corner, and be ready in five minutes to take hold of any job you may give me."

"Good," said Ralph. "Get rid of your horse and come back here."

Kulu vanished.

"And now for a few words more about the Nor'wester," resumed Ralph, turning to Mr. Lane. "You think she is lost in the ice, and the ladies with her?"

"That is rather Mr. Hadley's opinion than mine, of course," was the answer. "He judges by the weather that followed his withdrawal from the ship that her situation soon became one of great peril. He believes, in fact, that she was promptly destroyed, and that all those left in her perished."

"But he has no certainty to this effect?"

"Of course not."

"You know, I suppose, that I am betrothed to Miss Stepp?"

"Certainly—that is, the matter was so understood, and hence we did not wonder particularly at the forged statement that you were going to the Arctic Ocean with her."

"That letter was forged by Hank Ripple, I do not doubt," said Ralph, speaking more to himself than to his companions. "Without troubling you with details, Mr. Lane, I may say that I am worried greatly about Miss Stepp. I am even worried about her independently of the ice and all those considerations—afraid, in short, that she is beset by some sort of villainy, even as I have been. I shall accordingly sail at once in quest of her or of tidings of her fate."

Mr. Lane could comprehend this purpose without approving it, and he knew Ralph too well to seek to combat it.

"Of course I shall be glad to help you in every way possible," he said.

"Then help me to find a stanch little craft and a few good sailors for this voyage," said Ralph, arising. "I'll start in an hour, if possible. Ah, what's that noise? Are the Bullets returning?"

Ere another word could be uttered, Kulu came bounding into the office, a prey to the wildest excitement.

"The best of news!" he cried. "The Nor'wester has just entered port safely, with fifteen hundred barrels of oil, and here come the Captain and his daughter!"

With one bound Ralph was at the door, and in another moment his betrothed was sobbing for joy on his breast, while Capt. Stepp inclosed him in a vigorous embrace.

"Back again, Ralph, as you see!" cried the old navigator, in a voice husky with great joy. "And not only have we got Hank Ripple in irons, but the Chief of Police has arrested the three runaways who have so nearly killed you in our absence!"

"Hurrah! Glorious! Nothing could be better!" cried Mr. Lane, tossing his cap into the air. "Three cheers and a tiger for Captain Stepp and his family!"

The suggestion was duly honored by the large crowd, which had gathered around the new-comers, and nothing more was needed to tell Ralph and Maida Stepp that they had reached the end of their troubles and trials.

We need not pause upon the joyful wedding that took place the following evening at the American consulate, nor upon the happiness which has from that hour been the portion of the worthy Captain and all his family, including Maida's aunt. It is enough to say that the return home was not marred by the least drawback, and that the young couple are now among the most useful and honored residents of Chicago. Capt. Stepp and his sister make their home with them, and vie with each other in the care given several promising members of a new generation.

[THE END.]

Three Dangerous Women.

Beware of three women—the one who does not love children, the one who does not love flowers, and she who openly declares she does not like other women, says a writer in an English magazine.

There is something wanting in such, and in all probability its place is supplied by some unlovely trait.

As Shakspeare says of him who has no soul for music, such a woman is fit for treason, stratagems and spoils, and a woman intent on those is ten thousand times worse than any man could be, for, standing higher, she can fall lower.

Men may smile and jest a little over the tenderness lavished on a baby, but, after all, the prattle every womanly woman involuntarily breaks into at the sight of the tiny beings, is very sweet to masculine ears.

It was the first language they ever knew, and in spite of the jest or smile, the sweetest on wife's or sweetheart's lips.

They may laugh too at the little garden tools, which seem like playthings to their strength; but in their hearts they associate, and rightly, purity of character and life with the pursuit of gardening.

And, as for the woman who does not care for her own sex and boldly avows it, she is a coquette pure and simple, and one of the worst and lowest type, too, as a general thing.

Mind Your Own Business.

An old custom once prevailed in a remote place of giving a clock to anyone who would truthfully swear that he had minded his own business alone for a year and a day, and had not meddled with his neighbors. Many came, but few, if any, gained the prize, which was more difficult to win than the Dunmow flitch of bacon. Though they swore on the four gospels, and held out their hand in certain hope, some hitch was sure to be found somewhere; and for all their asseverations the clock remained stationary on its shelf, no one being able to prove his absolute immunity from uncalled for interference in things not in any way concerning himself. At last a young man came with a perfectly clean record, and the clock seemed as if it was at last about to change owners. Then said the custodian, "Oh! a young man was here yesterday, and made mighty sure he was going to have the clock, but he didn't." Said the young man seeking the prize, "And why didn't he get it?" "What's that to you?" snapped out the custodian, "that's not your business, and—you don't get the clock."—Home Journal.

The Original Bluebeard.

The story of "Bluebeard" was written during the reign of Louis XIV., by a Frenchman named Perrault, and is supposed to have been suggested by the deeds of Giles de Laval, better known as Marshal de Retz. He was born in 1396, and subsequently served under the Duke of Bretagne and Charles VII. with distinction, and was one of the trusted captains of Joan of Arc. In 1432 he was reputed the richest man in France, but quickly squandered his fortune. It is said that soon after that event, through the influence of an alchemist named Prelati, he pledged all but his soul to the devil in exchange for a fortune equal to the one he had spent. His career from that time became that of a demon. Children and young women were inveigled into his house and killed. It is related that the children were dangled at ropes' ends, pricked with needles and otherwise tortured until dead, and their heads were afterward used as ornaments for his mantels and bed-posts. After he had carried on that career of crime for about eight years he was arrested, confessed and burned at the stake about December 22, 1440.

Asphalt in the Indian Territory.

A recent mineral find which is about to be developed in the Chickasaw Indian Reservation, south of Guthrie, O. T., is of interest all over the West and Southwest. Immense bodies of asphaltum, rivaling those of the island of Trinidad, have been found near the Arbuckle Mountains, and a company has been formed to develop the find. The quality is the very best, and the quantity sufficient to pave the streets of every city in the West and not show any diminution of the supply. Being easy of access and easily mined, the result will be a great cheapening of this very useful article, and the people of the whole country will be greatly benefited by the find.

Coins Twenty-three Centuries Old.

Some Chinese coins are of but one-twentieth of the value of an American cent. The Celestial Kingdom has many enthusiastic coin collectors. In one notable collection there are more than 150,000 varieties of cash, the oldest of which date back as far as 2300 B. C.

A Hundred Tons of Cats' Tails.

One hundred tons of cats' tails were recently sold at once for the purpose of ornamenting ladies' wearing apparel. This means that assuming an average cat's tail to weigh two ounces, no fewer than 1,792,000 pussies had to be killed.

ENOUGH spider web to go around the world would weigh one-half pound.

M'KINLEY'S ANSWERS.

WHAT THEY WOULD HAVE BEEN IN 1890.

How He Would Have Been Compelled to Reply if Certain Interrogatories Had Been Put to Him—He Now Has a Big Job on His Hands.

Questions for McKinley.

During his speech at Akron, Ohio, on Sept. 11, Governor McKinley, in one of his flights of sarcastic eloquence, called upon his "distinguished and able" opponent, "the very author of the tariff plank of the last Democratic national platform itself, to advise the country exactly what the party now in power will do with the tariff." He wants everything "in detail and with particularity." And then he began with schedule A, and went through each schedule, asking "what will he do" with this or that article. His astonished audience will probably be surprised to learn that Mr. Neal was not rendered speechless from the stunning effects of these categorical questions. Undoubtedly Mr. Neal can defend himself, but suppose he plays "turn about" with McKinley and asks a few similar questions of the great tariff expert—the very author not merely of a tariff plank but of a whole bill, and the far-famed McKinley bill at that.

"Mr. McKinley, in the spring and summer of 1890 you were engaged in making your great bill. If I had then asked you, 'What will you do with tin plate?' what could you have told me? Only this: 'Mr. Cronemeyer is fixing up paragraph 143 to suit himself. I really can't tell you what he will do.'

"How about cutlery? What will you do with it?" "I can't tell you. Mr. W. Rockwell's wishes must be respected. You know he is a big manufacturer of pocketknives."

"Surely, Major, you can tell me what will be done with table cutlery?" "Sorry, but Mr. Charles S. Landers, who represents the makers of table cutlery, has not yet handed in his corrections and amendments. We shall undoubtedly print his memorandum word for word."

"Can you tell me what will be done with firearms?" "Not just yet—that is, unless the manufacturers want us to adopt the duties proposed when they appeared before this committee."

"Would you kindly inform me what we may expect on woolen goods?" "I would gladly do so if I could. I must refer you to Mr. Isaac N. Heidelberger, who will adjust duties in behalf of the wholesale clothing manufacturers, who will frame the two clauses prescribing the taxes on women's and children's dress goods."

"That seems strange. Certainly you can give the farmers some idea of what you intend to do with wool." "My intention will not develop until Judge Lawrence and his National Wool Growers' Association make known their demands."

"Just one more question, Major. You are of course able to say what will be done with steel rails, structural steel, and other articles in the great metal schedule?" "I'm glad you're going to let up on these annoying questions. How can I tell what conclusion Mr. James M. Swank, Mr. Henry W. Oliver, and other members of the American Iron and Steel Association will come to? Undoubtedly we will give them just what they want. You see, as Mr. Dingley says, we want to make a bill which shall be 'consistent, comprehensive, and complete, with all the different parts properly and justly related.' To make certain that all will be perfect, we have decided to let the manufacturers who are to be protected fill in their own clauses. This is entirely proper, as they have been the financial backbone of the Republican party in the past, and we hope they will be in the future. Their wishes are entitled to the greatest consideration. You see how it is. I would like to oblige you, but under the circumstances I can't answer your questions."
—Byron W. Holt.

Opera-Bouffe McKinley.

Everybody will remember with what impressive solemnity McKinley pointed out in 1892, on stump after stump, the fact that owing to the McKinley tariff our exports for the fiscal year had grown so large as to force the importation of $200,000,000 of foreign gold. Some annoying critics brought to the Governor's attention the statistics of the Treasury Department, wherein it appeared that the balance of that year's gold movement was actually on the export side. This made no difference to McKinley. He answered that if the balance of trade had not been settled in gold, it had been settled in something else, and that was the same thing, and he continued thenceforward to announce to admiring audiences, exactly as before, that we had imported $200,000,000 in gold. We have no doubt he still believes that the gold really came here, by some subtle and secret process, and we are quite as sure that he will believe, long after business has comfortably settled down to its old routine, that the wildest kind of panic is still prevailing because the McKinley tariff has been threatened. Fortunately for the national common sense, few people except McKinley himself take McKinley seriously any longer. It has, moreover, done no small service to the cause of public enlightenment that the willful blunders of the Shermans and Culloms are invariably reproduced, in the broad lines of caricature, by such opera-bouffed performers as McKinley and Clarkson. A few years since, people used to suspect that McKinley's tariff arguments might after all be sound, because their conclusions were the same as Sherman's. Nowadays things are reversed, and the fallacies of serious protectionists are turned into general laughter by McKinley's reductio ad absurdum.—New York Evening Post.

Short, Sharp Work Best.

The Ways and Means Committee would do well to abridge its tariff hearings. Most of them are merely threshing over old straw. The sooner the country knows exactly what will be the details of tariff changes the sooner will business matters become adjusted to the new conditions. To the extent of the uncertainty as to what the changes will be the tariff question tends to make people cautious; and this is natural, for the merchant does not wish to buy now a large stock of what may soon be cheaper if the tax is removed. Such a condition of affairs was inevitable. It must be experienced in order that the benefits of correcting the wrongs of McKinleyism may be secured.

But Congress should do all it can to shorten the period of preparation of a new tariff bill and to let the people know as soon as practicable just what they can expect. The necessities of a depleted treasury are such that a layman cannot divine what Congress may find it necessary to change and what to leave as it is. All he wishes is to know upon what basis to buy and sell. Until he does know, of course, he will not make extensive transactions. That is the extent of the effect of tariff agitation upon general business. It is not that tariff reform is feared, for our people are not so fickle as to turn about in a few short months and become frightened at just what they, such little while ago, voted overwhelmingly in favor of.—Rome Sentinel.

The Protection Bird in Distress.

Are we, the people of this United States, all fools or children without reasoning faculties? Evidently the protectionists think we are, or they would not tell us such fairy stories about the tariff. Just listen to McKinley while he is talking tariff tax theory to the Ohio children: "They say a protective tariff is a tax and a burden upon the people. It is a tax upon the foreign producer, and his welfare is not our first concern." And the youngsters clap their hands and shout. They are out for a holiday and want him to tell them more about his wonderful tariff and about Santa Claus and "Jack the Giant Killer."

Down in Washington some of McKinley's compatriots are working the practical or business end of protection. They talk in a more serious vein than the Governor and would feel hurt if the members of the Ways and Means Committee should clap their hands and laugh after each lamentation. Do these manufacturers talk in Washington as McKinley does in Ohio about this tariff tax business? Listen! Mr. Leopold Moritz, of Philadelphia, is speaking earnestly in behalf of the retention of the duty on buttons made of bone, horn, etc. He says that in 1889 before the duty was raised foreign manufacturers and importers brought in foreign goods and cut prices so that the American industry was on the verge of ruin and extinction. Would he talk this way if the foreigner was paying the tax promptly? Then comes Mr. William Wilkins, of Baltimore, a manufacturer of curled hair and bristles. He says any further reduction of the duty on curled hair and bristles would drive his business to the wall. But what is the difference if the foreigner is punctually paying the tax? Mr. R. W. Lesley, of the American Cement Company, now rises and pleads against any reduction of the duty of 8 cents per pound on imported cement. He is chock-full of statistics—as are nearly all of the manufacturers—to prove that day wages are higher here than in Germany—just as if the committee were ready to quarrel with him on this point. He is wasting his time and breath, according to McKinley, who ought to know. The price of imported cement must be just the same under either a low or a high duty, because the duty always comes out of the foreigner. Here comes Joseph Wharton, Vice President of the American Iron and Steel Association, and a whole flock of well-fed iron and steel manufacturers of Pennsylvania, Illinois, Alabama, and Tennessee. Nearly all are millionaires and very important personages. Time is precious with them—worth anywhere from $50 to $500 a day apiece. They are sacrificing it, however, in behalf of their dearly beloved workingmen, and the committee looks grave while each one tells how anxious he is to pay high wages to his employes, and how sorry he will be to reduce wages or close up his mills, as he will be compelled to do if the duty be reduced.

Why is the wherefore of this, Gov. McKinley? Are the foreign manufacturers not philanthropic enough to pay all charges against them, if levied in your name? We know it must be a great strain on their generosity to have to pay $115 duty when they sell us $100 worth of window glass; or $146 for every $100 worth of pearl buttons they sell us; or $162 when they sell us only $100 worth of worsted cloth, worth less than 30 cents per pound. But we did not think they would betray your confidence. If they have not done so, your manufacturing friends are grossly misrepresenting you at Washington. Or is it only a misunderstanding between the theoretical, or Ohio wing, and the business, or Washington wing, of the great protection bird? Its wings are not flopping together. Is the bird in distress?

Republican Brigandage.

There is one Republican newspaper that is sufficiently besotted with partisanship to urge the Senators of its party to make the preservation of the McKinley tariff and the Federal elections law "the price" of siding in the repeal of the Sherman act. Putting aside the morality of this form of blackmail for ransom, the suggestion is that the country, in order to get relief from one bad Republican law which it has condemned, shall be compelled to endure two other bad Republican laws which the voters have also condemned. Fortunately this sort of brigandage does not commend itself to men having the responsibilities of public office upon them.—New York World.

William's Big Job.

The Hon. William McKinley opened his canvass for re-election as Governor of Ohio in an elaborate set speech, mainly devoted to the herculean task of showing that the financial depression through which the country is passing is not due to the monetary legislation of the Republican party, but to a fear of the repeal of the McKinley bill. In this opinion Mr. McKinley stands opposed to all the Boards of Trade and commercial bodies in the United States, except, possibly, that of Denver, and to the practically unanimous conviction of the whole world of finance. Possibly he is right and all the rest wrong, but he has a hard task before him if he expects to convince them of their error.—New Age.

Sugar, Corn and Cabbage Bounties.

Nearly $17,000,000 has been paid in bounties to sugar-growers under the outrageous McKinley law up to Sept. 1. This is direct robbery of the people, as the bounties collected by tariff-protected manufacturers are indirect robbery. There is absolutely no more right or justice in taxing the people to pay bounties to the growers of sugar than there would be in paying bounties to the growers of potatoes, corn or cabbages. This is one big leak in the revenues which the Democrats will stop as soon as they can get at it.

Three Stages.

The protected darlings of the Republican party stand hats in hand begging alms of the Democratic Ways and Means Committtee of Congress. Give us just a year or two longer, begs one, as if the warning that protection must go had not been fairly and clearly and repeatedly given by the people more than a year or two ago. Whether as a squalling infant industry, an insolent, full-grown monopoly or a senile beggar for yet a little longer time to plunder, the protected industry displays a greed that defies satisfaction.—New Age.

Here You Have It.

And shut the duffer out.

THOSE monopolists who import cheap foreign labor are again becoming very anxious lest a reduction of tariff duties should prove injurious to "American industry."

M. E. Special Services.

At the First M. E. Church there will be held a series of religious services, beginning Sunday, October 15. These meetings will be under the care of the pastor and will continue for some days. Arrangements have been perfected for the presence of Rev. Nathan T. Frame and wife, who will assist the pastor. They are successful evangelists and are worthy the respect and profound attention of all the people of Auburn. The appearances all indicate that we will soon witness in our place a great religious awakening. When we consider the large number of children and young people in our town who need at once the guides and guards of a religious life, and the large number of mature people indifferent to the demands of their souls, we will hail with joy the coming tide of salvation.

THE AUBURN COURIER
OFFICIAL PAPER OF DEKALB COUNTY.
JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.
Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.
THURSDAY.......OCTOBER 12, 1893.

LATEST report shows a paid attendance at Chicago, Monday, as 716,823, and this with 74,380 passes, makes the total 754,203.

EWING heirs of Ft. Wayne have lost their suit for the recovery of land at Superior, Wisconsin, valued at half a million.

FAYETTE, Ohio, had a bad fire last Saturday. The opera house and other property amounting to $50,000 went up in smoke.

STORM on the Gulf below New Orleans last week proves worse than at first reported. The waves swept over the low islands carrying off houses and people. Over 2,000 lives lost as reported now.

NOW LET congress stop talking and go to work and repeal the Sherman act and give us in its place a few millions of actually coined silver dollars each month on a plan by which it will be kept at a parity with gold.

THE Vigilant won the international yacht race on Saturday over the English yacht Valkyrie. This was for the "America Cup" which that yacht won from the English in 1851. Eight times since then we have accepted challenges to sail for this famous cup, twice from Canada and six times from England, and have won in all. On Monday they had the second race, and again our vessel won.

REPUBLICAN papers feel bad, oh, so bad, because Cleveland's new minister to Italy, VanAlen, is accused of buying the office for a campaign contribution of $10,000. They never said a word about Wanamaker, whose only known recommendation to Harrison's cabinet was his raising $400,000 campaign fund. It turns out, however, that VanAlen made an ordinary donation to the campaign, and there was no bargain about an office to pay for it.

INDIANAPOLIS city election went republican Tuesday, by about 2,000. Denny was beaten by Sullivan two years ago, because he would not clean out the saloons and gambling dens, and now he beats Sullivan because the latter would not clean them out. The truth is neither one would if he could, and people are foolish to believe they will. People in large cities often vote without reason. Sullivan, in all other things, gave the city a much better government than Denny did, or will, and the people there will live to regret that they defeated him.

SENATOR STEWART, of Nevada, in a speech in the senate last week made an unwarranted attack on President Cleveland. He says the president is trying to force congress to do as he wishes, in other words, that he has insulted congress by trying to boss it. This cry has been accepted as truth by unthinking men in various places But there is nothing in it. Cleveland has done what every president has: he has called the attention of congress to measures that he thinks should receive their attention. That is all there is to the matter, and this is no more than has been done often before.

IF we had fewer wild-eyed howlers against our laws and our banks and other institutions, there would be more confidence among the people. The late run on the banks had its origin largely in the wild teachings of newspapers and speakers who are making their living off other people by keeping up a cry that something bad is going to happen. If about a hundred of these false teachers would go to work, and do something respectful, and would try to create confidence as industriously as they have worked to destroy it, the panic as to banks would soon be over. In fact it would never have occurred. As we have often said, there is the usual amount of money in the country, but these howlers have made the people believe that the country is bankrupt and so set them to withdrawing their deposits and stopped the banks from making further loans. But now that business at the banks is likely to begin again, these demagogues are on the rampage afresh and doing all they can to keep up the panic. It is the way they make their easy living.

Seven Reasons Why.

Seven reasons why you should buy your carpet at Ft. Wayne, of the Foster Furniture and Carpet Co, are:

Every piece of carpet they show you is fresh and new. They deal only in such makes of carpets as have the highest reputation for excellence in colors and durability. Their assortment is the largest and styles the prettiest. Their prices are guaranteed to be 20 per cent less than those charged elsewhere. they have but one price, and never charge you a single penny more profit than an honestly conducted business makes positively necessary. They allow no misrepresentation by their salesmen, and every article sold is guaranteed. They will pack and ship good to your town, provided your bill amounts to $10 and upwards. Are not these reasons sufficient? Jump aboard the cars, make a pleasant trip to Ft. Wayne, buy your furniture and carpets where you can have an immense assortment of goods to select from, and save fully 25 per cent on your purchases.

Editor Fretz, of the Syracuse Register, was here last Wednesday. He has purchased the interest of his partner, Mr. Howard, and is now in sole charge of the Register. We hope to see him and the paper both flourish like the green bay tree.

CHEAP B. & O. EXCURSIONS.

To World's Fair, Oct. 10, 14, 17, 21, 24.

On the above dates the B. & O. Ry. will sell excursion tickets to Chicago, Illinois, at the rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets will be good returning on all trains ten days from date of sale.

Passengers will be carried direct to the World's Fair Grounds if desired.

For information in regard to time of trains and rates call on or address any B. & O. ticket agent, or L. A. Allen, Ass't Gen. Passenger Agent, Chicago.

The B. & O. to the Fair.

The B. & O. gives each passenger a transfer ticket when the train reaches Rock Island Junction in South Chicago. This ticket is good on their suburban train that runs from that point to the World's Fair Hotel, just south of the grounds, and from there one can easily walk in. Or, if the passenger stays on this suburban train, it will carry him right into the grounds in the "Terminal Station" without walking at all. Here he can buy his tickets into the grounds, and there he is. We make this statement again, as so many passengers do not seem to understand it, and the arrangement the road has made is a great accommodation to them as well as a saving, and makes the road a great deal of extra work for no extra pay.

Cut out and keep the B. & O. and other railway notices we have, so as to know what days you can get half rates to Chicago. Sometimes a man carelessly allows the hours to slip by and then goes after midnight to buy a half fare ticket, when the agent is obliged to refuse, because the day named has gone by. We know of several good men who could have saved $3.00 by cutting out and keeping these COURIER notices.

Off for the Fair,

About fifty of our prominent people are in Chicago, or have been in the last week. Among the number are Al. Bishop and wife, Mr. Bailey, Mr. Carnahan, Mrs. Mary McEnterfer, Mrs. Pommert, Mrs. Dr. Sebring, Miss Mattie Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. Imhoff, Mrs. Penfield, Mrs. John Feagler and son, Lester, Mrs. Wm. Tefft and two daughters, John Treesh and son, Alva, Ed. Baker and wife, Jessie and Etta Pricket, and many others we could not obtain. The most of these stopped with Mr. Harrison.

Jake and Dan Hook and their families, from butler, and Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Coder, of Cleveland are also among those who stopped at Mr. Harrison's. He can accommodate others the last of this week.

Waterloo Fair.

There is a full and very fine display in all departments—in some the best ever seen there. The great line of bran new stalls and stables are all full of stock, about three times as many as last year. Such numbers of horses, cattle, sheep, etc., were never seen there before. There are also an unusual number of horses in the speed department, and there will be hot races. The ground is full of stands, shows etc., and at this writing, Wednesday, it looks as if the weather would be fine and the attendance great.

A Dollar a Bushel for Wheat.

Ligonier Banner.

Cephas Bowsher, one of our wide awake and enterprising farmers, has been experimenting in the feeding of hogs with wheat. He took five young hogs, averaging 170 pounds each, and fed them exclusively on wheat for 22 days, feeding twenty bushels when they were delivered in the Ligonier market. When weighed, they showed a net weight of 250 pounds, each showing a gain of 80 pounds. The price received was 5¼ cents, which proves that Mr. Bowsher got $1.05 per bushel for his wheat.

See our notice of the sale of W. H. McQuiston's household goods. His wife's health is so poor they are obliged to give up housekeeping. Hence this sale. There will be desirable bargains.

John A. Campbell, the Butler insurance agent, was in town Friday and made the COURIER his usual friendly call. He and the editor of this paper were fellow "school keeps" in the days gone by, and there is always a friendship among the old set.

Rev. J. D. Brosy, pastor of the Lutheran church, was presented with a handsome office chair, in memory of his 26th birthday, by his esteemed parishioners, last Saturday evening. The givers may rest assured that the gift is highly appreciated by the receiver.

The show at Waterloo Saturday was not very well attended, though it was said to be a good one. It made the best parade ever seen in the town. It ended its season there and went to Peru where it stays over winter. It is the well known and popular Wallace show that stays winters in that city, though it has had many additions and improvements since it was here some years ago.

Editor Campbell and wife are practicing the old cradle song of,

"Hychee, pychee,
Puddin' an' pie,
Kiss a little girl
An' make 'er cry."

They began this exhilarating exercise last Tuesday and have not got tired of it yet. We own they have got even with the COURIER for once, each now having a girl "by their ownselves." We offer congratulations.

S. C. Miser, a brother of Coroner Miser, is back here on a visit. He has been a resident of Independence, Kansas for about eight years, where he is engaged in selling agricultural implements, and is evidently doing well. He likes that country, though he admits it has its draw backs. He has also seen some of their rough border ways, and was present at the killing of the Dalton boys at Coffeyville, and has a good photo of the four toughs after they were laid out. He will remain here a week or two yet.

O. E. Clay was married last Thursday evening, to Miss Della Olinger, daughter of Cyrus Olinger, of Mt. Ida, Kansas, and granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Bowers, with whom she has lived for many years. A sister of the bride, Miss Cora Olinger, came back to attend the wedding, but a delay in trains brought her here too late. The ceremony was by Rev. J. D. Brosy, of the Lutheran church, the marriage being at the Bowers residence. We unite with their many friends in wishing them a happy future.

R. W. Cobb has a later novelty than any of the interesting ones he has heretofore handled. It is the "Columbus Clock," not the intricate machine that was exhibited at fairs a few years ago. That was called the "Columbus Clock" because made by a man at Columbus, Ohio. But this one gets its name from being an exact copy of the clock used by Columbus 400 years ago. It is an ancient piece of machinery, and one must see it to understand it. It is on exhibition at Dave Hodge's jewelery s'ore, and is quite a curiosity.

Sam Beck, at Waterloo, has the only regular establishment for handling poultry in this county. It is a large establishment, with several departments for conducting the business. Poultry of all kinds is bought, and such as are not shipped alive are dressed in large quantities, and by skilled workmen, and so sent to eastern and other markets in the best shape and condition. Farmers and others who raise poultry, have found Beck's establishment their best market for their goods, and he has handled a vast amount of trade for several years now—a trade that is continually increasing.

Henry Maxwell and 'Squire Woodcox, of St. Joe, were here, yesterday, being called as jurors in the Revett case. But they got off, as they "had formed an opinion."

The Dispatch's Mean Course.

Again we are called on to correct a mis statement of the Dispatch, to use no harder term. Last week it made a most uncalled for attack on Marshal Baker. The editor evidently proceeds under the impression that he has the right to call any man a thief, whose transactions he does not understand, and more especially if the person suspected is a democrat. This may be low journalism, but the Dispatch has repeatedly showed itself capable of no higher view of its work. We proceed to note its charges which, it says, "calls for investigation." The first is, that Mr. Baker costs the town more than Marshal Pfefferl did. If this were so, it proves nothing for one marshal may have more work to do than another does. And besides the Dispatch did not hesitate to attack Pfefferl whenever it could think of nothing else to fill up with. But to proceed: It complains because "Baker got $48 for work on the streets with his team, and $70 for hauling 200 loads of gravel." Well, what if he did? The team is his own and is not hired to the town or to anybody else, and he could have sent his team into the country to hauling logs, and then this $48 would have been paid out to some other team, and it would have made no difference to the town, and we suppose the Dispatch would have been satisfied. When one team could not plow the hard street, as in the case of that by Mike Boland's, then Baker's team helped and was of course paid for the same as any other team would have been. The same may be said as to the "$70 for hauling 200 loads of gravel." What difference can it make who hauls the gravel? It must be paid for anyway. The marshal's team happened to haul that much, as he had a right to, for it was entirely a different matter from his work or salary as town marshal. The attack then goes on to say that "several men have been allowed bills for driving the town team." This Mr. Baker denies and says the records will bear him out. He has to furnish a driver for three months at his own expense, and no more drivers have been employed. Another charge is that "Marshal Baker has been using the town team to do private hauling for which he has been paid." The facts are, that Charlie Picker came one day and wanted two loads of sand hauled, and not being able to get any team and being in a hurry, asked to have the town team haul it, and the sand was hauled and Mr. Picker will pay the town the same price he would pay any one. Then the screed goes on to say, "We do not believe his bills amounting to $107 for hauling on the streets and for graveling Main street should have been paid in full." This is silly. If the town agreed to pay a bill, why not pay it in full? Should the town agree to pay $1.00 and later refuse to pay more than 75 cents? A man so wise should be able to tell the per cent the town ought to pay. As silly as this is the complaint that the town paid $136 to VanAuken & Rugman for graveling West Seventh street, and then putting the sum with the $107 paid Mr. Baker, compare it with the amount paid Mr. Pfefferl, making it appear that the town paid the marshal $380 more than last year. The facts are this represents extra work that was not attempted last year, and which neither the marshal nor Rugman & VanAuken were obliged to do without pay. The The Dispatch in another place tells its readers not to suppose for a minute that it opposes street improvements, and makes the ridiculous statement that the two main streets could have been graveled for $60. But even that would not have suited the Dispatch, for it could not have then taken up its favorite pastime of claiming that some democratic official was a criminal of some sort. The only thing the marshal has been careless about, is in not giving the Dispatch some printing to do. He ought to profit by the example of the town board, for the Dispatch has not said a word against the legality of those bonds since it got about three prices for printing them.

English society is opposed to Home Rule. The low-necked ladies of the drawing-room plane of existence do not like Mr. Gladstone. It is hoped that the statesman, fortified with the dignity of years, and accustomed to the hoots of the rabble, will be able to stand even this latest and severest blow.

The country has shed few tears over the turning down of Theodore Thomas from the head of the Musical Department of the World's Fair. The refusal of Thomas to play American music in this celebration of the greatest of American centennials has impressed the public that he is the wrong man for the place.

Uncle Joe Ardle is an aged African who, until the Charleston earthquake of 1886, lived in a cabin on the banks of the Savannah river. The earthquake scared him and he built a sort of nest in a big oak tree, where he lived contentedly until the recent cyclone came along and blew him out. Joseph is now figuring upon some other scheme to defeat the elements.

The late Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha had an itch for writing, and, although he didn't write at all well, publishers were anxious to print his book because of the glory in it, and because the Duke, owing to his exalted position, refused to accept any share of the receipts arising from the sale of his works. The publishers of his memoirs respected his wishes in this particular so religiously that they not only paid him nothing but made him pay the full retail price for a few copies that he wanted to present to his friends.

It is painful to note that the Canadian papers, and especially those of the Northwestern provinces, do not display any wild enthusiasm over the knighting of young C. H. Tupper by Queen Victoria the other day. A British Columbia journal speaks of the new knight as "a babbling ass," and another advises him to remain in London, as he has shown himself utterly useless in advancing Canadian interests on this side of the Atlantic. Charles Hibbert is probably too much pleased with his new spurs, however, to care much for this sort of thing.

They had a real nice osculatory time at the Austrian military maneuvers, where a lot of kings recently gathered. When the King of Saxony arrived, the Emperor of Austria hugged him like a grizzly bear and kissed him on both cheeks. The Regent of Bavaria came next, and he got kissed too. Then came the young man from Berlin, and all the kings, princes, and grand dukes fell over one another in their eagerness to get at him. He was kissed on the ear, on the nose, and under the chin, and his brother emperor, Francis Joseph, topped off by giving him a smack like a policeman kissing a hired girl. Then they all went out and played soldier.

Hurrah for the armored cruiser New York—fastest war ship afloat! It can fight. It can run away. It steamed 21.09 knots, and that is the best time ever made by an armored cruiser. It has all the qualities for a first-class scientific row. It can stand up and give and take with any of them, and it can show as clean and pretty a pair of heels as ever bulking man-of-war fired futile shells at. That is the kind of fighting beat we want. We need shifty cruisers that can whack the enemy at Portland to-day and whack him at Pensacola to-morrow. The New York seems to fill the bill exactly. It is as light on its feet as a ballet-girl and as strong in its good right arm as we used to think Mr. Sullivan was.

The several deaths of recent date from the eating of toadstools supposed to be mushrooms belong to a class of incidents which are too often reported. It is not easy for inexperienced people to discriminate between the edible mushroom and the poisonous toadstool, and when such people go out to gather wild mushrooms they must be very sure that they get the esculent fungus before them consume it. There is no general rule for distinguishing the wholesome from the harmful. The best way is that of the expert who is able to observe the peculiarities of structure, color, smell, and taste. The cultivated mushrooms sold in the market or by responsible dealers may, of course, be trusted, and people need not be afraid to eat them because they look something like toadstools.

Now the surgeons have cut out a man's spleen, and yet he lives and has red blood, and will, it is said, recover. No one has ever known absolutely what is the office of the spleen. The organ is not a vital one, but is often much diseased and very painful. The operation to remove it is technically called splenectomy. Many years ago a writer in Chambers' Miscellany contended that the spleen was the manufactory of the white blood corpuscles. If that were so, the red corpuscles in the veins and arteries would have soon faded in vividness in the patient, Athlete Short, of Yonkers. Are the spleen and the vermiform appendix, which are declared to be useless, left as hints of the evolutionary process? Was man differently constituted when they were useful to him, instead of being as now unnecessary? Who can say?

Lurid literature of the class that deals with gangs of counterfeiters, lynx-eyed detectives, secret panels, and hairbreadth escapes has long been dear to the heart of the American small boy, and it was supposed that he alone took pleasure in its perusal. The case of Henry S. Cochran, the Philadelphia mint employe who stole a quantity of bullion, shows, however, that even old men fall under the spell of the dime novel. A search of Cochran's house by the police showed that he had adopted all the methods laid down in "Mysterious Mike, the Montana Detective," and similar works of fiction. A tunnel of considerable length, leading from the cellar to a neighboring street, concealed cupboards, secret passages, smelting furnaces, heaps of useless finery of one sort or another—all these showed the influence of the "nickel library," and a collection of juvenile books and stories of crime and adventure betrayed the old man's source of inspiration. He was simply driven crazy by reading trashy novels, and his madness took the form of fitting up a robber's cave rather than starting West to fight Indians, as he would have done had he been half a century younger.

Three years ago a young girl on Long Island, of respectable and well-to-do parents, married a good, steady, decent man by the name of Hallock and set up housekeeping at Moriches, L. I., where her husband had a prosperous business. In a year she had a child, a girl. Some months ago Mrs. Hallock began visiting New York. Her home had become a little monotonous and she wanted a change. She was a regular attendant at Saturday matinees. At one of these, at the Academy of Music, she was shown to her seat by an usher named Popper. He was an ideal usher, dapper, with his hair plastered over his eyes, a waxed mustache and a diamond in his shirt. Mrs. Hallock was, in the parlance of the day, "mashed." An intimacy commenced which resulted, a few days ago, in Mrs. Hallock abandoning her husband and her child, taking with her some $2,000 of money which she had and committed bigamy by marrying Popper. The end was not long in coming. Popper took her to Chicago where, after securing her money and jewels, he coolly abandoned her. In her despair the woman shot herself, leaving a card addressed to her faithless lover, on which she had written, "The wages of sin is death." With variations as to the close of the tragedy this story is enacted a hundred times every day in this country. Sometimes it is the wife, sometimes the husband who, in the search for the unsatisfied something, starts on a road that ends in moral as well as physical death. It is hard for men to conceive how such a man as Popper, who it appears is an utterly worthless scoundrel, with at least one wife already, could exercise such a fascination over a respectable and sensible woman, whose husband was young, well-favored and, of the most amiable disposition. It is no doubt equally hard for women who are attractive personally and doing their full duty in their houses, to understand how their husbands can be fascinated by women who are vulgar, painted, and often not even well-formed or well-featured. But it is so. Such is life, and, whatever the philosophy, the moral is that "the wages of sin is death."

Wanted to Know How.

Mr. Oswald has the reputation of being the "hardest fighter" at the London bar, says Truth. He was once arguing a case in the court of appeals at great length. Already the court had intimated pretty clearly that it had heard enough; but Mr. Oswald had treated these intimations in his usual manner, and went on raising point after point.

"Really," at last one of the lord justices remonstrated—"really, Mr. Oswald, if you intended to rely on these points, you should have raised them in the court below."

"So I did, my lord," replied Mr. Oswald, "but their lordships stopped me."

"They stopped you, did they?" inquired Lord Escher, eagerly; "how did they do it?"

Agents of Death.

Breech-loading rifles were invented in 1811, but did not come into general use for many years. It is estimated that over 12,000,000 are now in actual service in the European armies, while 3,000,000 are reserved in the arsenals for emergencies.

Harrowing Reports of the Disaster Received from Survivors, Who Are Forced to Bury the Dead in Trenches Without Ceremony—Dreadful Force of the Wind and Waves that Took Everything Opposing Them—Whole Families of Unfortunates Meet Death in Each Other's Arms.

A Chapter of Horrors.

Over 2,000 killed and nearly $5,000,000 of property annihilated is the record of the great Gulf storm in Louisiana. There has never been anything approximating it since the country was settled. More than half the population in the region over which the hurricane swept is dead. Everything is wrecked and not a house in ten is left standing, while the surviving inhabitants are left in the most destitute condition without food or even clothing, for most of them were in their beds when their houses were crushed by the wind or the waves. There have been several similar disasters on the coast. At Lost Island, where 286 people lost their lives, and at Johnston's Bayou the lost numbered 220 six years ago, but Monday's disaster far surpassed these in horror. The weak and ill were all killed, and in the settlements where the storm was worst not a child survived and very few women. The survivors are the young men in the vigor of manhood. Not one of them but has a terrible story to tell; not one but is badly bruised and injured. They escaped mainly on rafts or logs, floating for twenty to ninety hours in the water, with the wind at 115 miles an hour.

The deaths, so far as reported, and which are confirmed, aggregate more than 2,000, as follows:

Mississippi's Swollen Torrent.

The Mississippi rose nine feet, being forced up by the wind, while the water from the Gulf was driven over the land to a depth of from two to five feet. In this water the people stood for hours, their houses being destroyed, until boats or skiffs could come to their relief. For a distance of forty miles below Pointe a la Hache, on both sides of the Mississippi, there is not a single house which does not show signs of the storm, and most of them are wholly destroyed or rendered uninhabitable. The crops are a complete loss. The country is devoted mainly to the raising of rice, oranges, and early vegetables. The rice had been harvested and packed in stacks ready to be milled. These were swept away by the storm and the flood, and the loss is complete. The oranges are stripped from the trees and have rolled in the water, in which they have laid for two days. The garden truck is almost completely destroyed.

The damage by the storm in New Orleans will amount to $376,000, divided as follows: West End, $30,000; other lakeside resorts, $20,000; vesselmens' levee, $20,000; clubhouses and yachts, $25,000; coal barges sunk on river, $18,000; damage to shipping, $75,000; damage to fences, trees, yards, etc., $54,000; market and other buildings and railroads, $100,000; miscellaneous, $30,000.

The storm left Mobile, Ala., almost a perfect wreck. At this time the damage can only be conjectured, but it is safe to estimate it at nearly $1,000,000. Several deaths are reported. In the district across the river dwelt twenty-three families. Only one of these homes can be seen standing. In the same region it is certain that 300 or 400 head of cattle have been lost.

Terrible Fatality in the Marshes.

The damage to the Louisville and Nashville Railroad is beyond computation at this time. There are 400 trees across the track between Bay Minette and Dyas Creek, a distance of about ten miles. No trains can get any farther south than Bay Minette. A rowboat trip of the marshes made by an Associated Press reporter reveals a state of desolation and death that will almost equal that of a month ago at Savannah and the Sea Islands.

At every point touched houses were completely gone, while the upper eastern shore was swept as if by a western cyclone. From Blakely as far southeast as reports could be had the natives report only death and destruction.

Buried the Dead in Trenches.

When the water receded at Cheniere there were scores of bodies lying about and already beginning to show signs of decomposition. Under the circumstances, for the safety of the rest of the colony, it became necessary to take prompt steps to bury those who had lost their lives. There were still many people who were alive and able-bodied, and they were immediately organized for a week of duty and charity. There was no time to build coffins. If there had been, there were no tools with which to construct them, no boards that could be nailed together as receptacles for the bodies lying everywhere; so the living merely hunted up spades and commenced the task of digging ditches into which to deposit the remains.

Vast Territory Stormswept.

These towns and settlements extend along the Mississippi from Pointe a la Hache, forty-five miles below New Orleans, to the Gulf on Bayou Barataria and the oyster reefs between there and the mouth of the Mississippi, and on the islands stretching from the Mississippi to the main land at Cheniere Caminada, Bay St. Louis and Pearl River, are in Mississippi. The great majority of the peaple are whites, and not over 100 are colored. At Cheniere Caminada was a large Chinese colony engaged in preparing and exporting shrimp to China. St. Malo was settled by the Malays, all fishermen. A majority of the population in the fishing towns were creoles, Italians, Spaniards, and so-called Austrians or Dalmatians. A large proportion of them were engaged in fishing and owned boats. At the time the storm visited Cheniere Caminada, 120 fishing vessels were in the Gulf fishing. Not a word has since been heard from them or their occupants.

The news has come in slowly. The first day following the calamity it was known that the storm had been very destructive in Plaquemine Parish and the loss of life was estimated as high as thirty-five. The next day the news came of the destruction of Bayou Cook settlement and the deaths were thought to be as many as 250. Afterwards came in quick succession the news of the disasters at Cheniere Caminada, the largest fishing settlement on the Gulf coast, at Grand Isle and other points. These returns swelled the mortality estimate to between 1,800 and 2,000. The facts will probably exceed the latter figure when the full record is made up. The deaths are confined to two parishes, Plaquemine and Jefferson, and are more than one-fourth the total white population.

Awful to Behold.

When the wind died out the waves began to decrease in size and the water that had swept over the land rolled back again into the Gulf. When daylight broke the picture of desolation was awful to behold. Only here and there stood a house. Everywhere there were only brick foundations to mark where homes had been. Trees lay prostrate upon the ground. Timber was lodged in piles in indiscriminate profusion, where it had been thrust by the mighty rush of the waters. Ruined chimneys suggested stories of stricken hearths. Furniture, bedding, clothes, stoves, kitchen utensils and other household goods were scattered in promiscuous confusion wherever the vision was able to reach. Here, there and everywhere were the ghastly faces of corpses turned upward to the peaceful skies, now bright and beautiful with the mild autumn sun, and bearing no traces of the fury of the night. On many of the countenances there were still evidences of the terrible agony suffered before death came to relieve the horror. Some had lost their lives in the wreck of their homes; some had been drowned after escaping from the shells which could not shelter them from the blasts of that frightful gale; some had probably given up their lives in a vain effort to save those whom they loved and were dependent upon them for protection.

LIKE A PAINTED SHIP.

SENATORIAL TORPOR THAT IS IDYLLIC.

Expense of Maintaining the Senatorial Aggregation—What It Costs to Feed the Senate Animals and Clean Out the Senate Cages—Congressional Proceedings.

May Now Do Something.

Washington correspondence:

As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean.

The United States Senate has done nothing up to the time this letter is written, and that august body has been doing this nothing in its customary grave and owlish fashion. The Senate is a blight, a mildew, a moth to feed on the warp and woof of men's hopes; a quicksand to engulf a nation's destiny, a bacillus, a paralysis. It toils not, neither does it spin.

What a toothless humbug the Senate is. One has to chop up its meat for it. Do you know how much money the Senate has wasted while "deliberating" and chasing the stock board up and down the stairs of value? Do you know how much it costs to feed the Senate animals and clean out the Senate cages? There should be eighty-eight Senators. There are only eighty-five—three shy.

Senators Come High.

Well, it costs Uncle Sam $5,000 a year to have a Senator. In most instances he isn't worth it, but he gets it just the same. That's $440,000. Now for doorkeepers, flunkies, pages, roustabouts, deckhands, and all that long list of tax-eaters that make up the train of greatness, Uncle Sam pays just about $440,000 more—about $880,000 a year. It falls out, then, that the last two months of idleness have cost the country almost $150,000. Pretty steep price to pay for such a case of typhus fever as the Senate. But it seems to be really on the brink of something. The Senate as a disaster will take a new form.

For ten days Senators and all sorts of philosophers in statecraft have besieged Cleveland. They have been telling him that the White House has been cleaned out, that on the proposition of unconditional repeal it was a whipped and "busted" community. They told Cleveland that he had better realize this, doff his hat to fate, limber up his artillery, order his bugles to blow the retreat, and leave the field. They pointed out that Washington retreated through seven revolutionary years and now owned a white marble monument 550 sky-piercing feet high.

Senate and House.

The repeal bill was taken up in the Senate on Monday, and Senator Dubois complained of a remark by Senator Gorman criticising the resolution to postpone legislation on the tariff and finance. Senator Dubois denied that the resolution was introduced to obstruct the repeal bill. Senator Washburn announced that he had been informed by Senator Squires that he would vote for unconditional repeal. This, it is understood, is a vote gained for the repeal side. Senator Kyle then spoke against repeal. Mr. Johnson, Democrat, of Ohio, introduced a bill in the House appropriating $50,000 for the purchase of a site and an addition to the public building at Cleveland. The Federal elections repeal bill was taken up, and Mr. Dinsmore, Democrat, of Arkansas, argued in its favor.

The Vice President on Tuesday laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury giving a detailed statement of the exports of silver for the months of July and August. Mr. Dubois, of Idaho, introduced a bill enabling the States of California, Colorado, Montana, and Idaho to support State schools of mines. Mr. Morgan, of Alabama, offered an amendment to the Wilson repeal bill, declaring the act of Jan. 18, 1837, to be in force. Mr. Dolph, of Oregon, then took the floor and continued his speech, begun Monday, in support of the silver repeal bill.

In the Senate Wednesday the first open suggestion of a compromise on the repeal bill attracted the closest attention on both sides of the chamber. Senator Butler of South Carolina in an impassioned speech against the passage of the bill made compromise the salient feature. "Compromise, compromise," he said, "is the solution of the struggle here." Senator Call addressed the Senate in opposition to the bill. Without concluding his remarks, Mr. Call yielded to a motion for an executive session. Some routine business was transacted before the House resumed the election debate. An interesting debate took place on the propriety of recognizing war claims of a class of which a portion had been paid by the Confederate Government. A joint resolution was passed extending the thanks of the Congress and the people of the United States to the foreign governments who had generously and effectively participated in the Chicago Exposition.

When the Senate met Thursday morning the repeal bill was taken up. Mr. Call of Florida technically resumed the floor, and on motion of Mr. Voorhees the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. The Senate remained in executive session until 5:15 p. m. and then adjourned until Friday. No business of importance was transacted in the House. The House without transacting any morning business resumed the consideration of the Federal election repeal bill and was addressed by Mr. Northway (Rep.), of Ohio, in opposition to the measure.

In the Senate Friday Senator Blackburn submitted an amendment to the bill repealing the silver purchasing clauses of the act of 1890. It strikes out the Voorhees substitute, leaving the bill as it passed the House, and then provides for the free coinage of silver of American production. The debate on the resolution for a committee to inquire into the banking system was continued by Senator Peffer, its author. Seven hours of interrupted debate on the elections bill occupied the time of the House, the speech of Mr. Cummings of New York being the feature.

A bill has been introduced in Congress to make contractors on public buildings liable to the mechanics' lien law.

A resolution calling for information on suspended pension cases, presented by Mr. Lacey, of Iowa, has been favorably reported to the House.

Safety from a Periodic Scourge.

Do you want to be insured, dweller in a malarious region, against the periodical scourge which threatens to assail you in the form of chills and fever or some of the forms of miasma-born disease? It goes without saying that you do. Then, instead of using quinine or other alkaloid and mineral drugs, which merely relieve and are always detrimental to general health, seek aid where it is always forthcoming—from the thorough preventive and remedy, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which, in regions where malaria is far more violent and prevalent than it is on this continent, eradicates it completely from the system. Biliousness, dyspepsia, constipation, kidney and nervous complaints, neuralgia, and rheumatism are among the maladies to which the national tonic and corrective is adapted. Physicians everywhere know its genuine worth.

Wrinkle Rules.

If you would avoid wrinkles, care not only for your skin but your nerves. Control your temper, and do not try to have a too expressive and vivacious countenance. Sleep nine hours a night and an hour a day. Decline to worry. Wear smoked glasses instead of scowling fiercely at the sunlight and the water. Refuse to try to distinguish things afar off. Wash your face in warm water with pure soap once a day and rub it softly with flannel after washing. Feed it with pure, cold cream. Don't be afraid of occasional sunburn. It smooths the face wonderfully. But, above all, be emotionless.

For a Rainy Day.

To the German Emperor is ascribed a thoughtful provision for servant girls, which was put in force two years ago. Every maid servant it seems, is provided with a stamp book. In this book every week a 3-cent stamp bought from the Government is pasted by her mistress. This is, on her port, the tax which she pays the Government presumably as her license to keep a servant. The benefit accrues to the girl, for, should the girl be ill, the stamps will be redeemed by the Government for her support, otherwise the stamps are kept and become a fund for her old age.

A Great Thing.

It is a great thing for a man to get out a little and come in contact with other people and see how they live. B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., are giving many young men a chance to do this; and at the same time to put money in bank rapidly. Try them and see.

Treasure Strewn.

The route from England to India is strewn with treasure, owing to the many shipping disasters. An industrious statistician reckons that some hundreds of millions worth of gold and jewels lie at the bottom of the sea on that frequented way.

WHY is it easy to break into an old man's house? Because his locks are few and his gait is broken.

"German Syrup"

I must say a word as to the efficacy of German Syrup. I have used it in my family for Bronchitis, the result of Colds, with most excellent success. I have taken it myself for Throat Troubles, and have derived good results therefrom. I therefore recommend it to my neighbors as an excellent remedy in such cases. James T. Durette, Earlysville, Va. Beware of dealers who offer you "something just as good." Always insist on having Boschee's German Syrup.

Fireflies.

The sun was gone and the night grew dark,
And Allie and Belle were late:
But they knew the way by many a mark,
The tall black rocks, and the tree-trunks stark,
And the rustic bower by the gate.

The meadows were gay with a thousand lights
Of golden emerald-green;
Hither and thither their wavering flights
Lamped the hollows and starred the heights,
Their dusky forms unseen.

The joy and the wonder, who can tell,
Of the little loiterers there?
"A million fairies, I guess," said Belle,
"Are having a torch-dance down in the dell,
A star-dance up in the air!

"Oh, wasn't it good to meet the dark
With all these beautiful things?
Could we only have seen their shapes—but hark!
There's mamma's call; there's Cudjo's bark!"
"We are here!" sweet Allie sings.

"Oh, mother! the stars were all in the grass,
For the sky was down so low!
Through the 'Wicker-meadow' we saw them pass,
And they hung their lamps on the sassafras;
That's why we were so slow!"
—Our Little Ones.

A Coward.

"Don't be a coward, Herb!" "Mamma's man!" "Mother's pet!" were some of the remarks with which Herbert Langdon's mates assailed him. The boy's frank face flushed scarlet, as he stood for a moment irresolute, looking from one to the other.

"Come on, Herb," this from his bosom friend, Cal Clark.

"No, I am not coming, and you fellows may call me coward or anything else you may think of. I should be a coward though, if I'd let a gang like you scare me into doing something which is mean."

"Oh, goody, goody! Mamma's pet!" screamed an insulting youngster from the outside of the crowd.

"Herb Webster's a coward," shouted another just as a crowd of girls were passing. Herb's face turned redder still as he noticed his sister and Mollie Mentor—the girl he liked best—among them. "Hush!" warned one of the older boys, "or all the fat will be in the fire." That evening at tea Kate Webster suddenly asked: "Oh, Herb, what made the boys call you a coward at recess to-day?"

"Nuthen much," in school-boy vernacular. Mr. Webster turned a searching glance on the boy.

"What was it, Herbert?" he asked.

"Not much, father, only I wouldn't do as they wanted me to."

"What did they want you to do?" put in Kate. "Nuthen much," came the same evasive answer again.

"Herbert, I don't quite like this, speak out." Mr. Webster's voice was a trifle stern: "Why, not much of anything, only—only—the boys were in for a lark and wanted me to join 'em; but I thought I knew mother wouldn't like it."

"So they called you a coward, eh?"

"Yes, sir." Here Mr. Webster remembered that he had a letter in his pocket for his wife, and the former conversation was not resumed, much to Herbert's relief. Late that evening a neighbor rapped loudly at the Webster door. "Have you heard of the accident?" was the breathless query.

"No, what accident?" asked Mrs. Webster, instinctively turning her eyes over the family group to make sure all her own were safe.

"Why some of the boys went after school and broke into Mr. Deering's boat house—you know the Deerings are away—and got out a long canoe and went for a ride. Something happened, nobody knows just what; but anyway the boat capsized and two of the crowd are drowned, their bodies not found, and two others have been brought in more dead than alive. There were six in all." Herbert started up with a white face. "Cal Clark?" he asked tremulously, "Cal is one of the missing." And then the boy who had bravely faced the sneers and ridicule of his schoolmates sat down and wept bitterly wept over the loss of his "chum."

"Ain't it dreadful, Herbie? I am so glad you minded mother," whispered his sister, mingling her tears with his.

"My! but I hated to be called a 'coward' though," said the truthful fellow. "You weren't one though," said Kate. "Prof. T. says 'tis the person who yields to wrong who is the coward." "Yes, but it is hard to think of it in that light when all the fellows are guying you. I tell you a fellow feels small then, but I'll remember this circumstance as long as I live. Oh, Cal, my poor, dear Cal. We were such chums, and he really didn't like the idea of going, but hated to refuse."

"Hated to refuse." These three simple words form a rock upon which many a craft has been wrecked.—Practical Farmer.

He Liked 'Em Fat.

Eight-year-old Sam spent a winter in Florida, and was there limited to two little girls for playmates—the only children in the vicinity. Both were charming little maidens—one a plump, heavy little blonde damsel, and the other a slim, thin, witchy little dark-eyed elf. It was soon apparent to the young man's mother that he exhibited a decided partiality for Ethel, the stout little playmate; always giving her the largest piece of cake, the lion's share of the caramels and the preference in all matters of play. So the mother remarked one day, with wise desire to equalize her son's attentions: "Sam, you ought not to give Ethel more than you do Isabel; you should treat them just alike; Isabel is just as nice as Ethel."

It is easily imagined that the small boy's mother was somewhat staggered when that discriminating youth answered gravely: "I like 'em fat."—Detroit Free Press.

Identification Was Easy.

Not long ago an accident happened to little Barbara's doll Gladys, which was thereupon sent to a store where surgical attention is given to wounded dolls. When the day came for it to be discharged, cured, Barbara obtained permission to go and get it. Barbara stood on tiptoe before the counter at the store and asked if her doll was mended. "I guess so," said the young woman behind the counter, fumbling over a pile of dolls on a shelf. "But I'm afraid I can't tell which one it is in all this lot."

"Oh, you can find her easily enough," said Barbara, confidently. "Her name's Gladys."

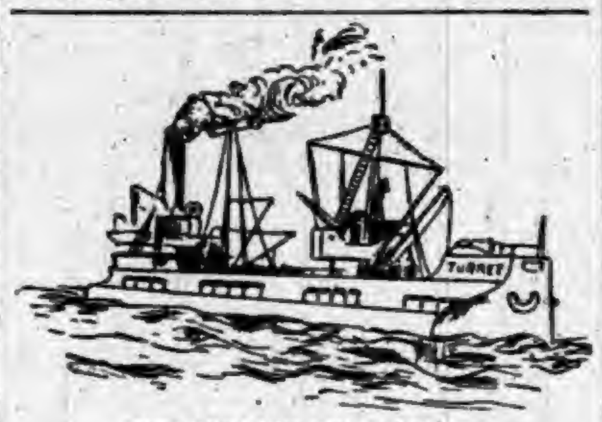
An Encouraging Beginning.

On the first day of small Dean's attendance at school he came home in a highly jubilant state of mind. "Oh, mamma!" he cried in excited and exultant tones. "What do you think; I've only been to school one day, and I've learned to say 'eyether and neyether' instead of either and neither."

FIRST FOREIGN WHALEBACK.

A Rival of Captain MacDougal's Idea Comes Into New York Harbor.

Not since Ericsson's famous monitor slipped from the ways has such a singular-looking craft appeared in these waters as the pioneer British whaleback Turret, which steamed into New York harbor the other day after a nine-days' voyage from Tucacas, Venezuela, with 3,022 tons of copper ore abroad. They don't call her a whaleback in England but a turret steamer, but she is none the less an adaptation of the American whaleback principle. She is 280 feet long by 39 feet beam and can carry 3,250 tons dead weight on an eighteen-foot draught of water. Below the water line there is little unusual about the construction, but above her freeboard tumbles home in a short curve to a turret running from stem to stern, and she looks like an ordinary ship set into the back of a monstrous turtle. The vessel was launched a year ago from the yard of Doxford & Sons, Sunderland, and is owned by Peterson, Tate & Co., of Newcastle. She has proved an easy boat in a seaway and several sister ships are in course of construction. The Turret will remain at the Erie basin this week and will then proceed to Philadelphia.



THE ENGLISH WHALEBACK.

The Black Jack Inn.

A few days ago the ancient "hostelrie" familiar to readers of Dickens as the "Black Jack," in Portsmouth street, Clare Market, closed its doors forever, as the entire block of buildings surrounding it is about to be demolished. The "Black Jack" is the house to which Sam Weller escorted his master when that gentleman was in search of Lowton, Mr. Perker's clerk, on which occasion Mr. Pickwick heard the story of the "Queer Client," related by the mysterious lawyer's clerk. The "Black Jack" has for many years been a veritable Mecca to the medical students who have successfully braved the terrors of the examination-room, for it was customary for them to adjourn to its hospitable bar and duly inscribe the names of the fortunate medicos in a register kept in the house for that purpose. Among the signatures to be seen are those of James Paget and Andrew Clarke, together with many others who have since attained celebrity.

The death of the "Black Jack" adds one more to the ghostly taverns which have abounded in the immediate vicinity. The "Spotted Dog," the "White Lion," of Jack Sheppard notoriety, the "Bull's Head," where Hogarth met his brother artists, and the "Spiller's Head," the Savage club of those days, all stood within a few yards; while the "Angel," another house, claims immortality as being the place whence in 1554 Bishop Hooper was taken to meet his death at Gloucester. At this inn, so late as 1779, a negro girl was sold. The Public Advertiser, of March 28, in that year, had the following advertisement: "To be sold, a black girl, 11 years of age. Extremely hardy. Works at her needle tolerably, and speaks English well. Inquire of Mr. Owen at the Angel Inn."—London Daily News.

Inexperienced.

There is a pretty story told of a young physician of Washington who was connected at one time with the Emergency Hospital; it has caused many a smile at his expense. He had not been long stationed at the hospital when a woman was brought in suffering from a severe scalp-wound. The blood were fast dyeing her golden curls a rusty red, and the doctor was engaged in hastily clipping her hair, when his patient exclaimed, "Oh, Doctor, don't!" Thinking he might have hurt her, he said, "Oh, never mind; that's all right!" "No, it's not," responded the lady, with some wrath, "for you are cutting my wig!"

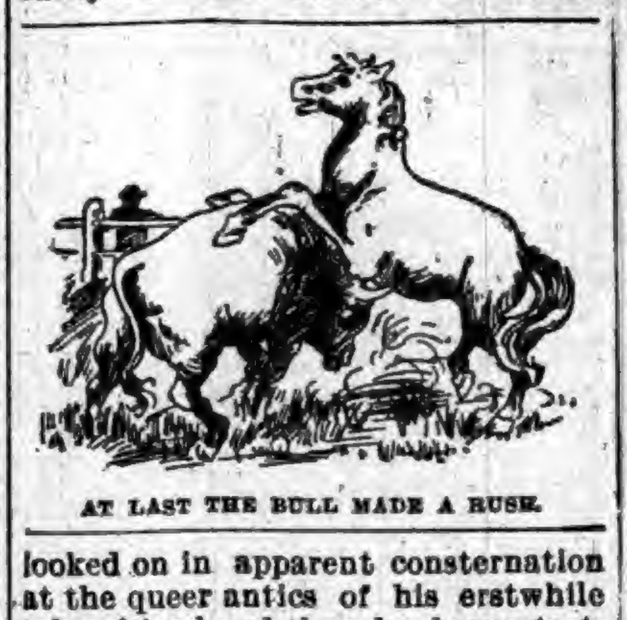
Odd Echoes.

In a cave in the Pantheon, the guide, by striking the flaps of his coat, makes a noise equal to that produced by firing a twelve-pound cannon. In the cave of Smellin, near Viborg, Finland, a stone thrown down a certain abyss makes a reverberating echo which sounds like the dying wail of some wild animal.

A TERRIFIC FIGHT.

A Bull and a Stallion Engage in a Mortal Combat.

A fine bull and a stallion belonging to John Kreutzer, living near Oakland, Ill., engaged in a terrific fight the other day. Kreutzer had always turned his bull and stallion into the same lot, and there was apparently the best of feeling between them. On the occasion in question, however, the bull suddenly began frantically cavorting around the barnyard. The stallion for a time looked on in apparent consternation at the queer antics of his erstwhile sober friend and then he began trotting around after the infuriated animal as it ran from one side of the inclosure to the other. Finally the bull, after almost exhausting itself in an effort seemingly to throw something off, suddenly turned and made for the stallion. The sudden change in tactics of the bull took the horse by surprise, and it was only after his flank had been severely gored that he realized the situation, and then began a battle that would have thrilled the heart of a Spanish bull fighter. The stallion made no attempt to kick, but struck viciously with his fore feet and bit the bull frightfully. At last the bull made a rush and killed the horse with a thrust of his horns. Then the bull staggered away a short distance and fell. Mr. Kreutzer, who had witnessed the mutual destruction of the best part of his fortune, then ventured in the lot. The bull was still living, and wrapped closely about one of its hind legs he discovered the cause of the battle, a little black snake, about two feet long, which had coiled about the animal's leg. The bull was so badly wounded that it was shot.



AT LAST THE BULL MADE A RUSH.

Hints to Housekeepers.

A baked lemon is said to be an excellent remedy for hoarseness and one that is often resorted to by singers and public speakers. The lemon is baked like an apple, and a little of the heated and thickened juice squeezed over lump sugar.

Violet and orris make the best combination for bureau and chiffonier sachets. The orris imparts a delicious odor of cleanliness, and the violet gives just the suspicion of actual fragrance that is needed.

Coffee stains should not be obstinate if treated as follows: Rub the stain before the cloth has been laundried with a mixture made by dissolving the yelk of an egg in a little lukewarm water. Wash with clean warm water and the stain will vanish with it.

Deviled almonds, according to the recipe of the Boston Cooking School, are prepared as follows: Shell and blanch the nuts, slice lengthwise, and drop into a saucepan containing a tablespoonful of hot butter. Stir the nuts constantly, and when they are a deep yellow mix a tablespoonful each of Chutney and Worcestershire, two tablespoonfuls of chopped pickle and one-quarter teaspoonful of salt. Pour over the almonds and serve cold. This is a good chafing dish relish.

An economy of waste is to throw the salt water left in the ice-cream freezer over the weeds on the garden paths and the suds of the wash tub around the roots of the young trees.

Baked ham to be good should be well boiled; when done carefully skin and cover the top with a layer of sugar; bake in a deep pan in a moderate oven, and baste it continually with cooking sherry wine. This dish in a way is unequaled.

For the men and women upon whose nervous energy there are great demands fish is an invaluable article of food. Salmon heads the list in nutritive qualities. It is richer than meat.

In cleaning a badly soiled carpet great precaution should be used. Brussels, tapestries, Wiltons or velvet carpets may be cleaned with ox-gall—a pint to a pail of water. Use an ordinary scrubbing brush, and afterwards the carpet should be vigorously rubbed with a coarse cloth. Fresh water should be applied. A small portion of the carpet done each day during the hot and sultry weather would keep it greatly refreshed in coloring, as well as sweet and clean.

A lawn stand suitable for piazza, afternoon teas or for out of doors is made of wicker work, and provided with three or four tiers, set in a tripod, to hold the plates, cups and saucers. It is very light and yet perfectly strong.

Subordinating the Home.

It is perhaps a necessary evil that goes with improved educational facilities, both in week day and Sunday schools, that the parental and home influence should be less thought of. There is nothing in the development of character that can fill the place of good parental example in the home. Yet because the school gives best opportunity for training the intellect, many parents are inclined, through indolence, to remit to hired teachers the work that of right is committed to their own charge. If we sought only to train intellectual prodigies, the common method would be all right; but intellect without affection, honor and humanity is of little worth. Pure intellect, divested of love or care for nothing but self, has been aptly described as the best definition of the evil one. It is a tendency of some at least of modern educators to train the young without regard to moral principles and with sole reference to the intellect.

Seeing this danger has led to demands that the public schools shall be made more or less religious. That, however, cannot well be under the United States Constitution, which forbids favoritism to one religious denomination or belief by the States. Public schools are everywhere supported in whole or in part by the State. They must, therefore, be not irreligious, but rather non-religious, else they will conflict with this wise constitutional provision. There are those who think that, if the elements of common morality are taught, this will solve the difficulty; that is well enough in its way, but the primal responsibility for religious training cannot be borne by the State. It must depend on the parents in their homes, and the more deeply this responsibility is felt, the better it will be for those who are growing up to be the men and women of the twentieth century.—American Cultivator.

Vicissitudes of a Diamond.

The Imperial Treasury of Austria contains the Florentine diamond. This is one of the finest diamonds of the world, and it is noted for its luster and brilliancy. It is worth $450,000 and has a romantic history connected with it. It once belonged to Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, who seems to have been rather careless in guarding his treasures.

He went to battle one day with this diamond in his pocket, and the result was that he lost it. The diamond lay on the road and a Swiss soldier picked it up. He looked upon it as a piece of glass and threw it down again, but as it fell the sun's rays caught it and the soldier, thinking it a pretty trinket, concluded to carry it along as a pocket piece. Shortly after this he showed it to a priest.

The priest admired it and gave him a coin amounting to about 50 American cents for it. The priest sold it to a jeweler for 60 cents, and a rich merchant paid the jeweler $2,500 for it. The merchant sold it to an Italian duke for $1,000 advance on his price, and this duke sold it to one of the popes, who paid $60,000 for its possession.

After a number of other similar adventures it came into the possession of a grand duke, who married the Empress Maria Theresa of Austria, and through her it came to this Imperial Treasury. It now belongs to the royal family, and has its place in what is considered one of the finest collections in the world.—Jewelers' Weekly.

"Gossip's Bridle."

"Chester presents Walton with a Bridle, To curb Woman's tongues when they bee idle." This is the inscription on an iron hooping, with a flat piece projecting inward to lie upon the tongue, still preserved in the ancient church of Walton-upon-Thames, in Surrey, England. Tradition says that this bridle was presented to the parish about two centuries ago by a person of consequence, whose name was Chester. Its presentation arose from the singular circumstance of his having lost a valuable estate through the idle stories of a neighbor. In the days when this curious instrument was in use it was sometimes called a "brank," and was put upon the head of the offender and padlocked behind; the wearer was then led through the town, and publicly proclaimed a "gossip" in loud tones, that all might hear and be warned.

A New Life Belt.

A self-expanding life belt is the latest addition to the list of life-saving apparatus. This contrivance is made of elastic material, and its interior is divided into separate sections, containing alternately acids and alkalies. After being applied there is a cord at each side of the person, which, being pulled, allows the chemicals to come together, producing a gas which gives buoyancy to the belt. A modification of this invention consists of a belt with two metallic hemispheres held together with material soluble in water, the intention being to throw this belt overboard to the rescue of a person drowning. As soon as it strikes the water the hemispheres spring apart, and the gas being rapidly generated, the belt is expanded. Another form of belt of the latter variety can be so arranged as to be fired by a rocket to ships in distress, inflating shortly after striking the water.

Couldn't Live on Such an Income.

"No," remarked the young man, with a touch of sadness in his voice. "It may be that some day happiness will be mine, but at present it is beyond me. There is a girl whom I love dearly. She would have me if I only asked her, but I dare not. I really cannot marry and live on $6,000 a year."

His two friends, to whom he spoke, looked at him in wonder. For a moment they were speechless—consternation and pity depicted on their youthful countenances. But presently speech returned to them exactly at the same time and they fairly howled in their excitement:

"You cannot marry on $6,000 a year? Why not?

"Why not?" echoed the youth with the sad voice, which grew still sadder. "Why, simply because I haven't got the $6,000."

Indian Newspapers.

The business of publishing newspapers in India is progressing very rapidly, thanks to the great interest shown by its rulers in advancing the education of the various races there. Through the means of fifteen languages five hundred and fifty-eight periodicals have been established. The first newspaper in that great country was Hicking's Gazette, issued Jan. 29, 1781. The Bengal Harkuru is now the oldest paper of the empire, the first number having been issued Jan. 10, 1795. The publications of India are probably more thoroughly circulated and read, in proportion to the number of copies issued, than those of any other country.

Elasticity of Glass.

Among solids, glass is apparently perfectly elastic. A plate of glass bent under pressure and allowed to remain under stress for twenty-five years, when released and carefully tested for any permanent set was found to have returned to exactly its original shape.
